The new 1914 type of car is sure worthy of inspection and demonstration to the intending buyer of a motor car before making a purchase. All the latest and improved methods of car construction are combined and no doubt this year's model of the Hupmobile will be one of the most popular and serviceable modern priced cars on Canadian roads.

FIVE BIG ACTS AT THE ROYAL

Five big acts and good pictures brought capacity crowds to the Royal Theatre yesterday afternoon and evening, and the management regrets that many people had to be turned away. The entire performance will be given tonight and on Saturday, so the tip is, go early and avoid the rush.

So popular was the work of Burrough & Co., that little Gladys had to respond to five curtain calls. Laura Martiere in a Big Time Act, was another big favorite, and the other acts were far above the average.

A woman by the name of Miss Orton appeared in police court today, before Magistrate Dumble, charged with fraudulently obtaining board to the extent of $10.

She admitted getting the board and excused herself by saying it was little beter than starving. The woman told the boarding house people that she was an insurance representative. She was allowed to go as Mrs. McElheney appeared on her behalf and paid the board bill of $10 and also made arrangements to get the woman a position.

Mail by Rocket.

The island of Good Hope was the first of the Friendly islands to be discovered by the Pandora in 1791. But this lord of many islets is very difficult of approach, for the seas are dangerous except to very small craft. The postmaster general has therefore invented a method of his own for the delivery of mails. He delivers them by rocket. When the hour of delivery arrives the whole population assembles on the shore to watch the great event, for it has happened that in midcareer the precious mail has burst and given its news to the waves. When the seven foot long rocket lands successfully there is a wild stampede of the natives thirsting for the latest news from Samoa or the Fiji islands.—London Opinion.

LAKEFIELD COUNCIL WANT DAM FOR POWER

Ask Government to Expropriate the Dickson Company Interest

Services of Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., Are Appreciated

lakefield council introdnc GREen

The Lakefield Council in the first session of the year, passed the following resolution:

Moved by Coun. Kennedy, seconded by Coun. Madill.—That the Lakefield Council in session assembled desire on behalf of the ratepayers to express their appreciation of the services of our federal member, J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., in securing an appropriation for a new post office for our village. We would further assure him that we desire to work in harmony with him to secure its completion on the site bought for it at as early a date as possible.

We further desire to bring to his attention the fact that it will be an absolute necessity in the near future that Lakefield shall obtain power from some source for the industries she already has, and for the operation of her electric lighting plant as well as for further development, and although it is our wish to develop such power through the agency of the Hydro-Electric Commission, we also feel assured that the natural, the cheapest and most advantageous source from whence Lakefield may obtain power would be by development of the dam in the centre of our village, on the power site now nominally held under lease by the Dickson Co., from the Dominion Government. And as we realise that a new dam must soon be built at this point for the operation and safety of the Trent Canal, we desire to obtain his cooperation to bring this matter to the attention of the Dominion Government with a view to having such government expropriate the Dickson Co.'s., interest in this site, so that power may be developed here for the benefit of the people at as early a date as possible, and that this resolution be signed by the Reeve and Clerk and forwarded to Mr. Sexsmith.

PROF. COLEMAN AT THE NORMAL

Students Hear Interesting Address on "The Tooth of Time.

Friday evening, a very interesting and instructive lecture was given by Prof. Coleman, Agricultural College, who took for his subject "The Tooth of Time.' To some this text would convey no idea of the nature of the lecture. In beginning the Professor explained that it was not a very complex subject, but simply a talk on such every-day matters as the effect of the atmosphere and gases contained therein, frost and a drop of water, etc., in wearing away rock and soil.

The lecture was illustrated by beautiful series of lantern slides representing monuments of many kinds. There were marble monuments, which marked the last resting place of some poor soul, and rock and clay monuments representing land marks of the ages. These pictures represented sections of country almost all over the world, Norway, England, Africa, United States and Canada, each coming in for a share. Among the most conspicuous was the Grand Canyon, of Colorado. Prof. Coleman says that no one can fully appreciate the tremendous power of water in wearing away rock until he has visited this wonderful canyon.

AN ATTRACTIVE BILL AT THE ROYAL

The management of the Royal theatre secured something extra good for their patrons next week. Gogman and Gilman, in a novelty comedy act, are said to have few, if any equals on the vaudeville stage. Jack Campbell will make you laugh with his comedy singing and dancing, and with five other acts, all A-1 and high class pictures, this popular theatre will present entertainment next week that has not been excelled.

PRIZES FOR SCHOLARS

Annual Entertainment at Murray Street Church a Fine Success

The annual tea and concert held by the Murray Street Baptist Church last evening in the lecture hall of the Sunday School, despite the inclemency of the weather, was one of the most sucessful and enjoyable functions held by the Sunday School for some time. Mr. Shiner, superintendent of the Sabbath School, presided and presented the prizes to the children who had attended more than fifty Sundays in the year. Fifty-seven children received prizes.

Rev. J. R. Webb in a few words, expressed great satisfaction at having Mr. Shiner as superintendent for the coming year, and spoke of the rapid headway the Sabbath School was making.

The tea which preceded the concert, prepared by the ladies of the church, was thoroughly enjoyed by the large gathering.

The musical program rendered, was as follows:

REPRESENTATION IN THE SENATE FOR PETERBORO

Citizens' Meeting is Called—Municipal Boards to Act.

A public meeting of the citizens is called for tonight, at eight o'clock, in the City Council Chamber, and it is quite likely that a resolution will be passed, asking the Dominion Government to consider the claims of the City of Peterboro for representation in the Dominion Senate.

The City Council will also meet at 7.30 o'clock tonight and a resolution will be passed. Similar action will be taken by the Board of Trade and it is probable that a deputation will be sent to Ottawa.

MORE PEOPLE LIVE IN "WET" TOWNS

Toronto, Jan. 17.—Analysis of the statistics regarding the local option situation within the province reveals a rather peculiar situation, brought about by the attitude of the large cities and towns. While three-fifths of the municipalities of Ontario are under the "dry" law, more people reside in liquor licensed districts.

There are now 502 municipalities "dry" and 233 "wet." The population in the "wet" territory is 1,432,772, while the population in the "dry" population is only 1,090,502. Even when 17 more municipalities are added to the 502 and substracted from the 233 the situation will remain the same only with a slightly reduced population in the "wet" territory.

FOR DR. GRENFELL'S WORK

Here is how a London writer describes his first introduction to Dr. Grenfell. He says: "I waited in the big, hot hall of a huge London hotel. All sorts of people fluttered in and out. I felt a vague sense of uneasiness creep over me. It was all so civilized, so over-civilized. Their artificiality made me long for a breeze, for a fight, for a long hungry day in the open. Next moment I had the sensation I craved. A man stood beside me who brought with him into that hot hall, a current of fresh invigorating air. It was bracing to look at his lean, clean figure, his firm, brown features, his clear, smiling eyes. With his curly hair and little brown moustache, he seemed like a Vicking, born by accident into this new century of ours. All the surroundings of cushioned luxury faded away like a dissolving view. In their place I saw the grey Atlantic heaving with a mighty swell. I saw leagues of snow and ice gleaming in sunlight. I heard too, the grateful murmur of a people mightily helped and heartened. For this man was Grenfell of Labrador." And it is this man's work we are asked to help these days. We too, may hear the "grateful murmur of a people mightily helped and heartened"—if we give out of our abundance to help their poverty and distress. Send your gift at once to this paper.

A WARNING TO BEWARE OF MORMONS

Rev. C. S. Applegath Tells of the Advance of Mormonism

MAY COME HERE

Are Repeating Their Success at Salt Lake City, in Alberta.

The address given last night under the auspices of the St. James' Epworth League in St. James' church, by the Rev. C. Sinclair Applegath, of Galt, on "Salt Lake City and the Mormons" was rather scantily attended, the cause no doubt being the exceedingly inclement weather. Those who braved the night were in no way disappointed, for as Rev. J. N. Clarry, the chairman of the evening, remarked, the address was the most instructive.

In the first part of his lecture Mr. Applegath reviewed the history of the Mormons from the time when they were a rather obscure sect in the eastern States till now, when they are recognised as one of the most prominent body of people in the western section of the North American continent. They had not grown to any great extent in the eastern States, when the American Government put the ban on them and they were driven to what is now known as Salt Lake City. Their growth was enormous and soon the city was made famous through them. Preaching a doctrine that would induce any lukewarm Christian, their advance did not receive a check. Their churches at present in Salt Lake City are recognized as numbering among the most beautiful edifices on this continent, and Mr. Applegath set forth this beauty in a very realistic way by the use of lantern slides.

When a man joins the Mormons he promises to spend one year preaching their doctrine, thus Salt Lake City and that section of the States was soon thoroughly converted these evangelists spread to Canada, generally to Alberta. The story of the success in Salt Lake City was repeated, and is being repeated there and this religion, one of the best agents of the devil, is rapidly reaching toward eastern Canada and ultimately to this city.

The speaker prevailed upon his listeners and all other Christians to be on the alert and unite in crushing this evil doctrine. They will no doubt, soon be here, and while they will not in all probability be under the name of the Mormons, they will be of their numbers and should be crushed.

In speaking of Salt Lake City itself, Mr. Applegath mentioned its wonderful climate. There is much salt in the air, thus causing the resident to drink a great amount of water. The rather light air necessitates long deep breaths, and these two are two great features which tend to make the resident very healthy. Salt Lake City has a reputation all over this continent as a place to recuperate lost health.

After the address Rev. Mr. Clarry spoke a few words stating as is mentioned above that the lecture was certainly very instructive. A musical program was also rendered.

DEATH OF MR. R. FAIR'S SISTER

MUNICIPAL OPEN AIR RINK ON RIVER

Chatham Will Provide Means of Recreation for Young People.

Chatham, Jan. 17.—Chatham is to have a municipal skating rink. The city council has placed in the hands of the Board of Works the preparation of a sheet of ice on the river between Fifth and Third street bridges. It is proposed to flood this to give it added strength and then guard carefully the skaters who come. If the ice should become too thin for safety then all skating on the river will be prohibited. Every precaution is being taken to prevent accidents.

TRIBUTES TO SENATOR COX

His experience and judgment were recognized by his fellow senators as of the highest order. His personal kindness and his philanthrophy were distinctive features of his career.—Senator Lougheed.

The removal of such an outstanding figure as Senator Cox, is a great loss to the community as a whole.—Mr. E. R. Wood.

MRS. H. P. WHITNEY, SOCIETY LEADER, WHOSE DESIGN FOR TITANIC MEMORIAL IS CHOSEN

MRS. HENRY PAYNE WHITNEY.

The Fine Arts Commission has accepted Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's plans for the Titanic memorial to be built in Washington commemorating the heroism of the men who sacrificed their lives that the women passengers might be saved.

The memorial will cost $48,000. Seven designs were submitted. Some of the prominent sculptors of the country were among the competitors.

Mrs. Whitney's design is a figure of a man symbolic of heroism. The figure, in white marble, stands with arms outstretched and head thrown back, giving the impression from a distance of the crucifix.

SIX CHILDREN ARE BURNED TO DEATH

Canadian Press Despatch.

Coboconk, Jan. 17.—The home of Mrs. Weatherby, of this place was burned early this morning and her six children, two boys and four girls, from two to twelve years of age, perished in the flames.

Mrs. Weatherby herself escaped by jumping through a window and was badly cut and burned, especially about the hands.

CHANGE AT GRAND HOTEL

License is Transferred to Carl W. Smuck, Late of Toronto

Dr. Morrison is Re-elected Chairman of License Commissioners

Mr. Karl Smuck, Toronto, took possession of the Grand Hotel this morning, the Board of License Commissioners having at a meeting last night, granted the application of E. O. McCrohan, for permission to transfer the license.

General improvement has been made at the Grand Hotel since Mr. McCrohan took charge and this satisfactory condition of affairs may be expected to continue under the new management.

CRAWFISH VIA THE TAP

Harvey Street Resident Doesn't Relish His Water Supply.

Fishing is good at the home of Mr. James Rose, 760 Harvey St. At least Mr. Rose can land crawfish without any trouble.

Today he showed The Review a sample of city water which came through his tap. It was dirty and slimy, and Mr. Rose asserted that the mixture included crawfish in miniature. The bottom of the glass looked like a mud puddle.

He says he has had to put up with this quality of water for some time and now he is inclined to be indignant.

It appears that there is a dead end in the water service pipes at this vicinity, and it is here the remedy must be made. Mr. Rose has taken his case before the Board of Water Commissioners, and he hopes that he will receive consideration.

FOUR LOSE THEIR LIVES

Five Others Are Injured in Apartment House Fire

Several Spectacular Rescues Were Made By Firemen

Canadian Press Despatch.

Brockton, Mass., Jan. 17.—Mrs. Mary J. Monahan, her son Bernard Monahan, Crawford Lininthal and an unidentified lodger in the Lininthal home, lost their lives to-day and five others were injured by jumping when an apartment house in the Monticello district was burned today.

There were several spectacular rescues made by firemen.

CITY WILL EXPRESS ITS DEEP REGRET

Peoples' Chimes Will Also be Rung, Monday Morning.

Asked what official action would be taken by the city, in recognition of the regret felt at the death of Senator Cox, Mayor Buller said to-day that a wreath would be sent to the late Senator's home and that the People's Chimes would be rung at 11 o'clock Monday morning, when the funeral will take place.

It had also been suggested that a large photo of the deceased be hung in the City Council Chamber and appropriately draped and also that a representative of the city attend the funeral. These two suggestions, Mayor Buller believed would be carried out.

The flag at the city buildings has been at half mast since the news of the death of Senator Cox was received.

THE COMPENSATION ACT.

Quite a large number of the local manufacturers will go to Toronto on Monday afternoon to be present when the draft of the Workingman's Compensation Act comes up for ratification. It is proposed to provide a special coach to be attached to the afternoon C.P.R. express.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS EXPAND

Accomodation in the Majority of Cases is Inadequate

PLENTY OF WORK

Would be Provided if Active Operations Were Commenced

The city churches could supply much work this coming season in the event of their carrying out their desire to provide more accommodation. As has been announced at intervals, the crying need is more room, more particularly in the Sunday Schools.

Last summer a committee appointed by George Street Methodist Church, inspected the new school at Orillia and made other investigations which would be benefit in the event of additions, which are very much needed, being made to the Sunday School.

At the annual anniversary at Mark Street Methodist Church, the matter of a new church was referred to, and a concert was held to provide funds for securing a lot, on which to build. Mark Street Church has made rapid strides in the past few years.

St. Paul's Church finds it necessary to provide more adequate accommodation and a committee has the matter in hand. The same situation is to be found at St. Andrew's Church. Also, it is not generally known that a site for a new Presbyterian Church has been provided in the extreme south of the city.

St. James' Methodist Church is rapidly outgrowing all available space, and Charlotte Street Methodist Church has the former Aaron Cax property as a site for a new edifice.

It appears to be only a question of a short time, when the congregation of St. Luke's will need a more commodious church as the growth has been highly satisfactory since Rev. F. J. Sawers became rector.

Adjutant McElheney is in need of more accommodation for the Sunday School scholars of the Salvation Army. The attendance is about 300.

NO CHANGE TODAY

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Jan. 17.—It was announced this morning that there was no change in Sir James Whitney's condition.

New York, Jan. 17.—Sir James Whitney was pleased this morning when shown a telegram from Premier Borden, reading: —"Glad to hear Sir James is making progress."

Doctor Pyne's answer to inquiries was "no real improvement."

JUDGMENT IS RESERVED

Company Took Action Against One of Its Agents.

The case was continued this morning before Judge Huycke and judgment was reserved indefinitely.

At a special meeting of the Division Court at Lakefield, the case of Ontario Wind Engine Company of Toronto, against John P. Payne, of Warsaw, was tried. Judge Huycke presided and the plaintiffs were represented by Mr. McElderry, of Peterborough, while Mr. O. A. Langley acted for the defendant. Mr. Payne was appointed agent for the company in March, 1911, and sold a number of wind-mill outfits for them, as well as pumps and fittings. The plaintiffs claimed that he owed them a balance of $59. On Mr. Payne's behalf it was charged that the Company had failed to allow him commission to which he was entitled and to give credit for some returned goods and money paid, and that the balance of accounts was in reality in his favor.

WAR TAKES HEAVY TOLL

Census Report Tells of Terrible Human Waste

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Jan. 17.—A striking illustration of the terrible human waste in war is furnished by the census just taken of the new Bulgarian territories acquired by conquest.

The male population of that portion of Macedonia allotted to Bulgaria was reduced during the hostilities from 175,000 to 42,500.

In Bulgarian Thrace only 225,000 males remain out of a total before the war of 494,000, while in the district of Mustapha Pasha, where fighting waged so long and fiercely, only 4,000 males are left out of 33,000, the total before fighting began.

HELL FIRE FOR TANGO DANCERS

New York, Jan. 17.—Mrs. Alma White, editor of Pillar of Fire, the official organ of the Penecostal Union, also known as the Holy Jumpers, accompanied by Mrs. G. W. Garretson, wife of the communal colony, at Bound Brook, N.J., was one of the voyagers on the Lusitania. Mrs. White is also the editor of The Good Citizen, published in Zarephath.

"I am more than ever convinced that hell is a very real place of fire and brimstone," said the editor. "Of all the sinners that ever won the admiration of his santanic majesty tango dancers are about the worst. The tango is only a hypocritical excuse for things too shameful to discuss. Those who dance it may expect the fullest fury of hell fire and brimstone.

"Since many of our ministers have publicly proclaimed their belief that hell exists only in the conscience, Christianity has received a fearful setback.

"The only way to win those back to the fold who have sidestepped is to preach hell and damnation to them. Hell, which is a very real place, is located in the centre of the earth, so that the spirits of the wicked may be easily dropped into it when they are buried."

Mrs. White was met by her son, a fine looking youth in the service uniform of the Holy Jumpers, who is a student in Columbia University, and by others of her followers, both men and women, in uniform

BENJAMIN AT LEAST KNEW WHERE TO GO

He Tried to Force an Entrance to the County Jail.

Ben Hobson, well known in Police Court circles, has contributed queer ones, but Ben excelled himself last evening when he tried to force an entrance into the County Jail, which, as Magistrate Dumble remarked this morning, ended in his arrest as a matter of course.

Ben was charged with being drunk. He tried to explain matters by saying he had not committed any real crime and therefore asked to be pardoned. His request was granted by the Magistrate, who expressed himself that someone should start Benjamin out on his way by the means of a couple of raw hides.

Ben left the presence of the court room in a dignified manner reproaching himself for his frequent appearances before Magistrate Dumble.

TRIAL ON TUESDAY

John Doig, charged with the theft of $15 from John Findley, and who was committed for trial at the next assizes by Magistrate Dumble a week ago, will be tried by Judge Huycke next Tuesday afternoon at 2.30.

Doig apparently tired of his wait for the assizes and asked for a speedy trial. Mr. G. N. Gordon is defending the prisoner, while the Crown is being represented by Mr. Joseph Wearing, M.A., of the firm of Wood & Wearing.

ALLEGED GRAFTERS APPEAR IN COURT

Special Correspondence

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Extraordinary interest was manifested at Bow street police court this morning when thirteen of the accused in the canteen grafting case, appeared to answer charges. The prosecuting counsel announced that bribery and corruption had been going on for ten years.

A SERIOUS CHARGE

John McClay, a local young man, faced Magistrate Dumble this morning on the serious charge of supplying drugs to a local girl, whom it was alleged he had wronged. He was defended by Mr. V. J. McElderry and remanded until Monday, bail being set at $1000.

A few weeks ago a writ for $1500 was issued against McClay by G. N. Gordon, solicitor for the plaintiff, for alleged seduction.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, JAN. 17, 1914.

A SENATOR FROM PETERBOROUGH.

MAYOR BULLER has taken a very wise and timely step in calling a meeting of the citizens to-night, to set forth the claims of Peterborough as worthy of a special representative in the Senate. That powerful and responsible body is just now undergoing a reconstruction consequent upon the asumption of power by a Conservative administration.

Mr. Borden proposes to add nine new members to the Senate, three from British Columbia and two each from the three other Western Provinces. He has given notice to this effect in the House of Commons. There are eighty-seven members of the Senate at present and the Liberals have a majority of twenty-three, but by the introduction of nine new Conservative members it is reckoned that the practical forces in both parties will be about equal, as a number of the Liberal Senators are aged and very seldom attend.

But the meeting to be held this evening is called by the Mayor on behalf of the city. Peterborough is of sufficient importance as a progressive centre to claim special consideration. The late Senator Cox was virtually a native of this city, and we have men in our midst to-day who are well worthy to occupy his vacant seat in the Upper House.

There is no doubt that whoever the meeting this evening nominates as a suitable representative of the city in the Senate, that he will have the warm support of the sitting member for Peterborough, Mr. J. H. Burnham, who will look after our interests at Ottawa in this regard.

THE BACKBONE OF INDUSTRY.

THE LATE SENATOR COX was one of a kind that is too scarce to-day. He had his detractors and some were ready to say that he was seeking his own ends in all the concerns with which he was associated. But we could do with more men with the same sort of "selfishness," they form the vertebra of our industrial and national life, they bear the burdens and responsibilities for the working man and the wealth they acquire for themselves is nothing to the wealth and prosperity they bestow upon their fellow men.

The late Senator was such a thorough business man and organizer that his passing will have practically no effect upon the management of the concerns over which he had control. His work in Peterborough in its early days remains to this day. He gave the best of his energies to the upbuilding of the town when its existence as an industrial and progressive centre was in jeopardy. It is entirely due to him that the city is the chief distributing centre of Eastern Ontario. He knew the value of the railroad as the main artery of the life-blood of a country—trade.

Senator Cox was a Liberal in politics, but he was not a politician. Although differing from him in national policy our difference does not blind us to his great qualities of head and heart. Politics after all are only a part of life, and although we may fight and kick upon occasion, our difference should not blind us to the great human qualities of our political opponents. The passing of one of Peterborough's pioneers will be regretted by all who knew the late Senator and who can appreciate the value of great public-spirited men such as he was.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

WHEN THE PUBLIC are amused and entertained by the tricks of performing dogs they often express their wonder as to how these animals can be trained to so faithfully carry out their owner's directions. But the public as a rule take no further interest in the subject and are satisfied with being entertained.

The Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, however, does not leave the matter at this point. A dog was never intended to walk upon its hind or its front legs only, and to make it do this must entail a great deal of compulsion or persuasion. In the great majority of cases, if not in all, more or less compulsion is brought to bear upon the animals, and it is known that extreme cruelty has been inflicted in order to force them to do what Nature never intended them to do. The R.S.P.C.A. has taken steps to put a stop to this method of training animals and in future "No Cruelty" licenses from this Society will be required of all animal performances. Animal trainers convicted of cruelty will be deprived of their license, have all their engagements cancelled, and be expelled from the artists' organizations. A record will be sent to all the societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals all over the world, making further appearances of the undesirable animal-trainer possible.

Mr. Thomas Hardy, the eminent novelist, has written a letter to The London Times upon the subject, in which he also condemns the general practice of caging animals and birds. In the course of his letter Mr. Hardy says that quite possibly some animals may be, and are, trained for performances without discomfort to themselves, but there is ample evidence to show that many trainers prefer short cuts to attain their ends, and that these short cuts are by the way of cruelty.

"I have been present," continues Mr. Hardy, "at dog performances at country fairs, where the wretched animals so trembled with terror when they failed to execute the feat required of them that they could scarcely stand, and remained with eyes of misery fixed upon their master, paralysed at the knowledge of what was in store for them behind the scenes, whence their shrieks could afterwards be heard through the canvas.

"And there are cruelties of a more insidious kind produced by drugs. As to the caging of birds, the assertion that a caged skylark experiences none of the misery of a caged man makes demands upon our credulity. Anyhow, a caged skylark usually dies soon, while an imprisoned man will live out his natural years. There is, or was when I was young, a practise among boys of putting a nearly fledged brood of young birds, with the nest, into a cage, and hanging the cage in the tree or bush where the nest was made. The parents come regularly to feed their young ones through the bars, and there seems no reason why they should not be successfully bred; but usually the young birds die. It used to be the tradition of schoolboys that the old birds poisoned their young at finding them imprisoned. However that may be, die they did.

'It seems marvellous," Mr. Hardy adds, "that the twentieth century, with all its rhetoric on morality, should tolerate such useless inflictions, as making animals do what is unnatural to them or drag out an unnatural life in a weird cell. I would also include the keeping of tame rabbits in hutches among the prohibited cruelties in this kind."

"As to the caging of birds and rabbits most people will not go all the way with Mr. Hardy. Cowper, the poet, whom every "friend of animals" regards as the paron saint of their societies. They are very fond of quoting his warning about stepping upon worms, where he says:
"I would not put upon my list of friends
The man who needlessly sets foot upon a worm."

Yet Cowper kept a tame hare and, if we are not mistaken, a canary also. We know that he kept gold-fish in a glass bowl and if he had not done so we would never have had that proverb so well illustrated—"all that glitters is not gold."

As to needlessly stepping upon worms, if one becomes very delicate upon this point an ordinary morning or evening walk out in the country would be a positive "task" involving so much circumspection and gentle treading as to detract one's attention from the beauties of the landscape or the glory of the heavens. If Cowper had been a Canadian he would probably have modified his worm proverb, or turned his attention to frogs. To walk abroad on any warm summer evening with the kindest feelings toward the lower animal kingdom is to rush in where the angels and sensitive poets fear to tread.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE COLD SNAP is said to have increased the death rate in London, England, by fifty per cent. The temperature is hovering at freezing point and but the bitter northeast wind with the snow is very severe. We have it colder in Canada but they have those east winds in the old land which do not go around you—but through you.

CANADA WILL SOON have to create a tariff against American pick-pockets. Scores of these light-fingered gentlemen, confidence men and other fakers are being watched by members of "the strong arm squad" which consists of forty policemen in plain clothes who intend to drive them out of New York. It is feared that these undesirables might take refuge on this side of the line.

"FULL MANY A GEM of purest ray serene, the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear," sang the poet Gray, here is a modern illustration of that truth: A Vienna despatch says a storm at Cracow uprooted an ancient elm and revealed the hiding place of the crown which had been worn by the kings of Poland from the fourteenth century, and which has been missing since the middle of the eighteenth century. All the gems with which the crown was studded were found, although some had fallen out of their places.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Canada's Disgrace.

Toronto News.

Admiral Mahan has declared that Great Britain cannot afford to rest on her oars. It is emphatically his opinion that there must be no check in naval construction on the part of the Motherland if the Empire is to retain its position in the world. The burden borne by the British taxpayer in order to assure the safety of the King's dominions is enormous and it will not readily grow less. All parts of the Empire except Canada realise this and have taken steps accordingly. This country would have won its part but for an irresponsible Senate which over-rode the popular chamber at the request of a group of defeated and exasperated politicians.

A Life Lesson.

There! little girl; don't cry!
They have broken your doll, I know;
And your tea-set blue,
And your play-house, too,
And things of the long ago;
But childish troubles will soon pass by,
There! little girl; don't cry!

There! little girl; don't cry!
They have broken your slate, I know;
And the glad wild ways
Of your school-girl days
Are things of long ago;
But life and love will soon come by,
There! little girl; don't cry!

There! little girl; don't cry!
They have broken your heart I know;
And the rainbow gleams
Of your youthful dreams
Are things of the long ago;
But heaven holds all for which you sigh,
There! little girl; don't cry!

BLEEDING MEXICO

By Walt Mason

In Mexico, in other days, fair maidens from their windows smiled, while lovers sang their buoyant lays, describing passions deep and wild. But that was in the dear old times before reformers took the helm, and filled with sorrows, tears and crimes, that once serene and happy realm. In Mexico, some years ago, the mother rocked her child to sleep, and prayed, in accents sweet and low, that holy saints the child might keep. But that was when the Tyrant held this country free from strife and storm, before the patriots rebelled, and waved the banner of Reform. But now the land is stark and red where once the peasant turned the sods; the mother weeps above her dead, and shakes her fist at saints and gods. In Mexico the children played through balmy evenings, on the green; and little lad and little maid no ghost of trouble e'er had seen. But now their hearts are chilled with fear, their souls are shrunken with their pain; for death is ever stalking near and dead men lie in every lane. And Mexico, where grief had birth when once old things were overthrown, should teach the nations of the earth to let the "Well Enough" alone.

OUR WILD FOWL

The following is a reference to the destruction of our "Game and Wild Life of Canada" which is now receiving the attention of the sportsmen and gun clubs throughout the Province.

Windsor Record:—Over two million people in Ontario are waiting to see what will be done at the coming session of the Legislature to save the fish and game supply. Ninety per cent. of the wild ducks killed during 1913 were purveyed by the wealthy patrons. The plain citizen who enjoys the marsh shores, where the birds are available, gets the fresh air, but no ducks. The ruthless market hunter feeds the wild ducks wheat and barley, goes out in his launch, rounds up the ducks and slaughters them with six and ten-shot pump guns. Is that what we call "sport?" There were 25,000 wild ducks killed by market hunters at Long Point in 1913. The slaughter at Port Royal for last year was 63,000. There were 17,500 wild ducks killed by market hunters at Mitchell Bay during the year. The number killed off at Rondeau was 19,000.

NEW UNION FORMED.

British Riflemen Resent Proposed Alterations in Bisley Rules.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—A new Rifle Union was formed last night as a sequel to the important alterations recommended by the War Office in the conditions of shooting for the King's Prize and other competitions at Bisley. The War Office suggests a time limit of 20 seconds in deliberate firing at all distances up to 600 yards, and the introduction of rapid-firing and snapshooting in King's Prize shooting. This, among other proposed changes, and the agitation for the abolition of the bullseye, has caused some unrest among the rifle clubs, many of whom fear that the changes would kill the interest in rifle shooting. The council of the National Rifle Association have not yet expressed any opinion, but members of the association have taken a part in the founding of the new union.

How He Worked It.

Her hat obscured his view at the theater, and in kindly voice he leaned forward and asked if it would be possible for her to remove it.

A stiffening of the head was her only answer. After a few moments he repeated his request. Then she turned on him.

"There is no demand for my doin' so," she said.

"No demand?" he echoed.

Then he rolled his overcoat and placed it on his seat, sat on it and, getting his hat from under the seat, placed it on his head.

In a moment there was a cry of "Take that hat off!"

And with a swift movement the lady unfastened her hatpins and removed her hat. So did the man.—Exchange.

Commission Halts New Rates.

CONCORD, N.H., Jan. 17.—An order suspending until August 1 the revised express rates, recently filed by the American, National and Canadian Express companies, has been issued by the public service commission. The rates were to have been put into effect on express shipments within the state on Feb. 1. The proposed schedule showed increases in many cases for short distance shipments. The commission will investigate the new rates before approving them and is empowered to forbid them.

Must Starve Him Out.

SUMMERDALE, N.Y., Jan. 17.—A ruse to draw Edward Beardsley out of the barricaded farm house in which he has successfully stood off Sheriff Gust Anderson, of Chautauqua County and his deputies since shooting Poor Master Putnam Tuesday evening, failed early yesterday, and the sheriff announced that he would go back to the starving-out process.

Snowfall In France.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—Southern France was covered last night with snow from one to three feet in depth. The snowfall ceased at midnight and was foloiwed by a wave of intense cold, which at Chalon-Sur-Saone and in the surrounding districts was recorded as five degrees above zero Fahrenheit, while in Paris the thermometer registered 21 degrees Fahrenheit.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

SATURDAY, JANUARY SEVENTEENTH

J. P. Downey, who is now superintendent of the Orillia Asylum but formerly a well known Canadian newspaperman, is forty-nine years old today. He has always been celebrated as a great practical joker. Perhaps the best coup he ever brought off was when he was editing the Brandon Times during the Manitoba provincial election in which Premier Greenway was defeated. The Conservative slogan in that election was "Greenway's a Goner" and Mr. Downey prepared a clever acrostic poem in which these words were concealed. This he contrived to have sent to the Brandon Sun, which published it quite innocently on its front page. Next night the Times re-printed it from the Sun with the letters of the acrostic in bold type, much to the confusion of the Liberal organ and the amusement of the Conservatives of Brandon.

TO AMEND SHERMAN LAW.

"Rule of Reason" May Give Way to "In Any Degree."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Representative Stanley of Kentucky, after a conference with President Wilson, introduced late yesterday an amendment to the Sherman law which would make illegal the monopolization or restraint of trade "in any degree." It is designed to eliminate the "rule of reason" laid down by the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil case.

The amendment also would invest the Circuit Courts of the United States with jurisdiction to restrain and prevent violations of the act, irrespective of the Attorney-General. It was drawn to meet the wish of the President, expressed in his last message to Congress, to reduce the debatable area surrounding the Sherman act.

Had Eighteen Burglaries.

HAMILTON, Jan. 17—Four youths—Thomas Johnson, George Hill, and James and Andrew Smith—were committed for trial on six separate charges of shop-breaking and theft by Magistrate Jelfs yesterday morning. Their capture, together with an immense amount of loot, was the result of some clever work by Detective Cameron.

Wm. Wilmott, one of the complainants, who appeared against them, claimed that during the past seven months a house on East Barron street had been burglarized eighteen times.

BRITISH SUBMARINE AT BOTTOM OF WHITESAND BAY

Two Officers and Nine Men Are in Ill-fated Craft Which Failed to Come Up After Dive in Manoeuvres—Officials Entertain Little Hope For the Lives of the Crew—Unlucky "A" Class.

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Jan. 17.—Two officers and nine men, comprising the crew of the British submarine boat "A 7" were trapped last night in their craft beneath the water of Whitesand Bay, about five miles southwest of Plymouth. Whether the men are dead or alive has not been established, but many officials here expressed the opinion that all of them had perished.

The exact spot where the little vessel sank has not been definitely fixed.

The "A 7," in company with the "A 8" and "A 9" made a plunge about noon yesterday while engaged in manoeuvres. Her sister ships came to the surface at the end of the manoeuvres, but nothing has been seen of the "A 7" since she opened her valves and dived. At first it was believed by the men on the other submarines that the "A 7" was merely overstaying her allotted time beneath the water, but when the officers realized that their sister boat was in distress, they sent out signals for aid.

Rescue boats were immediately rushed to the vicinity where the "A 7" went down, and threw out grappling irons and dragged the bay all afternoon and until darkness set in. Their efforts were fruitless, however, for never once was there a tug at a chain to indicate that the iron sides of the plunger had been struck.

The grappling operation will begin again at daylight to-day, and, in the hope that the submarine will be found, a boat capable of lifting her to the top of the water has been ordered to Whitesand Bay. The "A 7" was in charge of Lieut. Gilbert M Welman, who had as an aide another officer. A number of the seamen aboard were making their first trip in the submarine.

The cause of the accident is not known. Whether the submarine's machinery became disabled or whether she tore a hole in herself on some sunken object, is the merest speculation. Naval officers estimate that in case the vessel's hull has not been punctured, the men on board her might live at least 12 hours beneath the water.

This is the sixth submarine of class "A" which has come to grief, and the question is being raised here whether the Government ought not to abandon this type of boat in favor of the more modern vessels of the "C" and "D" classes. The "A 7" was built in 1904 and measured 150 feet in length. Her submerged displacement was 204 tons. Her engines developed 600 horse-power, which gave her a surface speed of 16 knots and a submerged speed of nine knots.

Of the class "A" submarines which have caused the British Government grievous losses in men through attacks were the "A 7" wrecked in 1904 and on board which twelve men were drowned; the "A 5" in 1905 with a loss of four lives; the "A 8" in 1906 when fifteen men perished and the "A 3" in 1912 when eleven officers and seamen went to their doom.

The "A" class submarines, however, do not rank alone in disasters for the "C 8" was lost in 1907 with four men; "C 11" in 1909 with thirteen and the "B 2" the same year with fifteen.

Some confusion was caused when the accident occurred yesterday by the announcement that the "A 7" went down in Cawsand Bay, on the western shore of Plymouth Sound, and that the depot ship Onyx had succeeded in getting into communication with the submerged men. This confusion was dissipated last night by a report from the Admiralty that the accident had occurred in Whitesand Bay, which extended from Rame Head to Looe Island, off the coast of Cornwall.

LIBERTY WAS NIL.

Convict Arrested Immediately on His Release From Prison.

KINGSTON, Ont., Jan. 17. — Although papers have been made out for the extradition of Reginald Middleton, released from the penitentiary yesterday morning, after serving four years for forgery in Toronto, it is believed that he will put up a hard fight against it. Middleton was liberated yesterday morning, and was given quite a shock when he was met at the prison gate by Detective Archibald, of Toronto. He is wanted in Wellesley, Mass., on two charges of grand larceny. He had no idea that other charges would be made against him, and before leaving his cell asked to be allowed to do some shopping in the downtown stores before he was put on the train. Detective Archibald left with him on the noon train for Toronto.

Rescues Eight Sailors.

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—The commander of the Cunard liner Lusitania, which sailed from here on Wednesday for Liverpool, sent a wireless message to the line yesterday saying that at 6.30 o'clock yesterday morning, in latitude 43.12, longitude 50.30, the Lusitania had rescued the crew of eight men from the Nova Scotian schooner Mayflower. The schooner was abandoned and set on fire.

Marine records show that the British schooner Mayflower left Perth Amboy, N.J., on Dec. 30 for St. John, N.B., and touched at Booth Bay, Me., on Jan. 10. She could not possibly have been in the position indicated by the Lusitania yesterday. No other Mayflower of the schooner type is recorded.

Sutherland's wife, who was also arrested, was liberated by the court on Monday.

"MY ONLY MEDICINE"

Says Mrs. Corbett, Are "Fruit-a-tives" "They Keep Me In Perfect Health"

MRS. ANNIE A. CORBETT

AVON, ONT., May 14th, 1913

"I have used "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion and Constipation with most excellent results, and they continue to be my only medicine. I am highly pleased with "Fruit-a-tives" and am not ashamed to have the facts published to the world. When I first started, about six years ago, to use them, I took four for a dose, but I cured myself of the above troubles and gradually reduced the dose to one tablet at night.

Before taking "Fruit-a-tives" I took salts and other pills but the treatment was too harsh. I thought I might as well suffer from the disease as from these treatments.

Finally, I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised with a letter in which someone recommended them very highly, so I tried them. The results were more than satisfactory and I have no hesitation in recommending them to any other person. They have done me a world of good. I get satisfaction from them, and that is quite a lot". ANNIE A. CORBETT.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

SOUTH AFRICA STRIKERS GOING BACK

Government Reported To Have Won In South African Struggle.

CAPE TOWN, Union of South Africa, Jan. 17.—Despatches from all parts of the union report that the strikers everywhere are returning to work and that the victory has been won by the Government in the struggle with the Federation of Trades arising originally out of the strike of the railway employes against the retrenchment policy of the companies.

The iron grip of the Premier, Gen Louis Botha, was still in evidence yesterday morning at Johannesburg, where 62 members of the Typographical Union were arrested while meeting. The charge against them was contravention of the provisions of martial law. The men had just passed a resolution to resume work.

At Salt River railroad work shops just outside Cape Town all the men have returned, their leaders having declared the strike ended.

Votes For Swedish Women.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 17. — King Gustav of Sweden, in his speech from the throne to the Swedish Parliament, which he opened in person yesterday, announced the intention of the Government again to ask Parliament to grant to women the franchise and the right of election to office and to Parliament on the same conditions as are enjoyed by men.

WATERS POLLUTED.

Border Municipalities Should Clean Up, Says Report.

TORONTO, Jan. 17.—Ontario border towns and cities may now hold themselves in readiness for a mighty campaign of water purification. To those municipalities which draw their drinking waters from the chain of great lakes and rivers, the report of the field commission, made public yesterday, reads a warning of alarm. It is intimated that remedial legislation may be forthcoming soon.

The substance of the report compiled by Dr. J. W. S. McCullough, of the Provincial Board of Health; Dr. A. J. McLaughlin, of the State Department at Washington, and Dr. J. A. Amyot, for the International Commission on Purification, is that some municipalities to-day are drinking from sources which literally reek with pollution and where the colon bacilli of typhoid are swarming. Some of these have instituted plants to offset the evil, but the majority, if not entirely regardless, have but intermittent services, which do not combat the danger. Every place must have a water treatment for 365 days in the year if the inhabitants are to be safe.

In emphasizing the necessity for the establishment of plants for purification it is stated that in a single day a city may be one contaminated and great disaster follow. The danger from passing vessels, which has hitherto been only guessed at, is here estimated as of pressing moment. In the narrow rivers there is a serious menace, especially as all the vessels on the lakes discharge their sewage into water without treatment of any kind. The greatest factor of all, however, is that every municipality in the area investigated discharges sewage untreated into the international waterways where the currents bear it far and wide.

SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

Two Women Tell How They Escaped the Surgeon's Knife by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Swarthmore, Penn. — "For fifteen years I suffered untold agony, and for one period of nearly two years I had hemorrhages and the doctors told me I would have to undergo an operation, but I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am in good health now. I am all over the Change of Life and cannot praise your Vegetable Compound too highly. Every woman should take it at that time. I recommend it to both old and young for female troubles." — Mrs. EMILY SUMMERSGILL, Swarthmore, Pa.

Baltimore, Md. — "My troubles began with the loss of a child, and I had hemorrhages for four months. The doctors said an operation was necessary, but I dreaded it and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The medicine has made me a well woman and I feel strong and do my own work." — Mrs. J. R. PICKING, 1260 Sargent St., Baltimore, Md.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering in a like manner?

THE PRICE OF CHICKENS IS NOW BOOSTED

The market this morning was an average one with prices about the same as they have been for the past few weeks. The only change of any note was the advance in the prices of chickens. They sold for $1.50 and $1.65 per pair. It was a very bad sign to see the price of chickens advance. With high prices prevailing, and as the hens won't lay in this weather, the farmers are induced to kill off these precious birds and the result may be that in a few weeks there will be an egg famine which could not be relieved until spring.

There was considerable hardwood on the outside square and the prices ranged from $6.00 to $6.50.

LONDON OUTLOOK CRITICIZES BRITISH POLICY IN MEXICO

Paper Demands That Interests of Empire in Latin Republic Be Safeguarded at a Time When Carden's Removal Would be "Absolutely Calamitous"—U. S. Senator Makes Attack.

LONDON, Jan. 17. — The Outlook yesterday contained an editorial bitterly attacking the Foreign Office on account of the report that Sir Lionel Carden, British Minister to Mexico, is to be removed from his present post and transferred to the Legation in Brazil.

"The transfer," The Outlook says, "has been semi-officially confirmed at Washington, to which place we must now turn for the earliest news of British diplomatic movements. The report of Sir Lionel Carden's transfer from Mexico wears a sinister look. The probability is that the removal of the British representative to Brazil or elsewhere may not take place immediately, but when the mind of the public has been duly prepared for the step, we expect to find that our apprehension of a most notable and wanton surrender to an unprincipled foreign intrigue is fully warranted. We assert that it will be absolutely calamitous if our Minister to Mexico is withdrawn from his post of duty until the existing situation in the Latin-American Republic has been wholly transformed."

The article then pleads for the retention of Sir Lionel Carden in Mexico, saying now is a time when he is greatly needed, especially when, because of the action of the United States, millions of dollars of British capital are wasting away, and when danger menaces British name and fame in the eyes of people with whom they long have stood pre-eminent.

The Outlook expresses the belief that the report of Sir Lionel's transfer did not "leak," and advances the opinion that relations between the United States and Great Britain will not be improved "by a temporary infirmity in our Foreign Office." In conclusion, the article says:

"But Great Britain still retains her rights, though they may remain in abeyance a short time longer while the present mixed company of self-seekers remain in office."

U. S. Senator Assails Britain.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—More than 100 Americans present at the weekly luncheon of the American Luncheon Club yesterday wildly cheered and applauded a veiled but obvious attack on Sir Lionel Carden and Britain's Mexican policy, made by Senator J. Ham Lewis, American delegate to the Conference on Safety at Sea, and the club's guest of honor.

Speaking immediately after an Under-Secretary of the British Admiralty, who expressed the conventional hope that America and Britain would always be united in the lasting bonds of peace, Senator Lewis said: "President Wilson desires friendship and peace with all nations, but how can there be peace with a nation that is inciting our neighbors to war on our borders? President Wilson's policy is peace with honor, but honor first. It must be honor ever without peace."

The funeral will be held on Monday, privately, interment at the Little Lake cemetery.

Story of a Lost Diamond.

A lady residing in a suburb of Boston sent her diamond ring to a well known shop there to be cleaned. A day or two later she took a journey of several hours. When she reached her destination she removed her glove, and, lo, the diamond had come out of her ring. A diligent search failed to reveal the lost stone. She waited until her return to her home, and when the diamond could not be found there she went to the jeweler and told her story.

"I am afraid that you loosened the stone when you cleaned it," she concluded. She had little idea that he would agree with her, but to her surprise, after carefully examining the setting, he admitted: "I am afraid we did. I beg that you will select from my unset stones a diamond of about the size and quality of your old one, and I will give you back your ring looking as near as possible as it did when it was new." And he never charged her a cent! Of course he knew who the lady was and that he could trust her to tell a true story.—Kate Upson Clark in Leslie's.

The New Corset For Fat Women

The new corset designed to coerce over-fat ladies into the new style gowns has three sets of strings. When you have one set adjusted you still have two more struggles left. Think of that—and shudder.

To escape this fate, fat ladies should lose no time in securing one of the large cases of Marmola Prescription Tablets—that druggists and the Marmola Company, Detroit, Mich., sell for 75 cents. One of these tablets taken after each meal and at bedtime for a short while will make her independent of the new corset. Being made in strict accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription, these pleasant little standbys of the over-fat are perfectly harmless, except to the fat itself, which they not infrequently do away with at the rate of a pound a day, and they are also the most economical and least restrictive means for reducing fat one could adopt, as they get results without interfering either with one's easy chair tendencies or methods of diet, however generous.

Icebergs.

The greatest distance at which an iceberg can be observed in clear weather by day is eighteen miles. The average berg on an ordinary clear day can be sighted from thirteen to sixteen miles from the ship; on a cloudy day from eleven to fourteen miles. In a slight fog bergs can be sighted at two miles; in a dense fog at 200 yards. In bright moonlight they can be seen at two and one-half miles with the naked eye; in starlight at one mile, and at two miles distance with glasses. On a night overcast and dark, but with the horizon visible, bergs can be seen at a distance of one-half mile with glasses.

PARENTS SHOULD GIVE THEIR GIRLS A CHANCE TO GET MARRIED

They Are Often to Blame or the Fact That the Daughters Become Old Maids

A great many parents wonder why their daughters do not marry. They see other girls, not half so pretty nor attractive as their own, settling themselves comfortably in life with husbands and homes, while their own daughters are headed for the spinsters' Retreat, and they puzzle their brains why this is thus, and why one maiden is called to the altar and another left.

And it never occurs to them tha they themselves are their daughter matrimonial hoodoo. They don't tend to be. Good gracious, no! from it! They are convinced t matrimony is the predestined ca r for a woman, and that the wed g bell is about the surest dinner ell that ever rings for a girl. If you would accuse them of trying insure their Mamies and Sadies ing old maids, they would indig ntly deny the charge. Yet such the case. They block the love ne at every turn instead of pu ng it along.

Take the case, for insta e, in which the family constitute itself a committee of criticism th sits in judgment upon every yo man that comes to the house d tears him limb from limb. Is y youth going to subject himself that ordeal if he knows it.? any girl going to stand for havi her man friends vivisected if she n help it?

Not much. We are a human and we've all got faults an oibles, and we don't care to have t m discussed and ridiculed, nor do enjoy having our friends made a target for the near-wit, even of r own family.

I know a beautifu nd charming young girl who is m h admired by men, who are mu puzzled as to why she never inv them to call upon her at her ho even though she evidently enj their society elsewhere, and w wonder why, when they sugges ming to see her, that she always e some excuse to prevent their g so. The real reason is because r family consider every beau tha he has as their game. Only le man come to see her and they e merry over his peculiarity. imitate his walk and his manne n and turn him into such a figure un that it has made the girl hav perfect horror of having a ma me to see her and thus offering m up as a fresh victim.

The fam think all of this a merry jest, about ten years from now, when die's beauty begins to fade, and y realize that she is still hang on the parent bough, the fact t they kept her from marrying making her afraid to have a g man come to see her, won't so funny. But that's just they're doing. Family critici xplains why there's many an ol id.

Th here's the family that kills love's ung dream by ridicule. A maid budding fancy is the most deli and sensitive thing in the wor and it can be blighted almost by breath. Heaven knows why, bu certain poetry and romance m surround a man before a girl c ll in love with him, and if you t this away from her, there is ing doing in the sentiment line her.

once asked a particular charm- old maid why she had never rried, and she said that the reason s that when she was a girl every e any man came courting her her mily would make fun of him. They ould point out that he had a nose ke a beak, or a jaw like a bull-dog, r that he waddled when he walked, r that he spluttered when he talked, and, having been made to see him in this absurd light, she could never again behold him as the hero of her dream. The result was that she kept waiting for the one perfect man, beyond family criticism to come along, and, as he never did she drifted helplessly into spinsterhood.

Another reason why so many girls mary is because they have the misfortune to have parents who are hindrances instead of helps. Before you pull off a success at anything you've got to have a good chance to do it, and this is as true of matrimony as of business. A girl can't marry unless she has the opportunity and it is up to her parents to provide that opportunity.

This can be done in many ways—by letting a girl go to places where she will meet eligible men, by giving her the best clothes that can be afforded, because her youth is the sunshine in which a girl must make her matrimonial hay and chiefly by making the home such a pleasant place that men will like to come to it.

Yet there are mothers and fathers who make every young man who comes to the house feel as if he was an interloper, or a burglar, with the very natural consequences that no youth has the courage to encounter such an inhospitable reception a second time, and all the men in the community flock around some girl whose parents give them the glad hand. Believe me, mother and father have just as much to do with making Marie and Sadie a belle as the girl's own attractions have.

Another reason why som any girls are old maids is because their parents haven't enough sense to get out of the way and give a man a chance to make love. How can the fellow have the nerve to make love to a girl when father is sitting by the drop light, not six feet away, reading the evening paper, and mother and Aunt Jane are gossiping within earshot, and little brother is listening behind the portiere? And how can a girl play up her little arts and artifices with the family looking on, ready to guy her about it as soon as the front door closes behind the men?

Every man and woman must remember how they acted in their own courting days, and yet in spite of this you will hear a father say that he is not going to let Sally and her fool beaux drive him out of his own favorite chair in his own sitting room. Very well. Let him stick to it if he wants Sally to be an old maid and to have to support her instead of having a husband to do it.

Of course, the architects that arranged modern flats don't take love making into account. They crowd the little winged god out, which is perhaps one reason why there's less marrying in cities than there is in the country and small towns.

The moral of all which is that if you want your girls to marry you must give them a chance. You must help along the love game, not strew tacks, in its way.

READING AND ITS PLEASURES

By F. M. Dela Fosse.

Dr. Samuel Smiles, in his excellent preface to his well-known work "Self-Help" explains in a few words the origin of the book. He says that it was written to illustrate what cannot be too often urged, "that youth must work in order to enjoy, —that nothing creditable can be accomplished without application and diligence—that the student must not be daunted by difficulties, but conquer them by patience and perseverance and that above all he must seek elevation of character, without which capacity is worthless and worldly success is naught."

These are trenchant words and coming from one who grew venerable in the pursuit of theological and other knowledge and who never wrote anything that was not for the uplifting of humanity and for the inculcating of a spirit of true manliness in his countrymen they are deserving of the fullest recognition.

The books by which this author is best known are his "Lives of the Engineers" and the Self-Help series, comprising four books, Self-Help, Duty, Character and Thrift. To the average young man these titles are apt to suggest a certain amount of dryness and indigestibility but he can be confidently assured that the lessons they teach are couched in a form that renders them of entrancing interest. No public or private library should be without them for there are none that are so well calculated to fire the heart of youth with the ambition to succeed in life and become a worthy citizen of a great Empire.

Men of Character.

This article is written, not for the purpose of dissecting the contents of Dr. Smiles' works, but to bring out the importance of the virtues of which they treat. That they are of the greatest value and well worthy of attainment is attested by all men of mark and learning. Emerson, the great American philosopher has said that "men of character are the conscience of the society to which they belong." and Martin Luther that "the prosperity of a country depends, not on the abundance of its revenues nor on the strength of its fortifications nor on the beauty of its public buildings—but in its men of education, enlightenment and character." However, it does not require sage aphorisms and trite allusions to show us how all important character is in any department of life.

We know that when Chatham was appointed minister his influence was felt through all ramifications of office and when the dissolution of the Union seemed imminent and Washington desired to retire into private life, Jefferson wrote to him urging him to continue in office. "The confidence of the whole Union," he said, "rests on you." So great is the influence of character that some have achieved their greatest conquests by it after their death. "Never," says Michelet in his history of Rome, "was Caesar more alive, more powerful, more terrible, than when his old and worn out body, his withered corpse lay pierced with blows." On the very day of the murder of William of Orange by Delft the Estates of Holland resolved "to maintain the good cause with God's help to the uttermost without sparing gold or blood," and they kept their word. Mere intellect alone can accomplish little if the moral purpose is absent. Cleverness is nothing, genius is nothing in comparison with the possession of a good character, for, whilst the one may command admiration it is the latter attribute alone that can acquire and keep respect. Nobody in his heart of hearts respects the wealthy because he is wealthy. It is only when he shows himself worthy of being the owner of his riches that he attains his place as a respected son of the state.

The Price of Character.

Colonel Francis Chartres, one of the most despicable products of the 18th century, who had grown rich by infamy and ended his miserable existence on the scaffold well knew the value of character. "I would not give one farthing for virtue," he once exclaimed to Lord Chesterfield, "but I would give ten thousand pounds for a character." When asked why, he replied, "because I could make a hundred thousand by it."

This article is not meant as a preachment or an attempt to pose as a professional moralist, but if these lines should happen to be read by some parent or guardian anxious to instil its useful lessons into the minds of young people under his care some good will have been accomplished. The whole series is in the Library and has been there for years looking reproachfully down on well-nigh a generation of contemptuous or unthinking readers. It oft strikes me as strange that they are so neglected. Perhaps it is because they belong to a past generation of literature and present day readers are strangers to their merits. My first introduction to them was when I was living in the heart of the backwoods and I shall never forget the influence that the reading of Self-Help then exerted on my mind. I think I can say in all truthfulness and sincerity that not all my years of schooling nor the precepts and maxims imbided at home produced so strong an effect on me as the examples placed before me therein. My advice to every young man is to obtain and read every one of the volumes I have named. I am satisfied that there will be very few indeed who will not get so fascinated with their charm as to read them to the end and what is more, to profit by them.

The Glut of Fiction.

Among the charges that can be brought against the tremendous output of fiction of the present day I think is the fact that it has served to draw away the attention of readers from more helpful literature. Books, like those of Dr. Smiles had more chance of attention in the days of the three volume novel than they have now. And it is not to the credit of any reading community that such books should be passed over so completely in the pursuit of short stories in fiction even if the age is confronted with newer problems in which bustle and unrest and lack of time necessitate the fabrication of this brand of literature.

AUDITORS' REPORT

We have investigated the affairs of The Bank of Nova Scotia, and certify that the above Eighty-second General Statement in our opinion presents a fair and conservative view of the condition of the Bank as at the close of business on December 31, 1913.

Our investigation included an examination of the general books of the Bank as kept at the offices of the General Manager in Toronto, and an investigation and compilation of figures from certified returns made by its various branches. We further verified by count and examination the cash on hand at the offices in Halifax and Toronto, King Street, and inspected all securities owned by the Bank excepting those held at St. John and Havana. In verification of the securities held at these two branches certified statements were forwarded to us.

COMMITS HARA-KIRI

Japanese Seismologist Slays Himself for Life Lost in Eruption.

TOKIO, Japan, Jan. 17.—The suicide yesterday by hara-kiri of the chief of the Meteorological Observatory at Kagoshima is reported in unconfirmed despatches to the news papers. The correspondents declare that the scientist committed suicide owing to the severe criticism of his action in informing the citizens of Kagoshima that they were in no danger from the eruption of the volcano Sakura-Jima as the centre of the subterranean disturbance was elsewhere.

The people of Kagoshima, many of whom have returned to the ruined city only to find their homes destroy~~ed awaited with wonderful faith for~~ Prof. Ottori to give his decision as to the possibility of further catastrophies. Many families had been separated from their children during the panic which followed the eruption, earthquakes and tidal wave, and the highways in the vicinity of Kagoshima are crowded with sad-eyed people searching for their relatives.

Houses Covered With Lava.

KAGOSHIMA, Japan, Jan. 17.—The houses on the Island of Sakura—those that still stand—are enveloped in lava and resemble gigantic wasps. The fugitives who have returned are still in a terrified condition and refuse to enter their houses except to make a hurried search for valuables. Fears are entertained for the disintegration of Sakura-Jima.

The western part of the island is thickly coated with melted sulphur. The southern part is covered with a great deposit of ashes. The condition of the central part is obscured by the heavy smoke.

TO CHANGE CHANCELLORS?

Naval Exponent May Become Dictator of Germany.

BERLIN, Jan. 17. — Last night's Vossiche Zeitung says that circumstantial reports are current in well-informed quarters that Germany is on the verge of a "naval Chancellorship" under Admiral Van Tirpitz. It is asserted that Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg has already tendered his resignation and that Foreign Secretary Von Jagow and the latter's Under-Secretary, Zimmerman, will leave office at the same time with him. Dr. Solf, the Colonial Secretary, is mentioned as likely to be the new Foreign Secretary.

This story, which of course must be taken with the utmost reserve, alleges that Von Bethmann-Hollweg will become Viceroy of Alsace-Lorraine in succession to Count Von Wedel, who will leave office in consequence of the failure of the civil government in the recent crisis in the conquered province.

The Vossiche Zeitung adds that the statements come from dependable authorities and in such categorical form that it cannot refrain from giving them immediate publicity, although it is unable to vouch for their accuracy.

The Kaiser had a conference on Thursday with the Chancellor, the War Minister, the Chiefs of the General Staff and his Military Cabinet.

BOMB FOR FAMILY.

Ex-Boarder Suspected of Attempted Outrage at Niagara Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Jan. 17.—Frank Bongiovanni, his wife, and their six children, narrowly escaped death in an attempt made to wreck their home at No. 625 Twentieth street with a bomb at one o'clock yesterday morning. The bomb was thrown through a window while the Bongiovannis were sleeping.

Bongiovanni was awakened by the sound of breaking glass. Investigating its cause, he found the bomb and hurled it into the yard. A great hole was torn in the earth, and houses two blocks around were shaken by the force of the explosion.

A young Italian who formerly boared at Bongiovanni's is suspected of being the bomb thrower. Mrs. Bongiovanni told the police yesterday that her husband had ordered him from the house because he had paid unwelcome attention to her. She said that the man threatened to blow the family up when she refused to leave her home and elope with him. He cannot be found.

THREE SCHOONERS MISSING.

Boston Shipping Men Fear for Fate of Coal-laden Four-masters.

BOSTON, Jan. 17. — Considerable anxiety was felt in shipping circles to-day for the safety of the four-masted schooners Fuller Palmer and Prescott Palmer and the four-masted Northland, of which no tidings have been received since they were caught off the coast by the northwest gale of Monday night.

All were coal-laden from Norfolk. The Fuller Palmer was bound for this city, the Prescott Palmer for Portsmouth, N.H., and the Northland of Searsport, Me. Capt. H. H. Wallace of the schooner Grace A. Martin, which was abandoned off Martinicus on Wednesday, saw the three vessels at 10 o'clock Monday night. As they encountered the same weather conditions that caused the loss of the Martin, shipping men fear that disaster may have overtaken them.

The three schooners carried a total of 37 men.

Hindus Must Have $200.

OTTAWA, Jan. 17. — Action has been taken by the Government to prevent or limit the immigration of Hindus in Canada. They must show themselves in possession of $200. This is not a poll tax, as is the case of Chinamen, on whom there is a head tax of $500. The Japanese enter Canada freely under the terms of the Anglo-Japanese treaty.

ALEXANDER LAIRD,
General Manager.

B. E. WALKER,
President.

Z. A. LASH,
Vice-President.

(Toronto) 13th January, 1914.

Before moving the adoption of the Report, the President called upon the General Manager to address the Shareholders:

General Manager's Address.

We have closed our accounts for the past year and have great pleasure and satisfaction in presenting you with a statement of the results of the Bank's business, which you will realise is the best record in its history, and should be a source of gratification to the Shareholders and those actively engaged in its administration.

There was enough difficulty and perplexity in the general financial situation at the close of 1912 to make us apprehensive at the beginning of the past year. Canadians had some reason to hope for an early return to normal conditions, but were doomed to disappointment, and the continuance of the unfavorable influences then evident, and the aggravation of some of their worst features, has made the history of 1913 memorable in the annals of international trade. While the year has been full of anxiety and much actual strain, there is cause for congratulation that, notwithstanding the long-deferred arrival of peace in continental Europe, the uncertainty as to how the adjustment of immense war expenditures will be made, and the distressing delay in bringing order out of chaos in unfortunate Mexico, the general position of financial credit has, on the whole, been fairly well maintained. In our own country we were seriously disturbed lest we should have a failure of the crops, as this would certainly have added to our difficulties, but we were fortunate in securing an abundant harvest of excellent quality. This was marketed with extraordinary celerity and realized good values, which enabled us to make a substantial measure of liquidation of our debts and largely increase our cash capital. Canada is so closely allied with and influenced by the movements of our neighbors to the south that there was great satisfaction when the radical and important measures initiated under the recent change of administration were brought to a successful conclusion without any serious disturbance in financial affairs. Taken as a whole, and keeping in mind all the adverse conditions, the past year has been marked by astonishing evidence of strength to meet great emergencies.

You will readily see from the statements included in the Report of the Directors that the Bank has had another satisfactory year in the matter of profits. After a very careful revaluation of our assets, making liberal allowances for depreciation in securities, and providing for all bad and doubtful debts, you will be pleased to know that the Directors remembered the staff, to whose faithful and zealous efforts our success is largely due. Before closing the books a substantial sum was set aside out of the year's earnings and distributed as a bonus, leaving the declared net profits $2,992,951.10, being 10.88 per cent. on the Capital and Rest combined. We were enabled to pay dividends amounting to $1,800,000, including the usual dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and extra bonus dividends of 2 per cent. for the year; and we have reason to hope that we shall maintain this rate until the Rest equals the Capital, and thereafter make the permanent basis 12 per cent., with whatever advantage may come with extra good fortune.

In our last Report the urgent necessity for providing an extension of the Head Office and Toronto Branch premises was referred to; and arrangements have since had to be made for the temporary accommodation of some departments of the Bank outside the present building. We are now pleased to say that we have purchased the two properties adjoining, and will proceed to consider plans, although we do not expect to make much progress towards altering or erecting a building for two or three years. We have acquired property in Windsor, Ontario, where a suitable office building will be erected during the coming year, and are also engaged in planning the erection of an adequate building in the City of Quebec. In both these places it was absolutely necessary to provide for our growing business. Bank Premises account now stands at $4,281,481.60, and in this connection we would direct your attention to the item of $979,915.61 in the statement under Real Estate. This includes bank premises acquired by the amalgamation with the Eastern Townships Bank, which will be disposed of in due course at considerably more than the book value. With this sale and the sums from time to time written off Bank Premises we should be able to keep this account within reasonable bounds and still show our properties at approximately 50 per cent. of their value.

The enrolled members of the staff now number 3,540, an addition of 544 during the year. In accordance with our plan of contributing to the Pension Fund, which includes provision for the widows, orphans, and other dependents of deceased employees, we have appropriated $80,000. It will interest you to know that the Pension Fund now stands at the magnificent sum of over $2,000,000. This, of course, includes the contributions of the members of the staff themselves. This large amount has been placed in the hands of a Board of Trustees charged with its administration for the benefit of those who have given long and faithful service to the Bank. We are pleased to record our appreciation of the able manner in which this trust has been exercised. A large portion of the amount has been invested in Western farm mortgages, and the whole fund is earning at the rate of about 6¼ per cent. per annum. The importance of making every reasonable effort to create a loyal and efficient staff cannot be too strongly emphasized, and your generous aid in the direction of strengthening the ties which bind its members perpetuates what is best in our service and is creditable to the institution. The fund has been actuarially examined from time to time, and we believe that it is on a sure and sound basis. We hope in the near future, with the accretions from well-invested funds, to increase the maximum pension.

You will notice that after paying dividends, making appropriations for Bank Premises and Pension Fund, we transferred to the Rest account $1,000,000 and carried forward a balance of $384,529.98 to Profit and Loss account. We reported $16,422,864 note circulation in November, 1912, and reached a maximum of $16,646,225 in November, 1913. The lowest point, $12,822,000, occurred in May last. The early movement of the crops relieved the pressure but we took advantage of the emergency provisions of the Bank Act, and at the date of our statement we had $642,923 circulation outstanding in excess of our paid-up capital. Our deposits show a decrease of $4,803,746, but this is accounted for by the adjustment of several large amounts which were held in special accounts, and the withdrawal of Provincial Government funds. The ordinary deposits show an increase; current loans and discounts were $154,576,889, and call and short loans $25,764,910, compared with $162,752,559 and $17,732,049 in our last Report. The total current loans were $180,341,800, a decrease of $1,194,808 for the year. We show an increase of $9,595,701 in Government and other securities, and $2,960,690 in cash.

We think it advisable to give you an assurance that in the midst of the troubled and dangerous state of affairs in Mexico our interests are being safeguarded and every precaution exercised in handling a difficult problem. Our Manager enjoys our full confidence and he has shown unusual ability and judgment under these trying circumstances.

We deemed it prudent to restrict the opening of new branches to the carrying out in some measure of a program we had planned early in the year; and we consequently confined ourselves to districts where we had no representation, except in some cases where we opened for the protection of other branches. The geographical distribution of branches and agencies as at 29th November, 1913, was as follows:

Alberta	53
British Columbia	44
Manitoba	23
New Brunswick	5
Nova Scotia	13
Ontario	82
Prince Edward Island	6
Quebec	82
Saskatchewan	57
Yukon	2
Total in Canada	366
Newfoundland	1
London, England	1
United States	4
Mexico	1
Total number of branches..	373

The number of the Bank's Shareholders is now 6,026, as against 5,656 a year ago, an increase of 370. The following table indicates how widely our Shareholders are scattered, not only in Canada, but abroad:

	No. of Shareholders	Amount Held
Ontario	1,468	$4,077,350
Quebec	1,162	3,011,900
Maritime Provinces	758	1,571,650
Western Provinces	126	255,700
Great Britain	1,723	3,315,650
United States	684	2,599,550
Other Countries ..	105	168,200
	6,026	$15,000,000

There has been a widespread agitation in the Central Western district as to the supposed need for greater recognition of the claims of farmers to accommodation from the banks, but investigation does not support this contention, so far as this Bank is concerned. A carefully prepared statement of the business of this Bank in the three Western Provinces shows the percentage of total deposits to total loans in this district to be 65.55 per cent., which means that for every one dollar on deposit in these Provinces we lend two. A compilation of the figures of the business of this Bank in Saskatchewan made at the request of the Royal Commission on Agricultural Credit appointed by the Saskatchewan Government gave the percentage of farmers' loans to farmers' deposits in this Province as 278.29 per cent., while the percentage of farmers' loans to total deposits was 88.25 per cent. This means that for every dollar which the farmers of Saskatchewan have deposited with us, we have lent them nearly three. These facts should convince those interested in this important subject that our farming customers have been generously treated by us.

The decennial revision of the Bank Act was an important feature of the last session of Parliament. A most searching examination and discussion of every conceivable phase of banking as it affects this country resulted in a measure evidently framed with the object of meeting every reasonable requirement, and the Act is generally regarded as a piece of unusually good legislation. The most prominent of the new features are the provisions for the creation of a Central Gold Reserve, and the appointment of Auditors for the independent examination of banks.

In view of what has been accomplished in spite of so many adverse influences and taking into account the natural disposition to look at the bright side of things after having passed through a trying period, it is not easy to forecast what the coming year will bring. We are inclined to the thought that with the correction and adjustment of important matters now pending—such as the settlement of European political and financial difficulties and the attempts to bring about a return of peace and prosperity to unhappy Mexico (an important factor in the situation)—we shall see a revival of better conditions and our problems may be easily solved. We fear there will be a slow recovery, and great circumspection will be required before we again sail in smooth waters. We are likely to have an accumulation of idle money in the financial centres, but this will probably not have any appreciable effect on rates for general business for some time to come, because of the depression in all first class securities and the difficulty of disposing of the large amount awaiting a favorable market. On the other hand, trade has been prosperous and is fundamentally sound, and while considerable restriction must be expected, we are hopeful that the coming year will be one of reasonable prosperity.

The President then said:

President's Address.

At our last Annual Meeting for the first time we presented the information at our disposal regarding industrial conditions in Canada, and in the foreign countries in which we do business, in the form of an appendix to the ordinary Report to our Shareholders. The advantage of presenting the views of our chief officers regarding the various districts directly to the Shareholders, instead of compressing them into the addresses of the President or the General Manager, seemed clear, and we think the experiment has justified itself, and may be adopted hereafter.

A year ago the tide of expansion seemed still to be in flood, although in some quarters a check was either in plain sight or had here and there made itself felt. Money for certain purposes, notably in connection with real estate, was not so easy to obtain as in former years, yet little heed was apparently paid to the oft-repeated warnings of bankers and others who tried to forecast the future, although at the end of the year we must conclude that, after all, such warnings did have some beneficial effect. Clearly we have come through a time of difficulty in a most creditable manner, and we can look forward to the future cheerfully if the spirit of prudence which now characterizes our people remains unchanged at least until another good crop has been marketed. Much of that part of our expansion which went too far reminds one of the diseases through which the young have to pass. We are doubtless glad if they escape them entirely, but we have no reason to expect that they will be so fortunate. Some undue speculation in real estate, and some over-building in connection with public improvements, is inevitable amidst such astonishing growth and prosperity, and it would be foolish to expect anything else. We are now realizing more accurately the value of real estate, and through the process we are gaining an experience which is absolutely necessary to the foundations of a sound prosperity. The Western country as a whole will not again have to suffer from this particular ailment of young communities. We have repeatedly deplored the fettering of the country by the high rent-charge which inflated real estate values impose, and the unfortunate effect of such a rent-charge on the cost of living, and if there is now to be a pause in the upward movement of values there will in any event be a corresponding gain to all landless people.

Immigration has not yet been much checked by the curtailment of industry, indeed, except from the United States, there has been a large increase during the year. The British immigrants exceed in number the combined total of those from Europe and Asia, and very much exceed those from the United States. The largest increase as compared with the figures of previous years, however, is in the division which includes all countries except Great Britain and the United States. Here the increase, December figures being estimated, is 32 per cent. From Great Britain the increase is 8 per cent., while from the United States there has been a decrease of 17 per cent. There is thus a total increase of 66 per cent., as against 12 per cent. in the previous year. The total number of immigrants, December figures again being estimated, was 417,709, as compared with 395,804, the revised figures for 1912. The total for 1913 is made up as follows: British, 156,873; United States, 115,805; all other countries, 145,031. These figures are again eloquent in explaining the conditions of our foreign trade, the total of which for the year ending March, 1913, passed the billion mark for the first time, being $1,085,175,000. The imports were valued at $691,943,000, and the exports at $393,232,000, showing the largest excess of imports we had ever had, namely, $298,711,000. In the six months of the current fiscal year ending September, the complete figures for which have been published there is some improvement in the proportion of exports to imports, and since September a greater improvement has taken place. As to our exports we are glad to report an increase during this period in every group, while there has been a decrease in many of the classes of imports.

We again draw attention to the large proportion of our imports which consists of iron and steel in various forms, not only as raw materials, but as manufactured goods. The total value is about $140,000,000. May we once more point out that in the main these are articles used in building, or in equipping the country for its future, and that such purchases differ in effect from the import of foodstuffs and other rapidly perishing objects? At the same time we regret that the greater part of these iron and steel goods is not made in Canada now, as certainly will be the case in time. To the extent to which, by making these goods in Canada, we could have lessened the debt represented by the securities we have sold to pay for the difference between imports and exports, we have burdened ourselves for a long time to come. Of course, while workmen are busily engaged in other things, as they have been in Canada, it may be said that they are not available for more work in iron and steel, but as soon as railroad and other building lessens in volume, not in the aggregate but in proportion to other industries, we may hope that we shall be able to make in Canada the larger part of the iron and steel goods now imported. The increased output of our coal and iron mines, of our blast furnaces, and of our manufactories, which would result, would be of inestimable value to the country as a whole.

It was evident to any student of the situation a year ago that Canada, and other borrowing countries, would be put to a severe test during 1913. What we were not prepared for was that this country should be singled out as, in some measure, chief among the sinners of this kind. It is well, however, to remember that when money becomes scarce in the great markets of the world, the chief borrower is always told he has obtained too large a share and that he must stop borrowing for the time being. We had scarcely realized that Canada had become the chief borrower, or practically so, and somewhat resented being held responsible for a situation created by the combined financial requirements of all the active mercantile nations of the world. However, we have had our warning, and shall doubtless act upon it.

The fact remains that under all this pressure England has taken more of our securities this year than ever before. She has patiently remembered that we are obliged to finish the many sound and important enterprises, public, semi-public, and private, which had been undertaken before the financial clouds began to gather. That such enterprises will command the money of the investor in preference to loans for the rehabilitation of foreign countries devastated by war, or in preference to securities based upon new ventures, we need not doubt, and out of the vast sum available each year in the markets of Europe for new investments we may be sure of getting a generous share. We shall have to face a keener analysis of the nature of the security offered and the necessity of paying higher rates to the investor, and we shall do well to abstain during the next year or so from seeking to market any unnecessary securities, in order that we may do what we can to restore the balance between the investment resources of the world and the securities offered for sale. It is pleasing in this connection to see that the higher rates of interest offered have opened the markets of the United States to our securities to an extent quite unusual in the past.

Now that we have come to a slight pause in the growth of North America, it is well to bear in mind some of the more important things accomplished during this period of expansion. In Canada, in addition to growth in many other directions, we have in sight the completion of two new transcontinental railway systems, and while they have been building the existing system has successfully established its claim to rank as one of the foremost railway systems in the word. As regards the United States, the Panama Canal is practically finished; a tariff adjustment, the mere thought of which would have created panic a few years ago, has taken place, leaving the outlook in this respect a certainty instead of an uncertainty; a Currency and Banking bill, for which the country has been waiting about 20 years, has been passed, and a more reasonable attitude has been adopted towards the question of railroad rate adjustment. These are all events of the greatest importance which must profoundly affect the future of the two countries, and so far as Canada is concerned we may surely feel that we are now entering upon a new and more important phase of industrial life, for which our equipment is more adequate than ever before. No more positive evidence of the need and value of such equipment could be offered than the ease with which the present year's crop was harvested, moved, and warehoused. This has been done in a manner which would have seemed impossible only a few years ago, and the value of the smoothness and rapidity with which the work was handled can scarcely be estimated.

In connection with the opening of the Panama Canal, there will be held at San Francisco in 1915 the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, for the purpose of impressing upon the world the vast change in its commerce likely to accrue from this new waterway. It is peculiarly gratifying to know that in this exposition Canada will take a very prominent place. It is proposed to erect a building covering 65,000 square feet, considerably larger than the Canadian building in any previous exposition, and in this space the natural products of our country in agriculture, horticulture, minerals, forestry, fish, game, etc., will be adequately displayed. We understand that it is the intention of the Government to make this one of the best exhibitions that has ever been placed before the public in the interest of this country.

We turn to the Clearing House returns with unusual interest at such a time as the present. There are now 22 Clearing Houses in Canada, but leaving out two with records for part of the year only and comparing the figures of the 20 in operation a year ago, we find that there have been ten increases and ten decreases during the year, as compared with increases in every Clearing House the previous year. The increase in the total is 1.27 per cent. as against 23.74 per cent. a year ago. Increases appear in the figures of seven Eastern and three Western cities, and decreases in those of eight Western and two Eastern cities. After the phenomenal increases in 1912 we may be glad that we have held our own in 1913. Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg, three cities which acount for 72 per cent. of the total, all show increases.

The building permits of the four chief cities were as follows:

Montreal	$14,579,000	$19,642,000	$27,032,000
Toronto	24,374,000	27,401,000	27,038,000
Winnipeg	17,550,000	20,475,000	18,621,000
Vancouver	17,652,000	19,388,000	10,423,000

We have made the comparison for three years in view of the contraction which has begun in some cities. Toronto has just kept even, and the decline in Winnipeg is trifling. The marked contraction is in Vancouver, and this no doubt represents conditions in many other Western cities. In Montreal, however, there is a great increase in value, although the number of permits is practically the same. The figures for Montreal always exclude large suburbs, the building in which last year is said to approximate $10,000,000 in value.

The comments of our Canadian, United States, and English officers upon the trade and financial situation are so clearly set forth that I hesitate to repeat in any form their conclusions. It may be well, however, at such difficult time to sum up the case as concisely as possible. The world has two problems before it: (1) How to render available a supply of money sufficient for the carrying out of such physical betterments as must be financed by the sale of securities? (2) How to enlarge the credit facilities of the world for those shorter term transactions which consist of the manufacturing and distributing of perishable goods?

The first problem can only be comfortably solved if there is sufficient money saved—that is, profits withdrawn from active use in business, or income not expended by the owners, etc.—to provide for the necessary borrowings of those who are expending money on permanent improvements. For some years the world has been more extravagant than in any period known to history since Roman times, and this extravagance has been accompanied by a rise in prices which has made it very hard for those who are not extravagant, and who are the most regular in saving money in ordinary times, to put by the usual margin against life's contingencies. When securities cannot readily be sold because of a shortage in these savings, the money necessary for the short term transactions above referred to is used to some extent, but the strain produced by this cannot continue indefinitely, and such permanent improvements must lessen in volume until savings catch up and the equilibrium has been restored. The situation during the past year, however, has been aggravated by many other factors. In many countries, notably in Canada, where large sums are being expended on permanent improvements, there is a relatively small number of those who have savings to lend, and the wants of all the borrowers in all such countries have cast upon the lending countries of the world a combined pressure greater than ever before known. On the other hand, to the extravagance of individuals represented by motor cars, palatial houses, social display, etc., beyond the capacity of their incomes, have been added colossal expenditures for war and on armaments, and for many purposes which are useless from the industrial point of view. If armaments are necessary as part of the police system of the world, then the money sunk in their creation is none the less a sad burden to the industrial world. We have thus come to a time when, coinciding, as they do, with the hoarding of money by timid holders consequent upon the Balkan and Mexican troubles, the unusual requirements coming from an almost world-wide prosperity cannot be fully met. All business activities, therefore, throughout the world must be lessened in volume until things right themselves, which they will do quite speedily if people generally are willing to profit by the lessons to be drawn from recent experience.

The motion for the adoption of the report was then put to the meeting and carried. Amendments to the by-laws regulating the number of Directors of the Bank were passed, and Mr. T. Harry Webb, C.A., of Messrs. Webb, Reid, Hegan, and Callingham, Montreal and Winnipeg, and Mr. James Marwick, C.A., of Messrs. Marwick, Mitchell, Peat and Co., Montreal, were appointed Auditors of the Bank, their remuneration not to exceed the sum of $15,000 for the year. The usual resolutions expressing the thanks of the Shareholders to the Board of Directors and also to the staff of the Bank were unanimously carried. Upon motion the meeting proceeded to elect Directors for the coming year and then adjourned.

The scrutineers subsequently announced the following gentlemen to be elected as Directors for the coming year: Sir Edmund Walker, C.V.O., LL.D., D.C.L., Hon. George A. Cox, John Hoskin, K.C., LL.D., J. W. Flavelle, LL.D., A. Kingman, Hon. Sir Lyman Melvin-Jones, Hon. W. C. Edwards, Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D., E. R. Wood, Sir John M. Allan, H. J. Fuller, F. P. Jones.

At a meeting of the newly elected Board of Directors held subsequently, Sir Edmund Walker, C.V.O., LL.D., D.C.L., was elected president, and Mr. Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D., vice-president.

THE CLOSE SEASON DOES NOT EFFECT RESERVE INDIANS

The Review has been asked to publish the following:

BRANTFORD, Jan. 7.—On the 1st of December, Messrs. Alexander Garlow and Jesse Gibson, of the Indian Reserve, shipped to a fur dealer of Toronto, about $60 worth of muskrats and skunk skins. The inspector at Hamilton seized them, claiming that although shipped on the first day of the open season, they must have been killed during the closed season, and he never took the trouble to enquire whether Garlow and Gibson were Indians or not. As there is no close season for Indians belonging to the reserve, Major G. J. Smith, Indian Agent, took the matter up, with the result, that the superintendent of the Game and Fisheries Department has ordered the skins forwarded to their destination, but it is quite likely that they are now spoiled.

YOUNGSTERS CAME FROM BEHIND AND DEFEATED PORT HOPERS BY 6-5

Rose Scored the Goal That Gave Locals the Victory in Hard Game

With the ability to "come back" ad gameness personified, the local nior O. H. A. team beat Port Hope uniors last night in the Lake Shore own, by 6—5. The boys left confident of a victory although they dn't quite expect it to be such a rd battle as it was. The Port ope brigade put up a game little ht, and the final gong found them ppering the locals' nets, trying to en it up.

Captain Halpin's crew made a fine art when they scored the first two oals, but it was only a matter of a ew moments till the game was tied p. Once again did the locals take he lead, but from then till half me it was all Port Hope. Darling let a few easy ones by and the forward line didn't check back, with the result that at half time the score stood Port Hope 5, Peterboro 3.

After the resting period the locals appeared to be a new team. They went up the ice time after time with three men combinations and their back checking was superb. In the course of fifteen minutes' play they had the score tied and then Darling was given a chance to show his class. He did so to perfection and his wonderful work kept the handful of local supporters in hopes.

At last Ray Rose broke away, and combining with Barrie and Knapman, he passed the forward line, circled the defence and notched what proved to be the winning goal. The remaining four minutes were filled with fast hockey but the boys were "there" and Port Hope couldn't score.

It would be hard to select one of the local brigade and say that he was a star. In the first half none of them were going, but in the last session every one was on their toes. Captain Halpin played his usual good game. Four minutes before half time he had his foot cut with a skate, but was out and going strong in the last period.

Rose also set out a good brand of hockey. He had two goals to his credit. Barrie and Knapman on the wings, put up a great game and their back-checking in the last half had the Port Hope people played off their feet. The defence, Long and Richardson, proved to be a tower of strength, the former using his weight well and the latter contributing several lightning fast rushes. Darling, as stated above, wasn't going good till after half time and from then on not a goal was scored, although he was called upon to handle several hard shots.

For Port Hope, their centre man, Hills, was the choice and he gave Rose a merry old battle all the way through. Sandercock attempted roughing it and as a result, he spent most of the time in the penalty box.

Harry Burgoyne handled the game and did so to a nicety.

The teams:

Peterboro—6		Port Hope—5
Darling	goal	Rowden
Long	right defence	Sandercock
Halpin	rover	Forsythe
Rose	centre	Hills
Barrie	left wing	Low
Knapman	right wing	Darch

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

The Boston Exploits and De Laval will play a practice game this evening at Brock Street Rink from 5.30 to 6.30.

The Examiner Route boys defeated The Review Route boys in a game of hockey at Parker's rink, this morning by 8-4. Half time the score was 4-1.

Queen Alexandras were victors over the Central School seven this morning at Brock Street rink, by a score of 6-4.

The Bowmanville club want Thursday's game here postponed till later in the month. Their request will not likely be granted.

There is some talk of securing an experienced coach for the Intermediates.

After the battle, the Port Hope Juniors gave Manager Craig's Cubs last night, the game on Tuesday night at Brock Street rink between the same teams should be exceedingly fast. So far the juniors are following in the footsteps of the Intermediates, and may surprise Kingston next Friday. If they do, they will still be in the running for the district honors, but at that they need Thursday night's game. Come out and give the boys some encouragement in their up-hill fight.

The Junior City Hockey League will meet tonight at 7.30 at the Examiner office.

The Bankers' uniforms have arrived. They are brown trimmed with orange.

NO MERCANTILE LEAGUE GAMES NEXT MONDAY

Teams Will Rest and Help the Hockey Club Excursion.

At the special meeting of the Mercantile Hockey League executive and one representative from each team, held last night in The Review Office, the question of postponing the games on Monday night so as not to conflict with the O.H.A. excursion to Cobourg was dealt with.

After a lengthy discussion the matter was put to a vote and the motion to postpone the games carried. The games of the 19th will be played on the 26th, and the games of 26th played during the week following.

This Beautiful New

is now on display at our showrooms. The new Hupmobile is, we believe, better than anything that has ever before come to us from the factory.

And this is no slight praise—for this new Hupmobile is far, far from being an ordinary car. It is an extraordinary car. A car whose intrinsic value and inherent quality are not expressed in the Hupmobile price.

Bluntly, it is an infinitely better car than the price implies. It is a car of characteristics unusual at the price. You have heard us say: "We believe the Hupmobile to be the best car in its class in the world. We mean that sincerely and strongly.

Every man in our organization is imbued with the conviction that it has no equal in its type and at its price. We stand ready to demonstrate as much to you.

We are prepared to dissect the car for your benefit—to justify the faith that we have by pointing out the precise particulars in which the Hupmobile excels.

We will explain to you that its construction embodies a larger use of aluminum than any other car—at any price in the world.

We will show you that a larger volume of costly steel is engaged in its production than in the construction of any car of like price.

See us to-day. We want the opportunity to prove what we say is true. No cost or obligation.

HELP THE BOYS ALONG TO VICTORY AT COBOURG

The victory of Cobourg over Whitby last night, makes Cobourg the team to beat. The local Intermediates must clean up on Monday night, so to aid in this there should be a big crowd accompany them on their excursion which will leave the G. T. R. depot sharp at seven o'clock. The fare will be $1.25 and as for the trip, well, when was there an excursion to Cobourg that wasn't enjoyed? The good sportsmanship of the officers of the Mercantile Hockey League was shown last night when they decided to postpone the games on Monday night and not interfere with the big excursion. There is no attraction in this city, so every fan who has hockey blood in his veins, should be at the depot on Monday night with the intention of following the team right to the championship. Lawson Whitehead will referee, it is expected.

BUSY TIME FOR LOCALS NEXT WEEK

Peterboro teams will have a big program next week, as follows:

Monday, Peterboro Intermediates at Cobourg.

Tuesday, Port Hope Juniors here.

Wednesday, Bowmanville Intermediates here.

Friday, local Intermediates at Belleville and also the local Juniors at Kingston.

There is no reason why the Intermediates cannot come through with a clean sheet and if they do, they will cinch the district honors.

MISS FLORENCE HINKLE'S GRAND MUSICAL RECITAL

Large Audience at Opera House — A Soprano of Fine Quality—Miss Adamson and Mr. Leo. Smith Ably Support the Singer—Conservatory Orchestra in Great Form

Peterboro people demonstrated last evening that they were not behind the larger cities in their patronage and appreciation of first class music, both by their attendance in large numbers at the Opera House, and by their hearty reception of Miss Hinkle and those who supported her.

The evening's entertainment was all that its promoters had claimed, for it, and the large audience, which nearly filled the Opera House, went away satisfied that they had listened to one of the best concerts that have ever been held in the city.

A Sweet Soprano

There can be no doubt as to the fine gift of song with which Miss Hinkle is endowed. She displayed the beautiful melody of her voice in the first number, "In Verdure Clad," which she sang with delicacy and restraint. Miss Hinkle is a soprano of good range, but she does not sacrifice sweetness to volume. There are sopranos who seem to think that all they have to do is to open their mouth to its utmost extent and emit a shrill sound which is more like a steam whistle than a human utterance.

In her cycle "O Kamn in Traum," "Rosslein," "Chemin de Lune," and "Ariette," Miss Hinkle gave to the audience a charming study in German and French songs. One was able to compare the expressiveness of the two languages. The German is, of course, a little harsh as compared with the smoothness of the French. In response to the encore Miss Hinkle sang "The Land of Sky Blue Waters," and in comparing this with the German and French songs, one could notice that the English language sounded like a mixture of the German and French in its resonance of expression; so that the English language combines the beauties of the Saxon and the Latin.

"All for You," and "When the Sun is Low," were very pretty, but "Will O' the Wisp" charmed the audience and they asked for more. "If my love leaves me, what will I do? hoo-hoo!" was very effectively rendered and Miss Hinkle can be very sportive and naive upon occasion. "A Song of Joy," and another which she gave as an encore, were delightfully and vivaciously sung, and Miss Hinkle bowed to the audience for the last time, amid a storm of applause. She is certainly a charming singer of high quality and she must come to Peterboro again.

A Young 'Cellist

Mr. Leo Smith did not give enough of himself. He only played one suite and the audience gave him a ringing encore. His encore selection was the best. The 'cello is the sweetest of string instruments and is more effective with quiet and rather sad melodies. Mr. Leo Smith takes his work a little seriously, he is not quite at ease at the instrument. All good 'cellists are inclined to stoutness and generally wear a sort of sad, German smile. Mr. Smith will doubtless improve as he matures, he is at present an athletic young man and lacks repose. He is nevertheless an artist in execution and was warmly received.

A Fond Violinist

Miss Adamson plays the violin as if she liked it. Some artists play the violin as if they were in pain and they generally succeed in putting the audience in pain as well. They hold the instrument as if it was trying to get away from them. With Miss Adamson it seems the easiest thing in the world to play the fiddle. She fondles and plays with it as if she loved it, as no doubt she does.

A Fine Orchestra

The Conservatory Orchestra was never in better form. Mr. Gliddon is a master musician and seems to have the whole of each composition boxed up in his body and every player at the end of his finger like an electric button. The Overture to "William Tell" was the finest thing on their program and was splendidly rendered. The "Peer Gynt" suite with its weird, sad Norwegian music, like Norway with its Fjords, was masterly done, as was also the selection from "Faust." It would be difficult to find another orchestra so finely accomplished as this in Eastern Ontario.

Flavelle Competition, 3 p.m.

Winnipeg	Peterboro
Braden........13	Lang. 8

Gillies' Competition 6.30 p.m.

Meaford	Peterboro
Pilgrem.......12	Fitzgerald . 9

The above was the result of the matches in which the local rinks were playing yesterday at the Lindsay bonspiel. Lang and Fitzgerald's rink returned to the city last night.

In this morning's match between Braden of Winnipeg, and Waddell, the former, won out, 17-10. The local rink, it is reported, made a great finish.

This puts all the Peterboro rinks out of the runnings, but they must be complimented on their good showing.

Three Lindsay rinks are still in the competition for the Gillies competition. It is expected that Braden will carry off the Grand Aggregate honors.

GEO. ORT TO LEAD THE LOCAL CANADIAN LEAGUE TEAM ?

ST. THOMAS, Jan. 17.—George R. Ort, who during the season of 1913, led the Saints as near a pennant as they have been in the Canadian League, and who probably came in for more unwarranted panning than any manager of the league, has been appointed manager of the Peterboro Club for the ensuing year, succeeding Davy Rowan.

Mr. Ort has been in communication with the Peterboro management for some weeks and yesterday was called on the long distance phone by President Denham, of that club, who informed him that he had been appointed, and instructed him to go out and get some players.

The statement from baseball headquarters is that no definite appointment has been made.

HOCKEY

Kingston, Jan. 17. — The junior Frontenacs last night trimmed the Ottawa Juniors in an exhibition game by a score of 5 to 1. At halftime the score was 4 to 0 for the winners. The teams:—

Ottawa — Goal, Brown; defence, Kendall and Steers; rover, Deerhurst; centre, Wilson; wings, Ketchum and Davis.

COBOURG 5, WHITBY 3.

Whitby, Jan. 17.—In one of the fastest O.H.A. intermediate games seen here for some time Cobourg defeated the home team by a score of 5 to 3 last night. In quick succession after the game started Cobourg tallied three, but Whitby came back strong with two before half-time. The second period score was 2 to 1 for Cobourg. Arthur Blanchard, Whitby's fast rover, sustained a bruised shoulder, which put him out of the game early, materially weakening the team. The line-up:

Cobourg—Goal, Paton; defence, E. Payne and Duckett; centre, Crowther; rover, Lewis; left wing, Freeman; right wing, Cunningham.

PUBLIC MEETING

A Public Meeting is called for TO-NIGHT in the COUNCIL CHAMBER, at 8 o'clock, to further the interests of Peterborough's claim for Senatorship. WM. BULLER, Mayor

ONE OF ENGLAND'S GREATEST ACTORS

Mr. Martin Harvey to Appear in Peterborough During His All-Canadian Tour.

Mr. Martin Harvey, the famous romantic actor, the greatest of all living English actors, has just arrived in Canada for a tour of this Dominion. This will be the first time that any actor of Mr. Harvey's prominence has paid a visit to Canada direct and confined his itinerary to this country. It also marks the beginning of the all-Canadian tours of the leading lights of the English stage.

In an interview Mr. Harvey had some very interesting things to say about his plans. Among other details he touched upon were the following:

"We are looking forward with the keenist anticipation to our months in Canada in the new year. It must be an inspiring thought to any reflecting Britisher to know that he can make such a tour across the continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and remain from first to last among his own kinsmen and under his own flag.

"To us who have visited every quarter of the Home Country for a number of years, there is the very special interest that in the course of our itinerary through the Dominion we shall meet not a few old friends from England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, who have enrolled themselves in the great army whose marching cry is 'Westward Ho.' May I be allowed to hope that in my own small way I shall also be doing a little towards the cementing of that bond of common aspirations and common memories which is the key note of our Imperialism."

"The Canadian Pacific Railway is managing our tour for us, and is saving us a world of trouble. We are only taking three plays out with us, "The Only Way," "A Cigarette Maker's Romance," and "The Breed of the Treshams"

Mr Harvey has arranged to spend two nights in Peterboro and all those who have seen him before or who appreciate the drama at its best, should not miss this special opportunity.

FINE CONCERT BY ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

Although there were several other attractions on last evening, the monthly social evening of the St. George's Society held in the W. O. W. Hall was the scene of an enjoyable function and was largely attended.

Mr. A. Pitchford presided in the absence of the President, Walter Stocker, who was unable to be present. A resolution of sympathy on motion of Messrs. John and Cooper, was passed. A few days ago Mr. Stocker was the victim of a rather painful accident.

The following program delighted the gathering, the majority of the participants being encored:

Recitation—Mr. J. John.

GRAND TIME WITH KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

The Knights of Pythias Club room, Simcoe Street, was the scene of a delightful and successful function last evening, the occasion being an At Home which was enjoyed to the utmost by the two hundred guests. Dancing and cards and other amusements constituted the evening's program. The club room, also the lodge room decorated in beautiful drapery of blue, yellow and red emblematic of the order, presented a charming appearance.

Special numbers of the evening's program were songs and recitations in which Mr. E. Desautel caught his audience with two select recitations in his usual manner. A solo by Mr. Wainwright was also much appreciated. Mr. E. H. White and H. Allan also contributed to the program. A banjo selection by Mr. F. Clarke was of high merit and by special request, Mr. W. Allen rendered the "Bald Eagle of U. S. A." which by the way, is composed by Mr. Herb. Kendry of this city. The song received considerable attention.

A fancy dance by Mr. Custance received instant approval. The function was brought to a close with the serving of refreshments. Miss M. Gorman presided at the piano.

The K. of P.'s wish to convey their thanks for those who kindly contributed to the evening's entertainment.

Happy is the woman who is pleased with everything, including herself.

It was evident the moment she entered the parlor that he was angry.

"What do you mean by suing me for breach of promise?" he demanded. "I never proposed to you in my life."

"Why, of course you didn't," she answered in a conciliatory tone. "And I wouldn't have accepted you if you had. But you know I am going on the stage, and I must make some preparations."

NOT ALL OF ONE MIND ON QUESTION OF POLICEWOMAN

Board of Police Commissioners Hear Deputation of Ladies Who Are Heavily Armed With Resolutions, Championing Their Cause ---Consideration is Promised

The Committee Rooms of the city building have witnessed some unique petitions presented by various deputations at one time and another, but, probably never before was this room the scene of such an enthusiastic meeting as on Saturday afternoon, when the Board of Police Commissioners were waited upon by deputations of the Women's Council, Ministerial Association and the various Ladies' Aid Societies of the city.

This remarkable occasion was for the presentation of petitions to the Board for the appointment of a woman police officer which for the past few months, has been a popular topic among the ladies of the city. At the conclusion, after several conflicting views of the matter had been discussed between the members of the Board and the ladies, the deputations were assured of the serious consideration of the Board. Mayor Buller also assured the ladies that he would do anything to further the moral interests of the city.

Among those present were Mesdames. Campbell, Chisholm, Mansell, McElheney, Mowat, Neal, Montgomery, Lightfoot, Stevenson, Conway, Campbell, Carruthers, Taylor, Rollins, Davidson, Kendry, Rush, Birnie, Hayes, Travers, Dickson, Waddell, Medd, Roger, and Miss Weir, Adjutant McElheney, Rev. R. G. Peever, Judge Huycke, Chairman of the Board of Police Commissioners, Police Magistrate Dumble, Police Chief Thompson, Mayor Buller.

In addressing the Board, Mrs. Rollins pointed out some very strong facts favoring the appointment of a woman officer. "We are willing to canvass, systematically, the whole city, for names, if that will satisfy," said Mrs. Rollins, who proceeded to point out how the Ministerial Association had passed in favor of the appointment.. The city nurses, who are able to be in touch with some of the sordid conditions existing in the city, were also in favor of it; also they had passed a motion in favor of the appointment. The Health Association and other various societies were all greatly in favor of it, and had expressed their great approval by passing resolutions.

Mrs. Rollins then gave a brief outline of the successful work being carried on in Toronto and other points through the excellent work of the policewoman .

Here Judge Huycke enquired as to the information regarding the appointment at Ottawa, and was supplied with the information. His Honor asked this question owing to the fact that varying reports have been received by local authorities regarding the success of these appointments.

Mrs. Rollins gave several instances where young girls had been accosted on local streets by men. His Honor enquired if any of these cases had been notified to the police department. None of these had, owing to the fact that some of them were just reported to the council a day or so ago, was Mrs. Rollins' reply.

Mrs. Rollins however informed the Board that they had evidence concerning these cases, which could be supplied to the Board at any time.

Mrs. Rollins surprised her audience when she informed them that Peterboro stood second in the number of inmates in Rescue Homes in Ontario.

The various petitions were also enclosed in reports and handed to the Board for further perusal.

Mrs. McElheney gave a vivid account of several instances in this city, of revelations at which she was shocked and astonished. She impressed her gathering considerably, in telling of instances how girls were thrown to the mercies of the world. These are only some of many who go astray. There is a great need of a woman adviser, mother and whole-hearted Christian, who will rush to the rescue at one's downfall. Their work was to protect with the help of the Master, and extend the benefit, was their sole ambition.

Mrs. McElheney, who has been engaged in Christian work for some years, is engaged in similar lines of work in this city in company with her husband, which so far, has been apparently sadly neglected by others.

Mrs. S. T. Medd spoke of the success of a woman police in other centres, and the appointment of one in Ottawa.

Rev. R. G. Peever spoke of the appointment of the woman police officer in Ottawa. Mr. Peever is formerely of Ottawa, where he was connected with probation work for several years and was therefore able to give some instances of the necessity of the appointment of a policewoman. As a stranger he was greatly impressed with the low life in the community.

"The men will have to grip the social life and lift it higher and also the effort of the whole city will be needed to make it better. This will require proper persons with a heart to love and assist in the work."

In a plain outspoken statement, Magistrate Dumble said that this was simply a statement that the world was full of sin. From the earliest day, the evil of impurity had been in the world. "There is not an hour that there is not a constable on the street despite the small force," he said. "It was impossible to get the people to realize this, by asking for more money to increase the force, as they had grumbled about the increased taxes. They object most strenuously to extra expense," said the Magistrate.

"Everything that is sin is not a breach of the law. It must be an illegal offense. That which is not a crime is to be ignored. If an officer finds a girl loitering on the street and she refuses to give a satisfactory account of herself, he may take her away. You speak of the evils of men, it certainly implies bad manners and low immorality, very bad, but what is your remedy? Instruct the parents to bring up their children and to provide against sin. No teacher will take his class into confidence and it is the same with the majority of parents.

"As a council, have you advertised in the papers in which you stated girls would be given advice? Have you ever given money for rescue homes? Numbers of cases have been sent to Toronto through the Salvation Army. It is the only in-

GREAT PHILANTHROPIST IN EVERY SENSE OF THE WORD

Senator Cox Used His Wealth Wisely and Well Says Rev. T. J. Mansell—A Resolution of Condolence From the Charlotte Street Congregation.

At yesterday morning's service in the Charlotte Street Church, the Rev. T. J. Mansell briefly spoke of the death of Senator Cox. While the preacher had not known the deceased, personally, he had been familiar with his many good works for many years in connection with the Methodist Church or Canada.

The preacher was well acquainted with his deep interest in the Charlotte Street Church, where he and his family worshipped for many years. He spoke of his great success in life, and he hoped the day would come when a man might be forgiven for his being successful.

Mr. Cox was a great philanthropist, in every sense of the world, and he used the great wealth which God had given him, wisely and well. Mr. Mansell further said it was not necessary to speak of the life work of the deceased, and his beneficence toward Charlotte Street Church, as many of those in the pews were well acquainted with him and loved him, and in this hour of their great bereavement and trial, he was sure the family would appreciate any expression of sympathy which the congregation would forward them, and he took it upon himself to ask the Rec. Steward, Mr. R. F. Downey, to forward a briefly worded resolution of condolence to the family. The congregation stood up and silently gave assent to the preacher's request.

The Apostles' Creed

At the evening service at Charlotte St., Methodist Church, there was a good congregation to hear the second of Rev. Mr. Mansell's series of sermons on the Apostles' Creed. The first sermon delivered a week ago, dealt with the history of the creed, and the speaker briefly recapitulated the introductory discourse before proceeding to a consideration of the first article. He began by comparison, saying that people got out of the creed just what they brought to it or put into it. Thus, a visitor to the Plains of Abraham would find no meaning of consequence in viewing Wolfe's monument there, did he not bring to it his knowledge of Canadian history and his patriotism.

Mr. Mansell went on to deal with the certainty of God as the author and Creator of the Universe, and concluded with an explanation of the fatherhood of God as the most important aspect of the Divine Being in His relationship to man.

"The Lost Chord" as an anthem, was sung by the choir.

Besides the usual announcements there will be a meeting of districts visitors on Wednesday night and a week from Monday, on Jan. 26th, there will be a meeting of all the men's Bible classes of the Methodist Churches in Peterboro, in Charlotte St., Church, to consider the question of improved police protection.

ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST

If you had a policeman every ten feet, this practice of accosting young girls would still happen, but I will do everything possible and I am going to support anything in sympathy to further the moral interest of the city.—Mayor Buller.

A woman police officer would not be a cure-all for these troubles.—Judge Huycke.

Keep the girls off the streets; that is the starting point.—Magistrate Dumble.

We would get an overwhelming majority if the city were canvassed in favor of, a policewoman.—Mrs. Rev. Rollins.

As a stranger, I am impressed with the low life in the community. —Rev. R. G. Peever.

The responsibility should rest with a man who can do his business. —Adjutant McElheney.

Women have civil rights as well as moral rights.—Mrs. Stevenson.

We are trying to prevent the cause of the necessity for a Home in this city.—Mrs. Jas. Kendry.

REQUIEM HIGH MASS FOR THE LATE BISHOP

At St. Peter's on Thursday and at Sacred Heart on Friday.

A year ago next Friday the Peterboro Roman Catholic Diocese and the city in general was called upon to bear the loss of Bishop O'Connor. An anniversary solemn requiem high mass will be sung for the repose of his soul by His Lordship Bishop O'Brien D.D. next Thursday morning, in St. Peter's Cathedral, at nine o'clock. Owing to the fact that the priests of the diocese could not be present on Friday, because of their various week-end parochial duties, the mass will be celebrated on Thursday instead of on Friday.

At the Church of the Sacred Heart on Friday morning at 7.30 a requiem high mass will also be celebrated for the repose of the soul of the late Bishop.

The men were working for Brennan & Grant, excavating rock for bridge work on Pembroke-Ottawa line of the Canadian Northern. Five of the killed are foreigners. The other three were Jos. Elliott, single; Stephen Truedean, who leaves a wife and three children; Duncan Herron, married, with no children, all belonging to Bristol Mines.

DEPUTATION GO TO TORONTO

To Represent Local Auto Association at Motor League.

Want the Road Between Port Hope and Peterborough Improved.

At the meeting of the local Auto Club held on Saturday afternoon in the Bank of Montreal Chambers, it was decided to send a deputation to Toronto to-day to attend the annual meeting of the Ontario Motor League.

Fully four thousand members are expected to attend this meeting as representatives from all over the province will be in attendance. The meeting will be held in the King Edward Hotel this evening, when a number of new features for the ensuing year will be discussed. The local club are considering the matter of better roads between here and Port Hope and will urge for the expenditure of some of the good roads money in this matter. Various other reforms will also be introduced and discussed. During the discussion at the local meeting on Saturday, the suggestion was made that a strong effort be made to have the fines which amount to thousands of dollars, spent on the roads in the districts in which the fines are imposed.

The taxing of autos according to horsepower and reciprocity in auto licenses between Canada and the United States was also a favorable topic.

On motion of Mr. G. C. Wainwright and Dr. Amys, it was decided that on Jan. 31st, a meeting be held to change the date of the annual meeting. If practicable the annual meeting will be held the same evening.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY COUNCIL

City's Claims for Representation in the Senate

Moved by Ald. Wm. Langford, seconded by Ald. Jos. Saunders:

WHEREAS the City of Peterborough has never had a representative in the Senate of Canada:

AND WHEREAS this City is a very important and commercial and manufacturing centre, is the largest city between Toronto and Ottawa or Montreal, and is the centre of a large and populous district.

RESOLVED, that this Council desires to impress upon the Government of the Dominion the very strong claims which this city has to representation in the Senate, and to respectfully urge upon the Government that a representative from this city should be appointed, to that body:

AND THAT the appointment of Mr. James Kendrey, ex-M.P., who was for five years Mayor of the City, would meet with the general approval of the people.

PETERBOROUGH, January 17. 1914.

The above resolution was passed by Council at a meeting Saturday night.

Ald. A. H. Stratton felt that action such as had been taken, was premature. Senator Cox had just passed away. He had been one of the greatest men in Peterborough and it would have been a more graceful thing to have postponed taking action till a later date.

Mayor Buller replied that he had been approached by a deputation, who requested action by Council. He had put up the same argument, but it was felt that it was a matter for haste. Afterwards Ald. Stratton said he did not wish to be misunderstood. He would be only too pleased to see Mr. Kendrey get the appointment to the Senate. He had always been a good citizen; he had been a good councillor, a good mayor, and he would make a good Senator.

Ald. Duncan was not altogether pleased at the attitude taken by Mr. Kendrey against the city, in its efforts for municipal power. Personally they were good friends.

Mr. Henry Carveth thought that a younger man should be appointed. There were, he said, too many old fogies there now.

"I think you have chosen a worthy man," said Mr. R. W. Travers.

Mr. C. E. Pennefather, president of the Board of Trade, introduced a resolution from the Board of Trade. This resolution was similar to that previously moved and the meeting gave unanimous endorsation. Mr. Peck moved a resolution of regret at the passing of Senator Cox, and sympathy for the late Senator's widow, family and relatives, and it was also carried. Dr. M. A. Morrison also made some appropriate remarks.

A YOUNG LIFE IS CUT SHORT

Death of Max J. Dobbin, Sunday Morning.

The sympathy of citizens throughout the city will be extended to Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Dobbin, in the loss they have sustained by the death of their youngest son, Max Jeffers Dobbin, who passed away at the family residence, Sunday morning.

The nature of his illness precluded almost every hope that he would become well and strong again, but all that medical skill and watchfulness and care could do, was given to him.

The late Max Dobbin was a young man whose prospects for a successful career were very bright and it is particularly sad that he should be called away at the early age of 22 years. He had progressed step by step in the Advertising Department of the C. P. R. at Montreal, and he was within reach of further advancement, when he took ill at that city, in the latter part of last summer. He will be missed not only by his parents and brothers and sisters, but also by a host of young friends. While attending the public school and later the Collegiate Institute, he was always a favorite.

Surviving besides his parents are four sisters, Misses Huldah and Dorothy at home; Daisy at Gladstone, New Jersey; and Mrs. Harry Pope, of Montreal, and two brothers, William G., at home, and Ross L., of Moose Jaw. All are now at home, with the exception of Mrs. Pope, who was unable to come.

The funeral held this afternoon from the family residence, 522 George St., to the Little Lake Cemetery, was attended by many friends and acquaintances. Rev. R. G. Peever officiated. The pall bearers were Messrs. Stanley Pringle, Stanley Madill, Perry Hooper, Harry McGee, Stewart Laing and Bernard Tait, all of whom had been personal friends of the deceased.

Many beautiful floral tributes from friends in the city and in outside points, laid on the casket, among them being an emblem from The Review staff, and an anchor from The Review Printing Co.

AT THE S. A. TEMPLE.

Major Moore and Mrs. Moore conducted the memorial service for the late Geo. Rawling, at the S. A. Temple on Sunday.

Tuesday night the band is holding the fourth annual meeting and banquet.

CITIZEN'S MEETING UNANIMOUS THAT MR. JAS. KENDRY EX-M.P. IS THE MAN

Representative Gathering Applaud and Cheer When His Name is Mentioned

FOR THE SENATE

Mr. E. G. Patterson Moves Resolution to go Before the Dominion Parliament

There was no uncertainty as to the feeling of the large and representative citizens' meeting in the Council Chamber, Saturday night, as to the name to go before the Government with the request that the City of Peterborough be represented in the Dominion Senate. It was Mr. James Kendrey, ex-M.P.

Mayor Buller was voted to the chair and Mr. S. R. Armstrong, as secretary. Mayor Buller briefly explained the object of the meeting and asked for the opinions of the citizens.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., said he had been delighted to read the editorials in the daily papers. The question had not been referred to politically. There was unity on the part of the press and the people, as to the man, who was Mr. James Kendrey. The meeting gave it's approval by hearty applause when Mr. Turner mentioned the name of Mr. Kendrey.

Mr. E. G. Patterson in moving a resolution embodying the object to be attained and the name of Mr. Kendrey, expressed the opinion that the whole city was entirely in accord with the desire that Peterborough should have a Senator and there was no citizen who could more ably represent the citizens than Mr. Kendrey. The resolution was seconded by Mr. R. W. Travers and three cheers were given for Mr. Kendrey.

Mr. L. M. Hayes, K.C., said he felt the citizens were wholly and entirely in accord with the meeting and if all put their shoulder to the wheel and pull together, Mr. Kendrey would be appointed. There was no man more worthy.

Reeve. W. G. Howden assured the meeting that the citizens of North Monaghan were in accord with the resolution. "We all feel and hope that he will be a Senator," said Reeve Howden.

Mr. Geo. Elliott said that Mr. Kendrey's appointment would be satisfactory to all parties in Peterborough. He had heard the question discussed on all sides and Mr. Kendrey was in favor.

Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., said Mr. Kendrey was the leader of the Conservative party in Peterborough. He agreed with the remarks of Mr. Turner. Peterborough would be greatly benefitted by having representative in the Canadian Senate.

Ald. Duffus said it was an extreme matter. There should be no politics and the best man should get the appointment.

There were no negative votes when Mayor Buller put the resolution to the meeting.

CITY COUNCIL EXPRESSES REGRET AT THE DEATH OF SENATOR COX

The following resolution was adopted by the City Council, in session Saturday night:

Moved by Ald. W. J. Johnston, seconded by Al. W. McIntyre:

Be it resolved, that this Council has learned with the deepest regret of the lamented death of the Honourable George A. Cox, Senator, at Toronto. The Honourable Mr. Cox was for many years an esteemed citizen of Peterborough, and by his business sagacity and commendable enterprise took a very large part in laying the foundation for and the building up of the present prosperous city. He took a keen interest in civic affairs and as mayor for five years and a member of the Board of Education for a number of years he gave efficient service to the community. After making his home in Toronto, whither his large financial interests called him, Mr. Cox retained his interest in Peterborough and his valuable advice and assistance were always at the command of those in charge of the city's affairs, and on many occasions he gave most effective assistance. His generosity aided many religious and charitable institutions in this city, as well as in other parts of the country, and his private benefactions showed no less his benevolent disposition. Of a pleasant, genial and unassuming personality, Mr. Cox endeared himself to very many friends who will very keenly feel his loss.

Be it further resolved that this Council, on its own behalf and on behalf of the People of Peterborough, tender to Mrs. Cox and the other members of Mr. Cox's family and his relatives their deep sympathy in the sad bereavement they have been called upon to suffer.

And that Mr. Cox's picture in the City Council Chamber be draped as a token of the mourning of the Council and people of this city.

MEN'S BIBLE CLASS SUPPORT WORK OF WOMEN'S COUNCIL

At the meeting of the Men's Bible Class in Charlotte St. Methodist Church yesterday afternoon, the following resolution was carried unanimously, by the large representation of men present:

RESOLVED—That the men's Brotherhood Bible Class of the Charlotte St. Methodist Church desires to place itself on record as endorsing the motive of the National Women's Council of this city in securing a policewoman and more adequate police protection to guard the welfare of the city.

Further, we desire to announce a combined public meeting of all the Men's Bible Classes of the city churches in the lecture room of Charlotte St. Church, Monday evening, Jan. 26, at 8 o'clock for the furthering of this movement.

REGRETS AT ST. JOHN'S

At Death of Senator Cox, Dr. Beck Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Howard

At St. John's Church on Sunday, Rev. Canon Davidson referred to the remarkable power and hard work seen in the life of the late Senator Cox, which had advanced not only in his own interests, but also the town of Peterboro and the community. His benevolences were widespread, and as were other evidences of his kindness and generous spirit. The congregation of St. John's recalled his handsome gift towards the People's Chimes, which had made possible a larger project and altogether as citizens we mourned the departure of one, whom the town had been unfortunate enough to lose in the midst of his enterprising career, which had been national in aspect.

Canon Davidson also referred to the death of Dr. G. S. Beck of Port Arthur, whom he said, had been one of the leading citizens of that place and was an eminent and enthusiastic physician. As the son of the late rector of Peterboro, his mind had turned at the last, to his old home and city, where at his request, he was buried. He had shown many evidences of professed christian manhood.

Reference was also made to the death of Mrs. Allen, sister of Mr. Robert Fair, who had often worshipped at St. John's and had been closely connected with members of the congregation.

Also mention was made of the death of Mrs. Howard, a recent member of the church, and whose family had been earnest members of the Church in the United States.

FUNERAL HELD TO-DAY

Lieut. Governor and Members of Ontario Government Were Present

Canadian Press Despatch

Governor attended and the Ontario Govrnment and the City were officially represented. The pall bearers were all members of the family. Messages of sympathy in great numbers were received among others, being messages from Sir Wilfred Laurier, Sir MacKenzie Bowell, Senator Lougheed, Hon. Wm. Hartig, Hon. Geo. Graham, Hon. Clifford Sifton, and Sir Thos. Taylor.

COMMUNION FOR SACRED HEART T.A.S.

Rev. J. J. O'Brien Speaks of Good Work Done by the Society.

The members of the Sacred Heart T. A. S. attended 8:30 mass yesterday morning, at the Church of the Sacred Heart, and received holy communion in a body. The mass was celebrated by Rev. J. J. O'Brien, and the reverend pastor also delivered the sermon. His remarks centred upon the great work accomplished by the society and in fact, all other societies whose aim was to do away with the social evil of drinking intoxicating liquors and advocating sobriety.

At the meeting of the T. A. S. in the afternoon, several committees were formed for the purpose of obtaining new members.

FUR COAT FOR REV. R.J. McLAREN

At the close of the service last night the pastor, Rev. R. J. McLaren, was presented with a fur coat by the Young Men's Bible Class. The gift was an expression of appreciation of Mr. McLaren's work in all departments of Gilmour Memorial. The church has progressed very satisfactorily since Mr. McLaren took the pastorate eight months ago.

REV. JAS. ROLLINS CAUSES SMILES AND THEN SOME MORE

He Suggests an Advertisement Noting the Loss of a Plank From the Platform of the New Mayor.

Rev. James Rollins preaching in St. Andrew's church Sunday evening on the subject of "Naboth's Vineyard," convulsed the congregation by some references to the Police Commissioners. King Ahab was determined to get Naboth's vineyard for a vegetable garden. Naboth would not sell. How will Ahab get the vineyard? He will be so disagreeable about the palace that his wife Jezebel will do anything rather than suffer the inconvenience of having a bear in the house. So Jezebel will get the vineyard. How? A week ago I would have said that there is only one way any woman would go about the task. Jezebel will invite Naboth to the Royal Table. She will ply him with all her charms. She will make him think he is the most important man in the kingdom and at the right moment she will renew the request that he sell the vineyard. A week ago I would have said that but even a mere man may learn much in a week.

After all you never can tell what the ladies will do. Why this change? Answer.—The Women's Council; they actually went to the Police Commissioners with arguments, reasons, petitions signed by doctors, nurses, teachers, ministers, prominent public men, business men and women tax-payers !

Had they invited the learned judge, the marvelous magistrate and his honor the mayor, to administer, I do not know what effect it might have had upon the judge and the magistrate, but I am sure his worship the mayor, could never have forgotten his written pledge and "Woman police" plank in his election campaign platform in the short space of just 14 days! Alas, my brother! If I were a member of the Woman's Council I would endeavor to have inserted in the papers this advertisement:—

"Lost, strayed or stolen, sometime between Jan. 3rd, 1914, and Jan. 17th, 1917, One plank labeled, "Police Woman," from Mayor Buller's platform. A reward of One Hundred Dollars will be paid by the Woman's Council for indisputable evidence that the said plank has been found and returned to its place in the said platform and padlocked in such a way as not to get lost again during 1914."

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, JAN. 19, 1914.

THE INSRANCE ACT.

THE BRITISH INSURANCE ACT has now been in force for twelve months and some idea can be formed as to its workability. The Act has still its opponents, the chief of which seem to be the insurance societies many of these are said to be approaching insolvency. The London Times attacked the measure declaring that it has not fulfilled its promises. On the other hand there are those who claim that the act has been a remarkable success. That the doctors have ceased to oppose it and doctors and chemists have greatly benefited by its operations. £13,000,000 was paid out during the year ; £5,720,000 on sick and benefit, £4,400,000 to doctors for medical treatment, £1,050,000 on drugs and appliances, £1,500,000 on maternity benefits, and £250,000 on the treatment of consumptives, while a large number of consumptives have been sent to sanitariums, about 150,000.

It would appear from this that the State Insurance in Great Britain has come to stay. Lloyd George is not a man to be put down when he once gets a notion into his head. He accomplished Old Age Pensions without the slightest difficulty, a reform which had been promised by other statesmen for years and thought to be almost impossible. Whether one believes in the little Welsh attorney or not it must be admitted that he is a man who does things and laughs at impossibilities.

AT LUNCHEON.

J. HAM LEWIS, an American Senator, made quite a stir at a London Club luncheon the other day by an attack upon the British Mexican policy. The following is an account of the incident as reported from London:

More than 100 Americans present at the weekly luncheon of the American Luncheon Club wildly cheered and applauded a veiled but obvious attack on Sir Lionel Carden and Britain's Mexican policy, made by Senator J. Ham Lewis, American delegate to the Conference on Safety at Sea, and the club's guest of honor.

Speaking immediately after an Under-Secretary of the British Admiralty, who expressed the conventional hope that Amercia and Britain would always be united in the lasting bonds of peace. Senator Lewis said:—"President Wilson desires friendship and peace with all nations but how can there be peace with a nation that is inciting our neighbors to war on our borders? President Wilson's policy is peace with honor, but honor first. It must be honor even without peace."

This is wild talk, and of course does not represent the feeling of reasonable Americans. It leaves the American President open to the criticism that he can shake his fist in the face of Europe, while at the same time he is playing a timorous waiting game with Mexico. If Mr. Ham Lewis had made his luncheon speech in Huerta's territory he would not have had time to digest the wine that got into his head on this festive occasion, for he would have had a few bullets in reply. Let these windy senators go to Mexico to dine.

MR. BORDEN AND THE SENATE.

A GREAT DEAL of speculation is going on as to the probable character of the new session just opened at Ottawa. Parliament has been opened in a formal and uneventful way, and some people think that we are for a dull session. There was certainly an absence of anything startling in the Speech from the throne ; several controversial matters were entirely ignored and no mention was made of the subject which has been agitating the minds of the public for the last twelve months—the naval problem.

The Governor General possibly had a good hand in the making up as well in the delivery of the Speech. He is a past-master in state affairs, and inherits the royal qualities of his gracious mother, Queen Victoria, who could rule without ostentation and win her way into the confidence of her advisors. There is really no need for any flourish, or for a sensational announcement upon the naval question. Mr. Borden and his Cabinet have made up their minds upon the matter. It is little use to announce a "permanent" policy as a Government, if you cannot possibly carry it into effect. Under present circumstances the Government's hands are tied by a Senate that was created by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and which obeys its creator's commands. On all important legislation Sir Wilfrid Laurier still holds the ultimate power of yea or nay, because the highest Legislative Chamber is virtually under his domination.

In saying this we do not wish to cast any slur upon the ex-Premier. Indeed it may well be taken as a compliment, for great statesmen have always been more or less autocratic and often despotic, only by this means have they ever done anything worth doing. We may speak as we like of "Democracy," "Government of the people, for the people and by the people"—that is all platitude, and the man who uttered it oftenest was himself one of the most egotistical and autocratic and at the same time the noblest statesman that ever presided over the United States—Lincoln.

The true statesman puts a plan before him and sets out with a fixed determination to accomplish it ; he is not easily turned aside by a clamorous opposition. He tests his own strength, and if he is at the head of a Government he makes up his mind to GOVERN and not be governed by the relict of the power of a dead Government, no matter how illustrious it may have been. Mr. Borden has his mandate from the people, he was given the reins of power for a period of years and he is responsible for the safe conduct of all the affairs of the Dominion and its relation to the Empire.

The Senate as it is at present composed is obsolete, it was discredited by the people along with the Laurier Government two years ago. It has proved itself a partial chamber and out of sympathy with the great body of public opinion. No Conservative or anti-Laurier Government can hope to accomplish anything of importance that does not bow to the cast-iron notions of the Upper House as it is just now constituted.

That is why Mr. Borden has not opened Parliament with a bugle-call to battle. The fight is to go on, but it is to be civilized warfare (if there is such a thing). The guerilla tactics indulged in last session by the Opposition must not be repeated. Canada has already lost much of her credit in the eyes of the Empire and of the world. We must get back to sanity. We have yet much work to put into the basis of our constitution. We can well afford, for the time being, to leave the defence of our coasts and commerce to the very efficient care of the great Empire Navy, and we can and must acknowledge our obligations in this regard. Mr. Borden has promised to support the British navy and he can be relied upon to fulfil his promise, despite all the machinations of his chagrined opponents.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A MAN SAID the other day that you could buy an Englishman for three dollars. Some of them and a few Canadians thrown in are dear at that price.

THERE ARE AT LEAST two harvest seasons in Canada, at present the ice-men are busy reaping the harvest of the cold snap. They are not afraid of their crops being nipped by the frost. What they don't like is the thaw.

DR. BRIDGES, the Poet Laureate, has a brother who writes verse. As there are seldom two poets in one family (fortunately), this brother is not of much account. His rhymes are very flat. He has written an onslaught upon Premier Asquith. He is possibly a little jealous of his honored brother.

THE OTTAWA FREE PRESS congratulate its Conservative contemportry the Evening Journal upon its acquisition of new premises. The editor of The Press expresses his delight at the fact that The Journal offices are "again established within a stone's-throw of us." The stone-throwing will, of course, begin forthwith.

MR. NORTHUP it asking for legislation to reform the divorce system. The average cost of a divorce bill is about one thousand dollars. This is surely a disproportionate amount as compared with what it costs to get married. But it is always easier to tie a knot than to untie one. Perhaps it would be as well not to tie the knot so tightly—alas !

THERE IS A GREAT DEAL of speculation going on just now as to the probable successor of Sir James Whitney in the Premiership. It is evident that Sir James is in no shape to go on with his political duties, that is sadly admitted. He has done a great work and the people an inestimable service. He has shown all Canada that a clean government is what the people want. We must have a man, whoever he be, of equal ability and character to succeed Sir James; none other would gain general popular approval. The two names that are just now being mentioned as possible successors are Hon. W. J. Hanna and Hon. Adam Beck.

An Effective Weapon.

From La Patrie.

In considering the prospects of the session sight should not be lost of the fact that the Government has now an effective weapon against obstruction, pure and simple, the efficacy of which has been proven, the closure. Boots.

By Our Own Poet.

When night falls in my hotel room—and elsewhere by the way ;
When chickens nodding on their roosts speak of the close of day.
And I'm preparing for my sleep in No. 24,
I pause and listen to the sounds my neighbor makes next door.

He sits upon his creaking bed whose springs complain and jump,
And on the rugless floor a boot falls with a solid thump
That makes me sit with straining ears and listen through the wall—
I cannot move or think until I hear the other fall.

The long delay gets on my nerves ; me teeth together grate—
It's awful that the cuss should make a nervous neighbor wait.
But only one boot hits the floor—O, sword of Damocles,
Thy threatened fall was nothing when compared with things like these.
For I must sit with wide-stretched ears until, when hours have gone,
It's plain my neighbor's gone to bed, and still has one boot on.

DIETING

By Walt Mason

When ailments through your system buzz, and aches are running riot, the first thing that the doctor does has ref'rence to your diet. He asks you what you like to eat, his face all stern and wooden ; you tell him fish and fowl and meat, and pie and cake and puddin'. "Cut out all that," you hear him say ; "no wonder that you totter ! You'll eat a bran mash every day, and nothing drink but water." No matter what my trouble is, when I go to the sawbones, he hands me out the same old biz from grim, unyielding jawbones. "Cut out the pie, cut out the cake," I always hear him mutter, "if you would shed your pesky ache, cut out the cheese and butter," I diet for the jumping gout, I diet for lumbago ; I have to cut the good things out, and live on rice and sago ! I'm fond of grub that's good and rich, that in the stomach tingles ; but I must diet for the itch, and diet for the shingles. I'm living now on horse's fare (that's why I weep the briny), attempting to restore some hair to my old scalp so shiny. I wonder why the blooming docs don't change their medication ? They now accept a patient's rocks and then prescribe starvation.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

MONDAY, JANUARY NINETEENTH

Sir William Mulock, now chief justice of the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice of Ontario, formerly Postmaster-General of Canada, celebrates his seventy-first birthday to-day. It was during his term as head of the post office department that penny postage was introduced and under him the labor department was established. For both these services he merits the thanks of his fellow Canadians. When in the political arena few were better known or more popular than he. In North York which he represented for fourteen years, he was known practically to every family throughout the riding and took a warm personal interest in the progress of the people irrespective of their political leanings. It is quite safe to state that he could have represented North York indefinitely. His hobby is farming and he owns a splendid farm near Newmarket, where he frequently entertains prominent guests.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—

Are you newspapers as green as you look when you print interviews with multimillionaires praising our banking and other financial systems? What do the people say who contribute from 18 to 22 per cent. and sometimes 500 per cent. to various outcroppings of "our great financial systems." Go easy on that kind of reading, Mr. Editor, unless you put it in the funny column.

Yours truly,
READER.

THE BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA

The Bank of Nova Scotia's eighty-second statement appears in this issue. Owing to changes in the form of statement made necessary by the recent revision of the Bank Act, comparisons with last year's figures cannot readily be made. However, it may be noted that the total assets have increased from $71,279,298.95 to $80,151,829.99 during the year. Liabilities to the public (deposits, notes outstanding, etc.,) total $62,686,436.27. The holdings of coin and legal tender amount to $10,440,849.08. Notes of and checks on other banks, balances due by banks, and banking correspondents, including Sterling Exchange, amount to $7,885,463.07, and other readily available assets such as call loans and investments are held to the extent of $20,746,796.20. So it can be seen that against the Bank's total liabilities to the public it holds in cash 16 per cent, in immediately availables 29 per cent., and in quick assets 62 per cent. This is a very strong showing and should be viewed with satisfaction by the shareholders and depositors.

Net profits for the year after losses by Bad Debts are estimated and provided for, amount to $1,210,774.39, as compared with $970,544.28 a year ago. These profits are distributed in the payment of dividends at the rate of 14 per cent., amounting to $814,504.60, contribution to the Officers' Pension Fund $50,000, written off Bank Premises, $150,000, and transferred to the Reserve Fund $110,000, leaving a balance of $41,124.27 to carry forward.

The paid-up capital has been increased by an issue of new stock and by the Capital Stock of the Bank of New Brunswick, from $4,734,390 to $6,000,000. The Reserve Fund, with the addition of the Reserve of the Bank of New Brunswick $1,796,000. Premium received on new stock $371,854, and an appropriation from Profit and Loss of $110,000, is brought to an even $11,000,000.

The Shareholders of this sound old institution must be pleased indeed to note that their bank has so well maintained its position during the year 1913. Mr. A. F. Tomlin is manager of the local branch, George St., Peterboro.

THE WEALTH OF ONTARIO

Kingston British Whig Thanks The Review for its Revelation of the Riches of the Trent Valley District.

The following editorial appeared in the Kingston Whig of Saturday:

The Peterboro Review, in a series of articles, shows how rich is the Trent Valley in ores which only await the use of capital before surprising the world with their wealth. This wealth is now easily accessible, through the recent railway extensions, and the cost of power has been, in some instances, wonderfully reduced by the installation of Hydro-Electric plants. "Many important sections," it is added, "yet remain undeveloped and available to the prospective manufacturer."

The Review is to be thanked for the revelations which it has made of the riches of the district in minerals and in inviting the attention of capitalists to them. Far off fields are sometimes green, and men of money are allured by the talk of them, and they eagerly, even recklessly, invest in schemes which turn out badly. Nor are these investors confined to the merchants of the city, guileless as some of them are. Within a year the farmers of the district which is discussed by The Review have put $50,000 into undeveloped and worthless property in the United States and Western Canada. And all the while at their hand, there are the materials that dug out of the ground represent enormous returns.

An engineer reverts to the water powers that through Eastern Ontario are going to waste. He remarks: "I seriously think that the development of a number of smaller powers that are scattered throughout the district would do more good than the installation of a single long transmission scheme, but anyway if conservation is carried out properly, all powers will be benefitted." The Hydro-Electric Commission is not clothed with the authority, as some supposed, to take possession of all these small powers and examine into their value. In the east it is looking for some great power, and ignoring or overlooking the smaller powers which are at its disposal.

The Napanee river has invited attention and if the commission passed upon the importance of its power—and the possibility of increasing it many fold by connection with the falls north of its present reservoirs—the present troubles with the settlers in two townships would disappear, or a means would be found of satisfactorily disposing of them. All around us lies the wealth of minerals and water power, and one is inclined to forget about them in his dreams of something which is beyond his reach.

GOOD ADVERTISING PAYS.

Before You Can Reap a Harvest You Must First Sow the Seed.

The ordinary newspaper or periodical reader doesn't dream of the potency of good advertising. One of the largest general advertisers in the United States, if not quite the largest, is a manufacturer in the Philadelphia metropolitan district.

There is a never ending race at that plant between the advertising department and the builders. The advertisers bring in so much business that the builders are kept busy enlarging the factory.

Something like $1,000,000 a year is spent in advertising this company's output, which is a luxury in every sense. At the present moment orders for new business are so far ahead of the capacity of the plant that it would seem a hopeless job ever to catch up But the advertisers never relax.

The head of that great concern now knows almost better than anybody else that before you can reap a harvest you must first sow the seed. The advertisers are the chaps that are doing that.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Where Red Hair Is Disliked.

In Cornwall, particularly the Land's End district, it is not advisable to dub a person "a red haired Dane," though in most parts of England, especially inland, the expression would as likely as not provoke no comment at all or be regarded as simply frivolous.

At a police court case heard in 1867 at Penzance town hall it came out in evidence that the defendant had called the complainant "a red haired Dane," and this led to an assault. The strong repugnance of Cornishmen to be dubbed by this strange appellation is as strong as ever.

The Celtic nations hated the Danes and were always fighting them. And not only in Cornwall, but also all along our coasts, where the Danes or Norsemen made their ravages, this deep rooted prejudice against people with red hair, "red headed," more or less remains ingrained in the national character.—J. Harris Stone in "The English Illustrated."

"Captain Charlie"

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

To begin at the beginning, Charles F. Thorpe was the son of an innkeeper near Cheltenham, England, and at the age of eighteen had the reputation of being a roysterer. He did not drink or gamble, and no one could say that he was dishonest or unfilial, but he craved adventure and was constantly in trouble.

He accidentally shot a gamekeeper and was sent to the penal colony at Botany Bay, Australia. He escaped from there and became a bushranger. I was herding sheep on the Bogan river when one evening young Thorpe walked in on me. He was in good health, full of good nature, and his convict life had not hardened his heart.

Young Thorpe had no sooner taken to the bush than he was given the title of "Captain Charlie." For the first seven or eight months he had no companions. During this time all his work was on the highway. He held up several stages and half a hundred lone travelers and on three occasions shot men from their saddles. He had the reputation of being brave to recklessness and of being a "square man." He would not rob a poor man, nor would he shoot unless fired upon first. If he stopped a stage and there were women passengers he treated them with the utmost courtesy. He would take nothing from a settler without paying for it, and now and then he gave them warning that the natives were out on a raid and gave them time to prepare for defense.

He would probably have continued to work alone had it not been for an escaped convict named Treat. This man was thoroughly vicious and had not one redeeming trait. In escaping from the penal settlement he killed two of the guards, and he was no sooner in the bush than he gathered around him five or six other hard cases and began a merciless war on all outsiders.

In three months they killed eight travelers, settlers and herders, and, not content with highway robbery, they looted stores, taverns and farmhouses and applied the torch in sheer wantonness. Looking upon "Captain Charlie" as a namby pamby fellow, who was unworthy of being called a bushranger, they sought to hunt him down. In self defense he organized a band of his own, numbering five, and, though they were pretty tough fellows, he held them well in hand and would permit no violence when it could be avoided. The first meeting between the two bands took place on my range.

Treat had somehow heard that I was friendly to "Captain Charlie." He made a night ride of thirty-five miles with his band to kill me and destroy the herd. The captain heard of his intentions, and just at sunrise one morning both bands rode out of the scrub within fifty rods of my hut. A fight took place at once, and within ten minutes Treat's band was driven off with the loss of three men. "Captain Charlie" had one man killed and two wounded.

An adventure much talked of through New South Wales was the "bailing up" of sixteen mounted police, who had followed "Captain Charlie" and three of his men into the hills. Worn out with thirty hours of hard riding, the entire band fell asleep at night in their camp. The bushrangers crept in on them and ran off their horses and removed every firearm and then vanished. Every one could have been killed while he slept, but no one was harmed.

On another occasion "Captain Charlie" learned that two bushrangers who had lately set up in business in his territory had made prisoners of three men and their wives, who were traveling by stage, and were holding them in the hills for ransom. He made a ride of forty miles with his men, hunted through the hills for two days and finally found the captives. As the bushrangers refused to give them up without ransom, the captain paid over to them the sum of $2,000 in gold and escorted the grateful people to the nearest farmhouse. He then returned and warned the two trespassers to leave his territory, and while making their way north they were captured by the police.

In only one instance did the chevalier of the bush betray a spirit of revenge. A settler whom he had several times befriended put the police on his track, and in escaping pursuit he rode his favorite horse to death. Later on he captured his betrayer on the highway and tied him to a tree and gave him a terrible whipping.

For a period of two years and a half "Captain Charlie" held full sway in the district, hotly pursued most of the time, but always escaping, but at last his time came, as it came to all others of his ilk. There was a quarrel in his band, and it divided. He came to my hut with a companion one night at midnight, and after I had prepared them a meal they lay down and slept till daylight. Meanwhile the men who had broken away got word to the police, and at daylight the bluecoats were in ambush around the hut. As the two men stepped out they were shot down in their tracks, and both were dead when the officers got them. Somewhere among the hills "Captain Charlie" had planted plunder, believed to amount to $30,000; but, though it has been searched for by scores of men for the last thirty-five years, it has never been found.

BEAT THE GAS METER.

It Was a Cold Swindle, and the Company Paid For the Secret.

The most adroit scheme yet reported to beat the gas meter and get gas for nothing was discovered in Honolulu, and its success was due to the use of a modern scientific laboratory apparatus. The customer was supplied with gas coming through a common quarter in the slot meter, a quarter dropped into the meter supplying gas to the burners until a quarter's worth of the illuminant has been used, when the flames begin to die out and warn the customer that another quarter is required. The collectors for the Honolulu company regularly opened this meter to take out the expected quarters, but they never found any. A watch kept on the house showed that gas was being used every night. The customer explained it by saying that he was using gas as he had done for years, but that he did not drop any quarters in the slot because the gas kept coming without them. A new meter was put in, but the next collection trip did not bring any quarters, nor were there slugs or any other substitutes found in the meter. Every few days then a newly tested meter was put in, but the customer continued to use gas, and the company found no quarters.

At last the company surrendered and offered to pay the customer a sum of money if he would tell his scheme, promising not to prosecute. He agreed and took the inspectors to his little laboratory. First he showed a little mold to cast disks about the size of quarters. In this he poured water, and then in a few seconds, by means of an ether spray freezing machine, such as is in common use in science, he froze the water. Thus he had an ice disk the size of a quarter. This was dropped into the meter slot, and the gas came.

The ice melted inside of the meter, and the few drops of water quickly ran out, leaving no trace of his trick.—Saturday Evening Post.

HORSEPOWER.

Origin of the Term as Applied to the Steam Engine.

Among many engineers there arises discussion as to the incidents surrounding the origination of the term horsepower as applied to the steam engine. The following quotation from "Farey on the Steam Engine," published in 1827, will be welcomed by many:

"The machinery in the great breweries and distilleries in London was then moved by the strength of horses, and the proprietors of those establishments who were first to require Mr. Watt's engines always inquired what number of horses an intended engine would be equal to.

"In consequence Mr. Watt made some experiments on the strong horses employed by the brewers in London and found that a horse of that kind, walking at the rate of two and one-half miles an hour, could draw 150 pounds avoirdupois by means of a rope passing over a pulley, so as to raise up that weight, with a vertical motion, at the rate of 220 feet per minute. This exertion of mechanical power is equal to 33,000 pounds (or 528 cubic feet) of water raised vertically through a space of one foot per minute, and he denominated it a horsepower, to serve for a measure of the power exerted by his steam engines."

This estimate is much beyond the capacity of the average strong horse. Smeaton and other early engineers estimated that 22,000 pounds per minute was more accurate.—Power.

Napoleon's St. Helena Home.

Napoleon's last home on the island of St. Helena is in a deplorable condition. The doors are open night and day. All the rooms are empty, save the one in which the exiled emperor breathed his last. This contains a small altar and a bust of the conqueror of Europe. The historic house is going to rack and ruin. Longwood and the surrounding grounds, including the first tomb of Napoleon, were purchased from the British government by Napoleon III. in 1858. The French government still pays a caretaker, but no funds for upkeep are provided.

An Unfortunate Drawback.

A detective was trying to get a few facts from the man who had employed him to hunt for a runaway boy. "Has he any distinguishing marks about him?" he asked.

"Yes," said the father, frowning impatiently. "The distinguishing mark about him, sir, is that he looks like me."

"H'm," mused the detective; "I should scarcely call that a distinction. That's a handicap!"

My Career

By EDNA WOOLWORTH

In these days poor girls fit themselves for a life of labor because they expect to be obliged to support themselves, and wealthy girls—at least some of them—because they don't relish a choice between matrimony and idleness. I belong to the latter class. One autumn not many years ago I, then twenty years old, thoroughly imbued with the belief that all men were selfish and if I wedded the man I married would take me for my fortune and, having spent it, desert or ill treat me, decided to go to the city and prepare myself for a career.

I belonged to several societies in my native town, one of which was devoted to the cause of temperance. Our badge was a bit of blue ribbon tied in the buttonhole of the men members and somewhere on the corsage of the women. I was an enthusiastic advocate of the temperance cause and always wore my colors.

The day I alighted from the train on my quest for a career a young man with a pleasing face and as pleasing a smile on it stepped up to me and, taking from me a satchel I carried, said:

"Here you are, Cousin Bess!"

Now, my name happened to be Elizabeth. Had it not been so I should have probably told the young man that he was mistaken in the person. As it was, I thought for a moment that some of my numerous cousins living in the city whom I had never seen had got wind of my coming and had concluded to meet me.

"You are"— I asked.

"I'm Ned Olcott. We received your letter mentioning the blue ribbon. Everything is prepared for you. We have succeeded in getting a position for you in the high school. You're to teach history. I believe that's what you wanted, isn't it?"

We were moving with the throng and by this time had reached the station exit. There was something so ingenuous, so kindly, as well as dignified, in the young man's face and manner that my heart went right out to him. I was seized with a curiosity to know what he would do with me. I hesitated a few moments whether I would inform him of his mistake or delay. Meanwhile he called a cab, and the driver came dashing up to the curb.

"Are you sure?" I began and stopped.

"Quite so. Mother said I was to bring you straight home. Get in."

I yielded. After all, was not this a relative? At any rate, I would act for awhile as if he were. Perhaps he was. He drove me to a modest dwelling standing well back from the street, with very white curtains and some well polished brass at the front door. An old lady, with a lovable face and snow white hair, backed by two young girls, received me, welcoming me with a kiss.

"Why, Cousin Bess," exclaimed the elder girl, "how you've changed! You don't look at all as you did when we played together ten years ago."

"Elizabeth must be tired and hungry. Helen, show her to her room. Dinner will be ready in half hour."

I was glad to escape, for that time at least, from my equivocal position. Helen left me to think over what I should do. I had gone so far that any course I might pursue would result in mortification. I would not be able to make these kind persons believe that I had been drawn into their brother's mistake. I was sure there was a mistake, for just before going upstairs I had been asked how I had left my stepmother, and I had no stepmother.

I was too confused to make much of a toilet. I employed my time trying to think of a way out of my dilemma. Not finding any way to suit me, I resolved to await a favorable opportunity to make it appear that I had been taken up by relatives that I had never seen. When the half hour had passed I went downstairs, and there in traveling dress stood the real Bess, the mother, the son and the two daughters regarding her as if not knowing what to make of her. As I entered the room they looked at me, equally dumfounded. I saw that the denouement had come. I noticed that my double wore a blue ribbon.

"Which of you is Elizabeth?" asked the mother.

"Elizabeth what?" I asked.

"Elizabeth Stanton, of course."

"I am Elizabeth Elliot," I said.

"And I am Elizabeth Stanton," said the newcomer.

For a moment I affected to be much puzzled, then said: "I had my doubts about the gentleman being my cousin, but I have relatives in the city I have never seen and supposed he might be one of them. But since my arrival I have come to believe a mistake has been made."

"You took away my escort," said the other Cousin Bess, smiling, "and I have been obliged to find my way here alone. I see you wear the blue ribbon agreed upon."

"That is a society decoration," I informed her.

"Young ladies," said the mother, "dinner is waiting. Come and partake of it, both of you."

That was not the last dinner I took in that house by any means. Indeed, I now go there frequently because the old lady is my mother-in-law and her daughters my sisters-in-law. The real Bess is also my friend. She has followed the career of a teacher, and I was turned from my intention, to become a wife and mother.

The typical French dish is always garnished.

[illegible] S YOU WELL.

If Yo[illegible] Malady Others Will G[illegible] Wide Berth.

Peculiar [illegible], some of the diseases that a[illegible] n are most beneficial if only m[illegible] n throw them off.

Take smallpox, [illegible] most virulent disease indeed. Yet if you recover from this malady it seems to give quite a new lease of life, and certain it is that those who have had smallpox usually live to ripe old age, and what is more rarely suffer from any other troubles.

Again, typhoid fever is a malignant disease altogether, but it has its good points—if you recover. For example, suppose you have been an acute sufferer from indigestion, and contract typhoid fever. On recovery you will find that your indigestion is a thing of the past. And, what is more you will never again be troubled by it, granted always that you are careful. Typhoid fever renews the stomach—in fact, it gives one the stomach of an infant again in very many cases.

Bronchitis—a nasty trouble; that is chronic bronchitis. Now this trouble can be of great service to you, although the statement may seem strange. But if you have chronic bronchitis you are uncommonly careful of yourself; you coddle yourself a bit, and see that you are well protected from cold. The same applies to an ordinary cold, of course.

But bronchitis is of special benefit to people up in years, for it keeps the blood moving—each time the sufferer coughs puts a slight strain on the heart, and very naturally this assists the blood in its circulating through the body. As a matter of fact, chronic bronchitis keeps the heart of elderly persons working away quite nicely.

Rheumatism! Quite a horrible malady! But a useful one, too. Persons afflicted with rheumatism usually live to a green old age. Why? Well, if you have rheumatism you are not liable to contract other troubles. Indeed, rheumatism seems to act as a protection against many of the ills that flesh is heir to, and the result is that the rheumatic person keeps in very good general health.

Pearls Are Good Investment.

So great has been the rise in the price of pearls during the last 15 years that it is estimated a necklace bought for $100,000 at the end of the 19th century might now be expected to fetch $1,000,000.

With the constant increase of wealth the value of pearls is likely to continue to increase and a good collection may be regarded as one of the most profitable of investments.

The surface of a pearl is a sure test of its genuineness. The real pearl has a wrinkled skin, while the imitation, one if rubbed on another surface, slips along easily. To scratch a false pearl is to have the same sensation as if one scratched one's teeth with a finger nail.

His Honor Vindicated.

A couple of good-natured Frenchmen got into a quarrel and challenged each other to fight. On the morning of the duel they and their seconds tramped through the woods to the fatal spot, when one of the duelists, the challenging party, tripped and fell. His second helped him to his feet.

"I hope you are not much hurt," said the other duelist.

"I'm not much hurt, I only bumped my nose on the ground."

"Does it bleed?"

"Yes, a little."

"Heaven be praised! Blood flows, and my honor is vindicated. Give me your hand, old boy!"

Reason For Pride.

"But," she objected, "you must remember that one of my ancestors came over in the Mayflower. I am afraid my people would object to you on the ground that your grandfather was an immigrant. We descendants of the pilgrims are very proud of our stock, you know."

"Well, I suppose you have a right to be. I've got three or four descendants of pilgrims working for me, and they seem to be good, honest fellows."

Breton Pigs.

The Breton pig is not fat and indolent like ours. He is as lean and fiery as a wolf and twice a wolf's size. All over Brittany you see him, swaggering up and down the white roads in search of roots, berries, frogs, anything—for he must forage for himself—his master never feeds him. Step out of his way or he will snarl and leap at you.

He—What has made the professor so wild?

She—Oh, he was gassing about botany, and so I asked him if he had ever seen a pink palm. He said, "No," and I showed him my hands.—London Telegraph.

GRANDPA'S REMINISCENCES.

When grandpa gets his scrap book out
We have to sit around
And listen while he talks about
Things joyous or profound,
How Grant became a president,
And Patti—how she sang,
And how some old election went
To beat some ancient gang.

The various scandals and the fights
Which flourished in his youth
Are his particular delights
They make us yawn in truth.
But grandpa knows them all by heart.
His pleasures are so few
That when his memory makes a start
We have to hear him through.

We have our heroes nowadays
And singers wondrous sweet;
Men struggle in the public gaze
To glory or defeat;
With interest the world's a-thrill,
But grandpa gravely quotes
And really thinks it has stood still
Since he quit taking notes.

The Test.

"How," the president of the Fat Man's club was asked, "did you prevent fraud among your applicants for members? Didn't some men try to get in that weren't up to the standard weight?"

"Yes," the portly officer replied, "but it was no use. Applications had to be presented in person at the Polk building, fifth floor. There was no elevator. The applicant climbed the five flights of stairs. At the top he met a man who asked, 'Were you looking for the Fat Man's club?'

"'Yes.'

"'The main office is on the first floor,' the man said. 'Your application is rejected. We receive no man who can climb five flights of stairs.'"—Weekly Telegraph.

There will be small opposition to Secretary McAdoo's abolition of "V's" as used for "U's" in inscriptions on public buildings so long as they are retained on the currency.

MOTHER IS PROSTRATED

She Was Powerless to Save Her Six Children From the Flames

The Lindsay Post gives further particulars of the destruction of a home and five children at Coboconk:

The fire occurred about two o'clock and was supposed to have been caused by an overheated stove or defective chimney. The Weatherby residence, a frame structure, was situated near the O.T.R. station and Gull River Lumber Co's Mills. No one noticed the fire until it was a veritable inferno. Mrs. Weatherby was roused by the crackling of the flames, and when the terrible fact dawned upon her that the interior was in flames, her first thought was of her six little ones sleeping in different parts of the house. It was impossible, however, for the frantic mother to rescue even one of them, and with the cruel flames fast hemming her in, she made a rush for an upstairs window and barely escaped in her night clothes.

The poor mother is prostrated with grief and cannot be comforted. She is badly cut and burned, especially about the hands, and her grief over the loss of her six little ones is pitiable to behold. Kind friends are doing all in their power for the unfortunate woman.

Burned to a Crisp.

This morning a search was made in the ruins for the remains of the little children but they were burned to a crisp. All day long the scene of the fire was visited by a number from village and district, and several were visibly affected as they gazed upon what was the evening before a happy home with six bright, intelligent children.

Mrs. Weatherby has been a resident of Coboconk a year and a half. Previous to this she lived in Toronto, where her late husband was a jeweler. She was held in high esteem by the residents of Coboconk who are stunned by the sad tragedy.

Coboconk has been the scene of two distressing fatalities during the past few weeks. It was in December that the two Whyte children went to their death in the icy waters of Mud Turtle Lake. Then follows the Weatherby tragedy—the worst in the history of this portion of the Province.

The first villager to notice the fire was the nightwatchman at the G. T. R station. The interior of the house was a fiery cauldron, however, so that it was impossible to rescue any of the inmates. The children occupied sleeping apartments over the kitchen.

THE CHURCH AND THE UNEMPLOYED

Taking as his subject "The Church and the Unemployed," Rev. J. R Webb said at the Sunday evening service at Murray Street Church that the present situation will be greatly helped if Christian people see to it that the price of whatever they control is brought down to the lowest possible point. I do not care whether it is coal, eggs or the expenses of the Church. The minister who declines to accept an increase of salary when the workingmen in the pews are financially embarrassed, thereby preaches a sermon much more eloquent than any he delivers from the platform.

SIR JAMES WHITNEY IS BROUGHT BACK TO TORONTO

Patient Stood the Journey Fairly Well--Examination at New York Showed More Improvement Than Expected

TORONTO, Jan. 19.—The train with Sir James Whitney aboard, arrived here about nine o'clock this morning. The stretcher on which the Premier was laid, was taken through a window in the pullman car.

No bulletin has been issued, regarding Sir James' condition, but Dr. Pyne stated that the Premier stood the journey fairly well.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—Sir James Whitney, who has been ill of heart disease at the Manhattan Hotel since Dec. 14, left for Toronto last night on a special car attached to the New York Central train leaving the Grand Central station at 8.05 p.m.

On the train with him are Lady Whitney, Dr. R. A. Pyne and Horace Wallis, the Premier's private secretary.

Dr. Pyne issued the following official statement last night:

"Sir James Whitney's condition remains practically unchanged, although he is somewhat stronger than he was a few days ago. As the outlook for any material improvement in the immediate future is most uncertain, and as he has been most anxious to be at home among his own people, his physicians decided yesterday that it was advisable to remove him to-night to Toronto. They believed that this could be accomplished without any dangerous risk or serious fatigue, and that if at home the possible chances for ultimate recovery might be improved. Sir James was conveyed to the Ontario Government car, and will make the trip to Toronto in it, accompanied by his wife, his colleague, Dr. Pyne, his secretary (Mr. Horace Wallis), and his trained nurses.

Yesterday's examination of the patient, whose life has been despaired of at various times since his arrival here, convinced Dr. Pyne and Dr. Herman M. Biggs of this city, who has been the consulting physician in the case, that the patient could stand the removal to his home.

The decided improvement in the Ontario Premier was apparent yesterday when the physicians made their usual morning examination. They found the heart in such condition that for a moment they had some doubts of the result of their own work and went over the patient again. The result was an optimistic bulletin, but at the same time Dr. Pyne was careful not to commit himself to any statement of probable action based on the improvement of his patient, as he had been disappointed just a week ago, when conditions seemed almost as favorable.

Sir James took nourishment well yesterday, and his wasted strength seemed to return quickly with the improvement in the trouble which had been the source of anxiety.

While he has lost a great deal of his splendid vitality, the belief was expressed yesterday, he has still reserve strength for a good fight against the enemy that threatened to cut short his career, and he has justified the hope expressed all along by Dr. Pyne, that it would still be possible to take him home.

The examination by the physicians yesterday having shown that Saturday's conditions were greatly improved, it was determined therefore to remove the Premier without further delay. Plans for the removal were prepared quietly. The day was propitious for secrecy for on Sunday the crowds about the hotel and station are smaller than at any other time. Even the people in the office of the Hotel Manhattan were not aware until about an hour before train time of the intention to take away their distinguished guest. At six o'clock, an enquiry at the office, when it proved impossible to get into touch with either Dr. Pyne or Mr. Wallis, brought the reply that as far as was known at the hotel there was no change in the condition of the patient. No mid-day bulletin had been issued, and no adverse reports had come from the sick room.

Some time after six o'clock came the first intimation to the hotel office that the Whitney party was about to leave. A short time later an ambulance, for which tentative arrangements had been made a couple of weeks ago, arrived and the stricken Premier was carried down from his suite and driven slowly the two blocks to the special car which had been waiting in the New York Central yards for weeks, and had been prepared during the day for the trip.

The transfer was made without mishap, and the special car was attached to the outgoing train. Thus was accomplished the wish which the distinguished patient had formulated many times during his severe illness, and he was started on his way home, where he hopes to make a better fight against the disease.

DRINKERS DISMISSED

Pittsburg Railroad Officials Take Drastic Measures

126 MEN LET GO

WASHINGTON, Penn., Jan 19.—Railroad men were startled yesterday when it was learned that 126 men employed on the Pittsburg & Brownsville division of the Pittsburg & Lake Erie road have been dismissed summarily. The charge in every case was drinking. While the company officials refused to discuss the case it was learned that about 500 employes are to go for the same reason.

While the discharge order came as a surprise, it was not issued without warning. Weeks ago the Pittsburg & Lake Erie, a New York Central branch, posted notices that all drinking among employes must cease at once, warning them that any detected drinking, whether on duty or not, would lose their positions without further warning. Detectives were detailed to watch suspected employes.

Some of the men who have lost their positions have grown old in the railroad service, and some of the highest paid skilled men are affected. Among those discharged were engineers, conductors, firemen, brakemen, and flagmen, but no telegraphers.

FARMER TO CONSUMER.

U. S. Senator Borah Introduces Interesting Bill at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Co-operation among the farmers instead of competition, that "the farmer may receive the whole of the consumer's dollar for his product, instead of 35 to 45 per cent., as is now the case," is the aim of a bill introduced Saturday by Senator Borah of Idaho, to create "an agricultural capital" or clearing house to be run by the farmers under Government charter or subsidy. The bill would furnish machinery for scientific marketing and standardization of farm products, under direction of a country-wide organization of producers irrespective of any Government control.

It created quite a stir in the Senate, Senator Borah explaining later that he had not written the measure, but had introduced together with a memorial, at the request of E. H. Rettig, a farmer of Opportunity, Wash.

EVANGELINE BOOTH IS ILL

Alarm Felt at Condition of Salvationist Commander.

BUFFALO, Jan. 19.—Miss Evangeline Booth, commander of the Salvation Army in the United States, is confined to her bed in her room in a local hotel, suffering with a serious attack of bronchitis. The doctors attending her say that pneumonia will probably develop, but late to-day her condition was much more encouraging.

Miss Booth contracted a severe cold in Elmira last Friday, which rapidly grew worse. Saturday night when she arrived here it was necessary to call doctors. She has been forced to cancel her present engagements, but unless pneumonia should develop by to-night she will be able to leave this city during the week.

Considerable alarm was felt over her condition yesterday afternoon.

"Drys" in France Busy.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The campaign against liquor drinking in France began last night with a meeting at Nancy. This is in line with the demand to limit the number of bars saloons and other establishments for the sale of spirits in France. More than 220,000 French women affixed their signatures to the petition, which was presented to the Chamber of Deputies on that occasion.

Deputy Ferdinand Buison and other leaders are among the supporters of the crusade, and it is proposed to hold meetings in all the principal cities. A demand will also probably be made of deputies seeking re-election that they pledge themselves for an anti-alcohol program.

Still After Cherif Pasha.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The police say that the associates of the man who on Wednesday attempted to assassinate Gen. Mehmed Cherif Pasha, one of the chiefs of the Radical Turkish party, undismayed by his tragic fate, already have planned another attempt to kill Cherif Pasha. Knowing there is no chance of getting into Cherif Pasha's apartment, the police say the men design to follow him in an automobile and shoot him. They hope to escape in the confusion that will follow.

Woman Is Asphyxiated.

MONTREAL, Jan. 19.—Mrs. Geo. Baker, 35 years old, was found suffocating in her de Normanville street home yesterday, and died before before medical aid reached her. Mr. Baker and two children were unconscious from the fumes of gas, but recovered when taken to a hospital. The authorities are investigating a report that a leak in a big gas main is menacing the lives of other de Normanville street residents.

TRIED TO STOP HORSES.

Toronto Man Slipped in Front of Runaway and May Die.

TORONTO, Jan. 19.—Attempting to stop a runaway team of horses on Davenport road yesterday afternoon, will, in all probability, cost Andrew Shaw, 103 Christie street, his life. The team attached to a double cutter, was standing on Davenport road at the corner of Shaw street, at six o'clock, with three men sitting in the sleigh. Without warning the horses bolted and at the corner of Christie street Shaw ran into the middle of the roadway, and by waving his arms, tried to bring the animals to a halt.

Before the horses reached him he evidently knew they could not be stopped, for he started to run back to the sidewalk. At his first step his foot slipped on the icy roadway, and before he could recover the horses struck him and hurled him 15 feet to the other kerb. He was picked up unconscious and conveyed to the General Hospital in the police ambulance.

At the hospital it is stated he has both jawbones fractured, a fractured skull and internal injuries. His chances of recovery are slight.

No further bulletin was issued, but enquiries at midnight showed that the patient's condition remained unchanged.

WAS NOT OUT OF THE CITY

Winnipeg's Bad Man, Krafchenko is Rearrested

WINNIPEG, Jan. 19.—John Krafchenko was arrested in Winnipeg last night.

Krafchenko, who was facing trial for the murder of H. M. Arnold, manager of the Plum Coulee branch of the Bank of Montreal, secured a revolver and keys to his cell and adjoining room through some mysterious agency, held up his two guards, locked them in the clothes' closet and escaped through the window of the photographing room adjoining on Jan. 10. He had not since been heard of, but the Winnipeg police believed him to be still in the city.

Another sensation in the Krafchenko case occurred Saturday night when Constable Reid, late of Hamilton, Ont., who, with Constable Flower, was on guard over Krafchenko when he made his sensational escape over a week ago, was placed under arrest charged with being an accessory in the jail delivery. It is stated that Reid was put through the third degree to discover his confederates, but to what effect is not at present known.

Weird Story of a Glasgow Ship.

A remarkable story of the sea has just come to light. It is stated that two survivors of a vessel wrecked off Cape Horn found the wrecked Glasgow ship Marlborough in a cove, with twenty skeletons near by. The Marlborough left Lyttelton, New Zealand, in January, 1890, for London and was not heard of again. It was supposed that she sank in a collision with an iceberg. Her captain was W. Aird. Lloyd's Register shows that the Marlborough was an iron two deck sailing vessel 228 feet long, 35 feet wide and 21 feet deep.

IMPRISONED FOR ONE WEEK

Watchman Finds Emaciated Tramp in C.P.R. Car.

HAMILTON, Jan. 19.—Imprisoned for more than a week in a C.P.R. freight car, a man, weak from hunger and exposure, was found early on Saturday morning by a watchman in the Aberdeen avenue freight yard. The car in which he was found was filled with grain, and it was upon this that he had been subsiding since leaving Winnipeg nearly ten days ago.

Railroad men passing through the yard heard the imprisoned man calling feebly for help, and kicking with what strength remained to him upon the side of the car.

Asked where he was going, the man had no idea, and did not know he was in Hamilton.

"I'm going home to see my mother who is sick," he said.

Dazed and much emaciated by his gruelling experience, he was a sorry figure as he crawled out of the car. No effort was made to detain him, and he was allowed to go.

Argentine Wheat Enters U. S. Free.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Argentine wheat is at last on the free list and can enter the United States without payment of duty. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hamlin, in charge of customs, informed Secretary Bryan Saturday that Argentina had taken the last step to comply with the new tariff act, and, in consequence, wheat and wheat products from Argentine should be admitted duty free.

JUDGE BARHORST DOES HIS DUTY TO RHEUMATIC SUFFERERS

If you suffer from Rheumatism and don't read this advice, then the terrible disease must have robbed you of your power to be fair to yourself. Read it:

"I, John Barhorst, Justice of the Peace of McLean Township, Ft. Loramie, Ohio, do certify that after treatment by three doctors without result, I have been cured of a very bad case of Rheumatism by using two bottles of RHEUMA. It is now two years since I used the remedy, and I am still as well as ever. Previous to using RHEUMA I was a cripple, walking with crutches, and I feel it my duty to let other sufferers from Rheumatism know what it will do. The result seems almost miraculous to me. I have advised RHEUMA to at least a dozen persons, and each one speaks as highly of it as I. I will advise any one suffering from the disease if a two-cent stamp is enclosed."—May 31, 1912.

You can secure a bottle of RHEUMA for only 50 cents at the Warne Drug Co., and they say, if not as advertised, money back. It's just as good for Gout, Arthritis, Lumbago and Sciatica.

Canadian Immigration Official Denies Misleading U. S. Public.

OTTAWA, Jan. 19.—When asked if he had anything to say regarding the accusation made before a Congressional commission on Saturday, that the Canadian Government was spending $100,000 a year through a western newspaper union, for the publication in country newspapers of false agricultural information in the form of news stories to lure American farmers to Canada, Blake Robertson, assistant superintendent of immigration, said, "absolutely nothing was published unless it was fact. The Department advertised largely in American newspapers and nothing was stated that they could not substantiate." He added that the Department would be glad to go before the Congressional committee at Washington and give evidence.

It is in the knowledge of the Immigration Department that a certain American railway which owns large tracts of land and is trying to fill them with settlers, has been conducting an inimical campaign against the Canadian Immigration Department, and it is considered that the main spring of the attack at Washington is this railway.

stitution that voluntarily does this—an institution that we despised a few years ago. They are the ones who are saving the downfallen girl.

"If you want a policewoman, get one, but get one with a heart, a Christian and a woman with a heart.

The qualifications pointed out by His Worship for a woman officer, were that she must be prudent, educated, a Christian, and above all, a good woman.

The Salvation Army are doing the work. Let a woman have the power to do good, not merely for her salary. Let us given money to the Army. In cases they have paid all expenses and have started the fallen who to new life again. Are we ready to do this?

"You have got to aim for Christianity, love and confidence so their hearts are touched and they are saved. Your conception is too broad. We are all falling short of our duty, to make the place sweet. You have got to put up the money to build a home.

"I don't want a woman to do it with handcuffs, but with love. Have sufficient appropriation this year to assist the Army in their work.

Mrs. Rollins replied to the Magistrate's remarks by saying that they were trying to prevent the need of rescue homes. "Sentiment will do its part," concluded Mrs. Rollins.

Judge Huycke in observance of the good work of the Army, had nothing but the warmest praise for the great work being carried on.

Adjutant McElheney, who has had some fifteen years of experience in St. John's, Winnipeg, Toronto, and other large centres, advanced some rather startling instances.

"Things in this city certainly need remedying. At the present time they were looking after four girls, who had been wronged and it was very well to talk, but something had to be done. Some of the women were rendering valuable assistance in this work. The speaker referred to one case where the guilty man was behind the bars as a result of his treatment and this mode of treatment would continue.

Since his stay in Peterboro, a large number bad been sent to Rescue Homes.

An Immorality Officer was the solution to the problem. Adjutant McElheney spoke of the big rescue a few years ago in Winnipeg,

The responsibility should rest with a man who can do his business. Both he and his wife were always ready to render assistance. In twelve months the city would be different with an immorality officer and one or two assistants.

Mrs. Kendry spoke to the effect that they did not want rescue homes and that they were trying to prevent the cause of the necessity of a home in this city.

Mrs. Stevenson contended that women had civic rights as well as moral rights.

Mayor Buller in a short and appropriate speech, announced himself in favor of anything that would further the moral interests of the city.

Judge Huycke said that he would do what he thought best. The appointment of a woman police would by no means be a cure-all. The reports from outside places about women police vary. "It largely depends upon the woman. I certainly do not want a mere woman police, but a woman seven-eighths deaconess and one-eighth police. We do not want her to arrest, but to do good, by giving advice."

His Honor also spoke of the great work of the police who only have one day off in a month, with a duty of ten hours per day and special duty.

"When any case happens again, phone the Chief," was His Honor's parting comment. He also strongly advocated for more police.

The Arguments of the Ladies

To the Police Commissioners
Of the City of Peterboro .

Gentlemen:

We desire to express to you our appreciation of the opportunity afforded us by the Police Commissioners to attend this meeting and present certain facts which have engaged our attention and efforts for some time past.

This delegation represents the Executive of the local Women's Council—its committee on Moral and Social Reform—and a small representation of women voters of this city. The Women's Council comprises about thirty affiliated Societies, made up of religious, philanthropic and patriotic organizations, comprising over 600 members for having its definite aim the promotion of the interests of women and children; and it is in pursuance of this object that we appear before you today.

We believe, Gentlemen, that there are cogent reasons for this agitation. During the past two years a number of the women of Peterboro have become gradually aware of the existence of social conditions that threaten to become increasingly disastrous to the moral welfare of the growing youth of our city, and especially of such girls and women as are of necessity outside the safe environment provided by home life. So alarming an array of facts has by degrees come before us, that it is now morally impossible for a large number of us to ignore these conditions. We feel that as Christian women we are constrained to exert every influence we possess to check the evil. That the seriousness of these matters are not over-estimated by us, is evidenced by the fact that people in a position to know, such as doctors, ministers, Bishop O'Brien, the Priests, nurses and teachers, have expressed themselves as almost unanimously in sympathy with our efforts along this line, as attested by the resolutions attached to this petition. Also men in various walks of life, have, except in rare cases, eagerly proffered their assistance, editors, newspaper men, merchants, attorneys, civic officials, in spite of the fact that we did not attempt any systematic effort to obtain a concensus of opinion by canvassing men and women generally, feeling that such would hardly be required, because we have been made aware from so many sources that we have behind us the public sentiment of the city, and we knew that you, yourselves, must be increasingly aware that in conceding to our wishes, you will be introducing a popular measure.

The objection has been raised that a woman in that position would be socially ostracized; but (because of the new consciousness that is pervading society in relation to this vice), she is more likely to occupy a position of trust and honor in our midst. Indeed we have been much impressed by the large and diversified number of women to whom existing conditions have become unendurable, and who have promptly responded to any appeal made to correct the evil.

Critics fearfully predict that women are losing their fineness, their delicacy, their womanliness in touching this work. On the contrary, women are just beginning to exercise more broadly, than in the home environment, their finest womanly qualities,—mother protectiveness towards the defenceless and their natural aptitudes for cleanliness and order in clearing out this jungle of human wretchedness. For womanliness is not an outer vesture that may be rudely torn aside, but an inner beauty which can be marred only by such things as rob her of her faith or lower her ideals of life. So that, while this menace has remained unmolested because of its peculiarly distasteful and distressing form of work, we hope to carry out a valiant crusade against it. We are no longer willing to be mere bewildered spectators of a given social wrong, but have become conscious of our own hypocrisy in regard to it, and realize that a veritable horror, simply because it is hidden, has come to seem to us inevitable and almost normal.

The rapidly succeeding revelations of dangers implicit in our civic conditions and the allurements which are being designedly placed around many girls, (some of them mere children), in order to draw them into an evil life, has thrown the more sensitive of our men and women into a state of indignant revolt. Such things passionately challenge us to establish a new moral standard; to dry the tears of anguished mothers and enslaved girls; to insist upon the fact being known; that the civic consciousness may be roused to a sense of its responsibility, and rebel against commercialized vice in all its phases.

We wish you to know, therefore, Gentlemen, that we regard the appointment of a policewoman as only one necessary step in the direction in which our faces are set, and that is the eradication of the form of social evil, which creates the social outcast, from our civic life. Ancient and apparently ineradicable as this evil is, other evils as old and as deeply inbedded in human life, have been known to sway before an enlightened public opinion, and in the end, to give way to a growing conscience which regards them first as a moral affront and at length as an utter impossibility. This is our hope.

Changing conditions, such as confront us in our age, require new departures in administration along many lines. Testimony comes from outside sources, where the experiment of a policewoman has been actually tried, both in Canada and other countries, that it is practically an unqualified success, and those interested wonder that this measure had not occurred to commissions long ago. We furnish endorsations from Mayor Hocken, Magistrate Denison, and Staff Inspector Gregory of Toronto; and the Chairman of the Police Commissioners, Ottawa. The margin between decent society and the criminal classes is always broad, vague and undefined: children, girls and women drift across it and enter criminal careers when in many cases this might be prevented if there is a woman of authority and earnestness watching places which almost inevitably lie outside the life of the busy wife and mother. Such a woman officially equipped and free to give her whole time and attention to perform this preventive and protective work, would save many useful lives for the State, would call the attention of our women to those who require womanly help at times of crisis in their lives, and so (herself fortified by the sympathy and confidence of hundreds of our women), would bridge the chasm that now most unfortunately exists between the morally strong and our deeply wronged social outcast. Of these outcasts from decent society—of whom it is considered an impropriety even to speak—Lecky says "This type of woman is the most mournful and the most awful figure in history; she remains, while creeds and civilisations rise and fall, the eternal sacrifice of humanity, blasted for the sins of the people." Of this sorrowful and stained sisterhood, the words of the prophet are literally true: "They are robbed and spoiled, snared in holes and hid in prison houses—they are for a prey and none delivereth, for a spoil and none say, restore." Many a girl in the abyss of shame today has been the victim more of our economic conditions and current injustices, than of inherent choice, of badness.

We do not place undue importance on the number of women voters whose signatures to the petition are here presented, but direct your attention rather to the significance of the fact that so large a number of devoted women voluntarily went forth during the Christmas season, through al kinds of weather—constrained to do so by an overwhelming sense of duty, at the very time when home and social claims make their strongest appeal—in order to extend a practical sympathy to those who obviously have no facilities for fighting their own battles, thus undertaking work new and painful to sensitive minds.

We desire to direct your interest to the incredible number of cases daily brought to the notice of members of our council, of the accosting of girls on the streets, in the very centre of the city. Last Spring a woman was accosted shortly after 8 o'clock in foulest language on Hunter Street, between George and Aylmer. Her indignant revolt against the possibility of some young girl even hearing the loathsome words, overcame her natural shrinking from publishing her humiliation, (an instinctive feeling among women, Sirs, which has helped the silence permitting the infamous practice to become so widespread). Overcoming this, she sought a policeman, (who doubtless remembers the incident), assuring him if he would arrest the transgressor, (who meantime had entirely disappeared on George St.,), she would give evidence. But taking instances that have occurred, say within two months, I note a few common ones which are vouched for by people of unquestioned veracity:

(a) A young girl, a servant, esteemed by employers, leaving Public Library, is followed by man, accosted when she turns off George to Murray, invited to "go walking, get acquainted." By degrees as she hurriedly proceeds, she is obliged by alarmed efforts to fight off his embraces and kisses, till happily she reaches the refuge of her home, when he slinks away.

(b) Vicinity of Smith and Water Streets, a servant employed for two years and highly spoken of by her mistress, has been so frequently accosted that now she is afraid to go out, even to the Public Library.

(c) Two different girls, vicinity Aylmer and Sherbrooke, accosted frequently, urged to go walking, three weeks ago, having left the Y.W.C.A., the men's solicitations became so urgent, one of the girls drove a hatpin into some part of his anatomy and fled.

(d) Young lady walking along Simcoe Street beheld the harrowing spectacle of a mother weeping before an open door and saying: "I want my daughter, I know she's in that stable."

(e) Young lady walking along Aylmer Street, met by two men, who fall into pace behind her, soliciting her company all the way, till, almost paralyzed by fright, she fortunately reaches her destination, when they disappeared.

(f) Young lady of standing, loitering a few rods from her home in the early evening, waiting for a friend, is accosted, urgently entreated to go for a walk. "We don't know each other, but we'll soon get acquainted and have a good time." Girl rushes back to her home, man disappears.

With inexpressible indignation we hear the theory advanced that these are mere boyish escapades. Gentlemen, it is an insult to the citizens of Peterboro, and all mothers of sons, to so characterize it. Is it not infamous that girls whose lives are limited enough in opportunity should be debarred from the advantages afforded by such institutions as the Public Library and the Y. W. C. A., because they cannot safely walk to and from such central places? What is to become too, of the weaker minded or foolishly romantic girl, who yields to the honey invitations of promiscuous acquaintances? As a case in point: This week a mistress, herself unsuspicious of these evils, told us the following story: Her maid, respectable, but romantic became acquainted with a young man and asked to go to church with him, three Sunday nights ago; the mistress, unwilling to seem severe, acceded to the request, herself staying home. Through the week he came, accompanied by another young fellow to invite her for a walk, but even she felt it was not quite good form to go walking with two young men. The next Sunday night he came to take her to church again; and again the mistress consented. At the end of an hour or more, the girl rushed in, dishevelled and hysterical, confessed he had taken her walking, both nights, instead of to church, and that, at a bridge in the north end, only her strength and determined struggles saved her from the greatest calamity that could befall a girl. You say, that was a silly girl! Can a policewoman remedy such evils? It may be said a policewoman cannot remedy all the evil. Certainly not, her appointment does not mean that the entire police force is thereby incapicitated. She can remedy certain evils, such as we have already partially indicated. We believe, Gentlemen, that the widest publicity should be given these conditions, that such men may not be permitted to ply their hideous tactics against the innocent, the weak, the unprotected, for I might go on indefinitely quoting such occurrences. The very fact that these conditions lie so far away from the knowledge of our citizens generally, is largely responsible for the secrecy and hypocrisy upon which they thrive. It is a civic obligation, that these things be made known.

If such things take place in the heart of our city, what goes on in the outskirts? Question the people who live in these parts! They will tell you of the pitiful things that occur in the very shade of their own trees; for it is to these parts such girls as those whose cases bave been quoted, are taken, when they are unsophisticated, or weak, or defenceless enough to accede. And this brings us, Gentlemen, to the part hardest of all for women to speak of, yet this supreme and delicate task we dare not shirk. Since it has been known that our Women's Council has definitely set itself to this work, we have been fairly overwhelmed with revelations touching the pathetic downfall of an incredible number of girls—some of them mere children.

A prominent lady was recently asked what kind of a place Peterboro was anyway, by a nurse in Montreal. Her attention had been drawn to it because of the large number of girls from Peterboro she had met in Rescue Homes there. When inaugurating this work, in writing to the Moral and Social Reform Committees of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Anglican and Baptist Churches, for information and methods of procedure, the letters received from the Secretaries were almost pathetically urgent that we should undertake this work, because of the large proportion of Peterboro girls received at the Rescue Homes.

The local hospitals furnish their own pitiful stories, but we have here, Gentlemen, a lady who is nobly devoting herself to work in the so-called lower world who can speak more authoritatively because of definite experience. I will ask her now to say a few words. She has stated that, after 23 years' dealing with such work in Canadian cities, she has met in Peterboro circumstances more appalling than in any other place of the size.

WAS VETERAN MINISTER PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The Late Rev. Dr. Wardrope Occupied Only Two Charges, One at Ottawa and One at Guelph

GUELPH, Jan. 19.—The death of Rev. Dr. Thomas Wardrope, aged 94, was announced to the congregation of Chalmers Presbyterian Church at yesterday morning's service. His death took place at the residence of his son-in-law, Arthur Greer, Montreal, on Saturday.

The late Dr. Wardrope was a pioneed in the service of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. For twenty-five years he was pastor of Chalmers' Church, Guelph, previous to which he had been pastor of St. Paul's Church, Ottawa, for twenty years. He was an ex-moderator of the General Assembly. Sixteen years ago he retired from active work and had since resided with his daughter in Montreal. He leaves four sons and two daughters: Thomas, Chicago; William H. (K.C.), Hamilton; J. Wyner, London, and George, Montreal; Mrs. Arthur Greer, Montreal, and Mrs. Dr. Corsan, Fernie, B.C.

Born at Ladykirk, Berwickshire, Scotland, in May, 1819, the son of the late Rev. Thomas Wardrope, a Presbyterian minister, and coming to Canada in 1834, the late Dr. Wardrope received his education at Queen's College, Kingston, by which he was honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1878, and at Knox College, Toronto, and Edinburgh University. In February, 1844, he married Miss Sarah Masson, with whom he passed forty-four years of happy wedded life, she dying in 1888.

In his early manhood he was principal of the Grammar School in Bytown, now Ottawa. He was ordained to the ministry in 1845. In 1858 he was elected Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, and in 1891 was similarly honored by the General Assembly of the United Church.

THE CONVERSION OF A GAMBLER

Rev. Wilson Pugsley Tells of The Change in His Life.

Rev. Wilson Pugsley preached to a very large congregation at Gilmour Memorial Church, Sunday evening, when he told the story of his conversion, the subject being From the Gambling Table to the Pulpit. His address was listened to with rapt attention.

At the close of the address, Mr. Pugsley made a test of the congregation, requesting all those who would do all in their power to put down the gambling evil, to rise on their feet. The congregation was almost unanimous.

Mr. Pugsley will hold union services for fourteen days at Selwyn, the first week in the Baptist Church, and the second week in the Methodist Church. All friends are cordially invited to these metings.

PARTICIPATING vs. NON-PARTICIPATING Life Assurance

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy No. 69879, for $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

PARTICIPATING RESULTS.		NON-PAR RESULTS.
$2637.75	Total cash 1st Dec. last	$2000.00
1895.00	Total prems. paid	1725.00
742.75	Amount received over that pd. in	275.00
Almost 40 p.c.	Percentage returned over prem paid	almost 16 p.c.
1299.70	or, Cash returned and a paid-up Policy of $2000	661.25

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. If so, call at or 'phone the Sun Life Office, 402 Water Street.

The above policyholder thinks he had a splendid result. Don't you?

COAL PRICES DROPPED STILL FURTHER BY FITZGERALD

Better Buy Now at These, the Lowest Made: $1.00 Per Ton Below Regular Prices

I propose to meet any competition that is put up by any dealer and meet it in a decisive way. Consumers are urged to send in orders at once.

It will pay to buy and burn coal at these prices. Don't delay. We deliver the best, thoroughly screened coal, first quality Lehigh Valley Coal, every load.

	Regular Price	Fitzgerald's Price
Egg Coal	$8.00	$7.25
Stove Coal	8.25	7.25
Nut Coal	8.50	7.50
Pea Coal	7.00	6.00

I claim that the prices heretofore asked for coal have been reasonable, considering the expenses of the business. Below I give a statement of facts in connection with the cost of handling coal in this city. One ton of coal of 2,000 lbs.

1 ton nut (at Buffalo)	$5.36
Freight from bridge	$1.25
State export tax	.10
Total cost on track	$6.71
Handling cost in this city	$1.35
	$8.06
Selling price to public	$8.50
Leaving profit	44c. per ton

COST OF ECONOMICAL COAL HANDLING
(From the Coal Trade Journal.)

In answer to an inquiry with reference to the net profit per ton on coal we state that the profit can fairly be assumed by deducting the following items of expenses, these being based upon a fairly equipped yard, up-to-date generally:

Advertising	$0.02	per ton
Breakage, lost in transit, culm	.15	" "
Dumping in pocket	.01½	" "
Office and general expenses	.12½	" "
Insurance and taxes	.03	" "
Yard superintendent and employes	.13	" "
Interest on investment or rent	.10	" "
Bad debts and equipment depreciation	.02	" "
Office employes	.15	" "
Owner's salary	.15	" "
Interest on stock carried	.02	" "
Average cost of delivery	.50	" "
Total handling cost to the dealer, per ton	$1.42

The public may ask how I can afford to sell coal at the prices I now make. I am selling the coal at cost on track and only adding the cost of cartage to consumers (70c. per ton.) Overhead expenses will be charged to other lines of business.

BOWSER DREAMS.

Sets Out to Live the Simple Life With Fervor.

EATS TOAST AND MILK.

Also Dresses For the Part Despite Mrs. B.'s Pleadings—After One Night of It His Views Are Altered, and He Has a Change of Heart.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.]

"I HOPE you have a good appetite this evening," said Mrs. Bowser as she met Mr. Bowser at the door the other evening. "We have a good roast of beef fit for a king."

"Then let the king eat it!" was the reply.

"Why, what's the matter?"

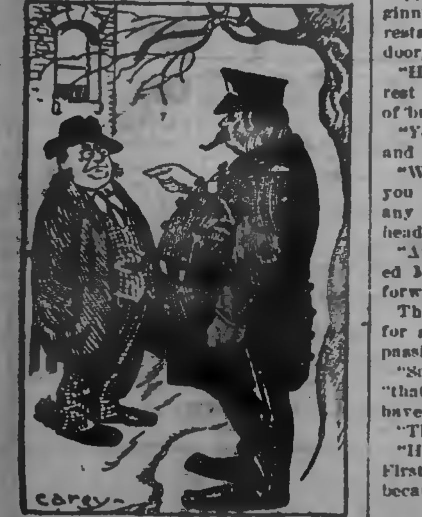
"I told you weeks ago that I was going to quit making a hog of myself, and right here tonight is where I begin."

"To starve yourself because some few faddists have?"

"No. To eat sensible things and give nature a show. It's a wonder that the country hasn't depopulated itself long ago. You and the rest can go on and do as you please, but I'm going to make a change. A piece of toast and a glass of milk for my dinner!"

During the evening Mrs. Bowser argued and protested, but it was of no use. Mr. Bowser was firm. He had been a human hog for nigh upon fifty years, and now he was going to become a human being. For half a century he had thought mostly of his stomach, but now he was going to let other thoughts creep in.

He went to bed to dream. He dreamed of codfish, cornmeal, cold potatoes and raw turnips. He dreamed of old clothes, going barefoot and sleeping on straw beds. He dreamed that he was trying to get into a first class restaurant to order juicy steak, creamed potatoes, asparagus with butter gravy and all else good, to be followed by a bottle of champagne, but that the Rev. Charles Wagner stood in his path with a sled stake in his hand and warned him to turn back and be satisfied with burdock leaves.



THE OFFICER LOOKED HIM OVER.

He Has Four Nightmares.

Four different times during the night his groans and yells aroused Mrs. Bowser, and when the hour for getting up arrived he looked like a man who had been lost in a huckleberry swamp for a week. She felt sorry for him, and yet she said:

"You are ten minutes late this morning, but the cook will have your fried bread and codfish all ready."

Mr. Bowser glared at her and was on the point of giving expression to his feelings when he remembered he was a guileless Uncle Rube. He had to sit down to the feast prepared for him, and he had to seem to enjoy it, but there was rage in his heart. A dainty breakfast had been prepared for Mrs. Bowser, and when the odor wafted to his nostrils he felt amazed that he didn't arm himself with an ax or crowbar and break loose.

"I thought you were going to do without collar and necktie today?" queried Mrs. Bowser as he finished his meal and was getting ready to go.

"Who said I was going to?" he demanded in something like his old bossy tones.

"I—I thought a stocking around the neck would be more in keeping with your old clothes, but of course it's for you to say. I'll have cook boil you a yellow turnip and make some catnip tea for your dinner tonight. Have you a headache this morning?"

"Of course not. I never felt better in my life."

"I'm glad to hear that. I didn't know but that a simple life might be a trial to you, but it seems to be just what you needed. Shall you sleep on the floor tonight? Beds are simply a useless extravagance."

Bowser Retorts Grouchily.

"You needn't worry about where I shall sleep!" he growled in reply as he struggled with his overcoat.

"I'll have a tallow candle tonight, and we'll pop corn and play checkers the same as the farmers. I think if you keep the thing up for a month I shall become a convert."

"A—a month!" gasped Mr. Bowser, as he felt the wolf of hunger gnawing at his vitals.

"Well, even two weeks. Shan't I bring you a glass of cold water to drink before you go? And why don't you take a crust of bread and a piece of suet for your lunch?"

Had the cat been around Mr. Bowser would have shed her blood in gleeful ferocity, but as she wasn't, and as he was determined that Mrs. Bowser shouldn't get the best of him while life remained, he went his way without a word. It so happened that at the gate he met the policeman who had almost collared him for a tramp the day before, and the officer looked him over and demanded:

"Now, then, have you been begging at that house?"

"I—I live there. I'd have you know."

"Don't lie to me, old fake! I have my eye on you, and if I catch you tripping you'll go to the cooler. Hustle along with you!"

Blow to Simple Life.

It was a hard blow to Mr. Bowser's "simplicity." He fumed and raged for the next two blocks, and something happened that brought about the beginning of the end. The keeper of a restaurant, who was standing at his door, beckoned to him and said:

"Here, old man, if you'll clean off the rest of this snow I'll give you a bite of breakfast."

"You go to Jericho!" was the prompt and vigorous answer.

"What! What's that? Look a-here, you old Weary Willie, if you give me any of your lip I'll stand you on your head! What do you think I am?"

"And who do you think I am?" hissed Mr. Bowser as he thrust his chin forward and prepared for battle.

There would have been a scrap but for a small boy who happened to be passing and recognized Mr. Bowser.

"Say," he called to the restaurateur, "that feller ain't no tramp! He don't have to shovel snow to git a meal!"

"Then who in blazes is he?"

"He's old Bowser, who lives up on First place. He's wearin' them duds because he's got a new fad."

He Sends a Telegram.

Mr. Bowser left the house at 8:30. At 9:15 Mrs. Bowser received a telegram, reading:

"Have fried chicken, corn fritters and sweet potatoes for dinner tonight!"

Half an hour later came another, reading:

"Have oyster soup. Have boiled onions. Have rice pudding."

Then Mr. Bowser rested for an hour and sent the following:

"Have dinner half an hour ahead of the usual time. Have two fried chickens. Have ice cream and raisins and nuts for dessert. Spare no expense whatever."

There was one more telegram. It came about 3 o'clock in the afternoon and it read:

"May bring home two friends with me for dinner. Have three fried chickens. Have everything you can think of. Have a regular banquet, and if the cook does any kicking raise her salary."

Mr. Bowser appeared half an hour ahead of his usual time. He not only had on the business suit she had sent over to him, but he had bought himself a flaming red necktie and a rhinestone pin and had his shoes shined as never before.

"Well, dear, what is it?" queried Mrs. Bowser as he entered the hall.

"What is what?"

"Why have you decided not to pursue the 'simple life' any further?"

"I fail to catch your meaning."

"You read the 'Simple Life,' by the Rev. Charles Wagner, and you started out to follow it. Are you going to drop it?"

"We will have a little talk after dinner, woman!" he replied as he made for the dining room.

Banquet Was Prepared.

A banquet had been prepared, and though Mr. Bowser hadn't brought two friends with him he devoured their share. A shipwrecked mariner afloat for two weeks couldn't have been more ravenous. When he was at last through eating and drinking he led the way upstairs and turned to her to say:

"Woman, this is the dead line!"

"Why, what do you mean?"

"I mean that you have crowded me to the wall for the last time. I will see you on board the train for your mother's at 10 o'clock in the morning!"

"But for why? What have I done? You started out to live a 'simple life' and"—

"And our respective lawyers can arrange about the alimony. Should any one call to see me this evening you may tell him that I am busy and cannot be disturbed."

"Was it a-readin' of the 'Simple Life' that made him carry on so, mum?" asked the cook when Mrs. Bowser came downstairs.

"I think it was, Bridget."

"Then I wants to quit me job at once. He may get hould of 'The Ferocious Life' and read it before he goes to bed, and who's to say he won't get up and eat pounded glass and drink vinegar and chop us all to pieces wid de ax! 'A-beggin' of yer pardon ten times over, mum, but ye've got a strange man on yer hands."

Seeking Distraction.

"Why do you suppose it is," she asked, "that nearly all the great men of this world have been married?"

"I suppose," replied the old bachelor, "it's because they had to do something to get their minds off the troubles they had at home."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Horrors, Yes!"

"What could be more sad than a man without a country?" feelingly asked the high school literature teacher of her class.

"A country without a man," responded a pretty girl just as feelingly.—Woman's Home Companion.

Wanted to Be Shown.

"Supposing I decided to let you have the money, how do I know that I shall get it back at the time you mention?" said Spiffkins.

"I promise it, my boy, on the word of a gentleman," replied Bliffkins.

"Ah, in that case I may think better of it. Come round this evening and bring him with you."—Princeton Tiger.

Good Excuse.

"I wonder," said the boy who was looking at an old photograph, "why grandfather wore those large whiskers?"

"Possibly," replied Mr. Meekton, "he was willing to do almost anything to conceal our family custom of letting the wives select the husbands' neckties."—Washington Star.

A Tragic Cook.

Guest (who has been invited to supper by an actress)—Our hostess prepared this little feast with her own hands, so she tells me. W'at do you say to that?

Can't Escape Him.

On a recent examination paper in civics was this question: "If the president, vice president and all the members of the cabinet should die, who would officiate?"

Robert, a boy of twelve, thought for some time, trying in vain to recall who came next in succession. At last a happy inspiration came to him, and he answered, "The undertaker!"—Chicago Daily News.

Frankness.

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off, didn't you, pa?"—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Hot Baths.

The usual objection to hot baths is that the bather takes cold unless he goes straight to bed as soon as he has dried himself; otherwise, so they say, he goes on perspiring and takes a chill. Now, this is due not to having had a hot bath, but because the water was not hot enough when the bather got out of it. Hot water has the same effect as cold in bracing up the sweat pores and preventing them from continuing to pour out unnecessary perspiration.

Lukewarm water, on the other hand, leaves the skin lax and moist, and it is then that people are liable to chills. The best temperature at which to take a hot bath is 100 degrees F. or just below that. If more water is added afterward it should be hot, not cold, so as to maintain the temperature at the same level. With the aid of these precautions it will be found that drying is a simple process, and the skin is left in a delightful state without any undue perspiration to follow.

GONDOLAS OF VENICE DOOMED.

Prosaic Motor Engineers Ousting the Picturesque Gondoliers.

Those who would see the gondolas and the gondoliers of Venice must make haste to visit the wonderful city on the Adriatic, for both are threatened by the prosaic, noisy motor boat.

Already a syndicate has been formed with the object of placing 100 motor boats on the Venetian waters in place of the picturesque gondolas which have hitherto been inseparable from pictures of Venetian life and surroundings.

The first blow to the existence of the gondola was struck nearly 35 years ago when there was introduced a service of omnibus steamers which has since been taken over by the municipality. The old gondolas were about 30 feet long by four or five feet wide, and carried from four to eight passengers, but it is stated that the new motor boats, though not differing greatly in size, will be constructed so as to carry a larger number of passengers.

The gondolier will be missed as greatly as his boat, for he was always a picturesque character and a careful guide, managing his boat with wonderful ease and giving a peculiar cry of warning before turning any corner in the narrow canals, and never, even in the close quarters, grazing another boat.

No more will be seen the annual gondola regatta nor the old-time contests between the two factions of the gondoliers, the Nicoletti and the Castellani, and the gathering up of the fragments of his patron's feasts by the hungry boatman. The gondola helped to preserve the fascination of Venice when she herself had fallen into decay and the day of her greatest glory had passed, but now the gondolier, like the old London cab driver, will soon be numbered with the people of the past. Whether a new era of prosperity for Venice will be inaugurated with the new regime remains to be seen.

No one has yet been able to trace the age of the gondola and its introduction into Venice, but the records of its existence there certainly go back to 1094.

Brief, But Crushing.

He was very badly in love and had sat up till the "wee sma' hours" composing the following lines:

Beautiful one, with eyes so blue,
Oh, how my fond heart sighs for you!
Sweet spirit, listen to me now;
Hear once again my ardent vow.

He wrote a yard of this soul inspiring verse and sent it to the object of his adoration, with a request that she would express an opinion on its merits. This is what he received:

"Dear Mr. Hopkins," she wrote, "I do not like to hurt your feelings, but if you will read the initial letters of your first four lines downword I may say that they express my sentiments exactly."

The Color of Jade.

The idea of jade possessing the virtue of bringing the wearer good fortune arose in China. The best specimens represent all the hues and effects of sea foam, but these are eagerly snapped up by collectors and seldom come into the public market. There is another cause for the popularity of jade. Its peculiar green tinge has the effect of making the human skin look very white. In this connection the quality of the stone is of no account so long as the color is there. Indeed, many of the less expensive jade ornaments are made from chips of the stone which contain noticeable flaws. — Pearson's Weekly.

Might Have Been Worse.

A young woman from the west was making a visit to an old seaport town. One morning while driving with her host she said:

"What is the diet of all these people?"

"Fish mostly," responded the man.

"Why," spoke the westerner, "I thought fish was a brain food. These are really the most unintelligent looking people I ever saw."

"Well," replied the host, "just think what they would look like if they didn't eat fish!"

It Surely Would.

A drug clerk in a neighboring village was called to the telephone at an early hour one morning recently.

"Do you keep carbolic acid?" inquired an anxious voice.

"Yes, madam," responded the polite clerk.

"Well, wouldn't that kill you?"

And there followed the click of a receiver being hung up.

Neat Blarney.

"Why does your horse go so slow?" asked a tourist one day in the Glen of Downs, Ireland, of his driver. "It is out of rispict to the bayutiful sanery, yer honor—he wants ye to see it all. And, this, he's an intelligent baste and appreciates good company and wants to kape the like o' ye in ould Ireland as long as he can!"

One Cure.

"I believe I'll rock the boat," declared the man in the stern.

"Don't do it," advised his companion. "It might discharge this unloaded pistol I have in my jeans."

AUDITORS' REPORT

We have investigated the affairs of The Bank of Nova Scotia, and certify that the above Eighty-second General Statement in our opinion presents a fair and conservative view of the condition of the Bank as at the close of business on December 31, 1913.

Our investigation included an examination of the general books of the Bank as kept at the office of the General Manager in Toronto, and an investigation and compilation of figures from certified returns made by its various branches. We further verified by count and examination the cash on hand at the offices in Halifax and Toronto, King Street, and inspected all securities owned by the Bank excepting those held at St. John and Havana. In verification of the securities held at these two branches [illegible] statements were forwarded to us.

THE SPORTING WORLD

BIG CROWD IS GOING TO COBOURG WITH LOCALS

Everybody is talking Cobourg today. If everyone who says he is going, does so, the population of the horse-show town will be increased by over 300 for a few hours. The game will undoubtedly be very fast and if the locals intend to bring the district honors home they will have to be on the hop all the time. Lawson Whitehead, who was billed to handle the game, is a trifle under the weather and it is very probable that either "Case" Curzon or "Chadd" Thoms will referee.

The team who will represent the locals will be:

Goal—Janes.
R. Defence—Bond.
L. Defence—Denison.
Rover—Giroux.
Centre—Park.
L. Wing—Kelly.
R. Wing—Bradshaw.

Tickets are now on sale at the Grand Trunk City Office or previous to the departure of the train at the depot. The train will leave sharp at seven o'clock.

BIG CROWD FOR JUNIOR GAME

Port Hope at Brock Street Rink Tuesday Night.

By all appearances there is going to be a large turn-out of fans tomorrow night at Brock Street Rink for the junior game between Peterboro and Port Hope. The boys are confident they can defeat the Port Hope crew and thereby strengthen their chances of tieing up the district for they are hopeful of another victory on Friday at Kingston. The lineup for tomorrow's game will be the same as played in Port Hope.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

Hockey teams will practice as follows, at Brock Street Rink this evening:

Wanderers 8—9;
Exploits 9—10;
George Street 10—11.

There will be a practice of the Junior Alerts Hockey team on Tuesday evening at the Brock Street Rink from 10 to 11 o'clock. All players are requested to be present.

MERCANTILE

WINNIPEG RINK HAD SHORT VISIT

The famous Braden rink from Winnipeg arrived in this city on Saturday night and left yesterday via C. P.R. for the west. While they were in the city they were the guests of the local curlers.

On January 21st, at 2, 4 and 7.45 o'clock there will be a competition, points to count, among the local curlers. This is an individual match and should prove a great deal of excitement.

"I hope not."

"You need a new hat."

"You need a new suit."

"You need shoes. Man alive, your feet are on the ground!"

"Quite true," admitted Wombat, with a sigh.

"And why," she asked, "do you think the world is better now than it was twenty-five years ago?"

"Because you were not in it then," he replied.

"Ah, I am afraid you wish to flatter me. I am nearly twenty-eight."

"Is it possible? Well, in a way, I'm glad of it."

"Why?"

"You see, I'm thirty-seven, and I don't believe any man ought to be more than eight or nine years older than his wife."

"That so?"

"No. I have no desire to have a great fortune."

"Then what do you want?"

ARMY NEAR MARFA.

Huerta's Broken Remnants Are In Sorry Plight In Texas.

MARFA, Texas, Jan. 19.—Footsore, ragged, almost famished from their three days' march on foot of sixty-seven miles over a wind-swept mountain road, the 3,300 Mexican Federal soldiers and generals, routed from Ojinaga, Mexico, by the rebels, with 1,067 women and about 100 children, arrived yesterday within a few miles of Marfa, whence they are to be transported by train to Fort Bliss at El Paso.

The ragged remnant of the Huerta army, which sought asylum in this country rather than face possible extermination by the rebels, will on Tuesday be formally interned at Fort Bliss as wards of the Government.

None of those in the unique caravan was more visably affected on coming within sight of Marfa than Gen. Salvador Mercado, Huerta's former military chief. Riding on a horse, his uniform covered with dust he was confessedly humiliated, not only at the defeat of his army and the necessity for his flight to foreign soil, but also because of a report from Mexico City that he would be courtmartialled should he return to his native country.

Huerta Installs Wireless.

BERLIN, Jan. 19.—A German wireless telegraph company Saturday secured a contract for the erection of a wireless station in Mexico City to enable Provisional President Huerta to maintain communication with the columns of Federal troops operating against the rebels in various parts of the country.

Turned Over To U. S. Police.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Jan. 19.—Augustin Vitale, who, on arriving here from New York on Dec. 16 last, was arrested by the Kingston authorities on the charge of murder in connection with the killing of Anthony Collato, a fruit dealer of Lancaster, Pa., on Oct. 31, was turned over to the United States officials Saturday. The prisoner will be taken to New York on board the steamship Metapan, which sailed Saturday evening.

Vitale did not avail himself of his right under the extradition treaty to file an appeal during his period of detention which expired Saturday.

Nova Scotian Vessel Abandoned.

BOSTON, Jan. 19.—The Nova Scotian schooner Ladysmith was abandoned at sea in a water-logged condition and her crew were saved by the British steamer Chignecto, according to a wireless message sent out by the transatlantic liner St. Louis.

The position of the schooner when abandoned was given as latitude 40.55 north, longitude 63.46 west. The Ladysmith has been sailing between Halifax, N.S., and New York, and carried a crew of six men, commanded by Captain Loynes.

Quiet Elections.

Even when political feeling runs at its highest, polling in the commune of Blanchefontaine, in eastern France, is sure to be conducted without any danger of riot, as for some years past only one citizen has figured on its roll of electors. At election times, according to French law, each commune is entitled to demand a separate polling station, although it is a frequent practice to make one serve for several neighboring communes. The Blanchefontaine elector insists on his full rights and whenever called upon to vote has a polling station erected for his special benefit.

Switching it Off.

Miss Elderleigh—So you remarked to Katherine that I looked as old as the hills? Now, don't deny it. I heard you. Jack Spott—Oh—er—but you misunderstand. I was merely comparing your age with that of the Hill young ladies I am acquainted with—twins, you know.—Boston Transcript.

CONFERENCE ENDS.

Sea Safety Delegates Fail to Get General Arbitration Agreement.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The work of the revision committee of the International Congress on Safety at Sea, was practically brought to a close last night, the members working all day Sunday.

The arbitration feature of the conference again obtruded last night, the United States and Great Britain coming to terms on the matter of allowing arbitration on such occasions as this was requested and was agreeable. Germany and France, however, declined to agree to arbitration between themselves or with Great Britain or the United States on the Anglo-American basis.

Great Britain had demanded originally that all disputes under the proposed convention, and all violations of the shipping laws should be arbitrated between the parties in dispute. This was unqualifiedly opposed by the American delegates, who also opposed the proposal that all disputes be sent to the international court of arbitration at The Hague.

Another agreement preserves intact the private code signals of any country, reserved for war. Use is made of the commercial code, and only one code will be used for any distress call. This will assure its being understood by all ships within range.

The adoption of the provision of rafts aboard ships, against the contention of the Americans, was carried. The Americans held out for the contention that never more than one-third of the life-saving craft should consists of rafts, and always two-thirds or more of lifeboats, where the ship carries both.

Not Wasting His Time.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Jan. 19.—Otto Buck Churchill, who came here to seek a wife, and who says he is the heir to an estate of $30,000,000 provided he marries before July 25, decided Saturday to combine business with pleasure while looking for a mate, by taking a job as a street car conductor on the Northern Indiana Railway. He announces he will hold the job until he finds his bride if the company lets him.

Churchill is receiving many offers of marriage through a letter he sent to an Indianapolis newspaper.

One Life Lost In Fire.

MONTREAL, Jan. 19. — Side Schneider, a tailor, 28 years old, lost his life in a Clark street fire yesterday, and six-year-old Abe Cohen was unconscious when taken from a top floor by the firemen. Young Cohen was received by an ambulance surgeon.

Seven families, with a total of 75 people, were rendered homeless through a fire due to the placing of hot ashes in a wooden receptacle.

The damage to the building will not exceed $3,000, while the individual losses of the tenants will be slight. Many thrilling rescues were made by firemen.

Suffragette Caught After Ten Months

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Phyllis Brady the well-known militant suffragette after evading the police for ten months, was arrested and brought before the police court at Chertsey, Surrey, Saturday. The magistrate committed her for trial at London sessions, on a charge of arson. She is believed to be one of the suffragettes who set fire to the residence of Lady White, widow of the late field marshal, Sir George White, at Englefield Green, Surrey, on March 20.

In Memory of Captain Webb.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—A tablet has just been unveiled in Holy Trinity Church, Coalbrookdale, bearing the inscription: "In memory of Capt Mathew Webb, who swam from Dover to Calais, Aug. 24-25, 1875. Born at Dawley, Jan. 19, 1848. Died at Niagara, July 24, 1883. Erected by friends and admirers in Shropshire."

Nine Fishermen Drowned.

CETTE, France, Jan. 19.—Nine of the crew of the fishing steamer Marguerite Marie, who took to a lifeboat during a storm, were drowned yesterday off Cape Creux, the boat being overturned by a giant wave. The captain and five sailors were rescued by a passing vessel.

STRENUOUS BANKING.

Clients Faced a Cocked Gun While Handing Over Their Dust.

Many years ago gold was discovered at Hokitika, on the west coast of New Zealand. There was a rush to the small Maori village, and within a few weeks seventy vessels, of all rigs and tonnage, were waiting to get over the dangerous harbor bar. The author of "Antipodean Notes" describes the first bank established in the little town

With the vessels came two agents of a local bank. Their bank furniture consisted of a safe, a pair of scales, a tent and a couple of revolvers. The two agents set up their tent, put the safe in the back part and a plank, laid across two tree stumps, in front.

The bank "staff" sat down behind the plank; before one man were the scales, a bottle of acid and a note book; the other held a cocked revolver.

The digger brought his gold to the plank "counter," where it was weighed and tested. When the value was determined the testing clerk unlocked the safe, placed the gold in it, brought out a bundle of dirty banknotes and handed them to the digger.

During this transaction the clerk with the revolver looked carefully about to see if any suspicious persons were lurking near.

House Burns; Six Perish.

COBOCONK, Ont., Jan. 19.—The house of Mrs. Weatherby was burned with all its contents at an early house Saturday morning and six children, two boys and four girls, between the ages of two and twelve, perished in the flames. Mrs. Weatherby barely escaped in her night clothing by jumping through an upper window. She is considerably cut and burned, especially about the hands. The fire apparently started from the kitchen stove.

SPOKE OF THE LATE EDWIN GREENLAND

Yesterday at All Saints' Anglican church, Rev. R. B. Grobb, referred to the death of Mr. Edwin Greenland, which took place at Orillia. Mr. Grobb said that the late Mr. Greenland had been a very faithful member of All Saints' church, attending the services on the Sabbath and also the Wednesday night service. He had also doubled his offering at the recent canvass.

The following is from the Orillia Packet.

The death of Mr. Edwin Greenland of Peterborough, at the Orillia General Hospital on Saturday night, occurred under exceedingly sad circumstances. He had come to Orillia on New Year's Day to spend a week or two with his brother, Mr. Harry Greenland. On Friday morning he was seized with severe pain, which the physicians pronounced appendicitis. He was taken to the Hospital, and Drs. A. E. Ardagh Gilchrist and Brown performed the operation on Monday. From the first the case was critical, but it was hoped that the patient's good constitution would enable him to rally. Gradually however, he sank, until about ten o'clock on Saturday night he passed away. The late Edwin Greenland came to Orillia ten years ago, and for a short time he was in the employ of the Long Manufacturing Company. From here he went to Collingwood and worked for the shipbuilding company. Eight years ago he entered the service of the Canadian General Electric Company at Peterborough, with whom he remained up to his death. He was born at Frome, Somersetshire, England, sixty-seven years ago. By profession he was a marine engineer, and prior to coming to Canada most of his life was spent in the service of the Peninsula and Oriental Steamship Company, and in the Government dockyards at Portsmouth. He came to this country with a view to starting in life his young son, Reginald, but the latter died three years ago, at the age of eighteen. The only other relatives in Canada were his brother Harry and family. In England, two sons and two daughters survive, all residing in London. The funeral took place to St. James's Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon. The Rev. J. R. S. Boyd conducted the service. The pallbearers were Messrs. E. Long, F. W. Webber, H. A. Croxall, Robert Lamb, D. H. Church and G. H. Hale.

George Mein appeared in Police Court this morning on the charge of disorderly conduct and also of being drunk while on the blacklist. He was remanded by Acting Magistrate Rush until tomorrow morning. On Saturday, Mein became rather wild while under the influence of liquor and chased his wife and family out of the house.

A glass measuring cup is particularly good for measuring dry materials, such as sugar or flour.

SOCIALISM IS FOUND WANTING

Rev. R. Pogue Preaches on True and False Estimates of Life

In the course of a sermon on "True and False Estimates of Life," in St. Paul's Church, Sunday morning, the pastor, the Rev. R. Pogue, referred to one of the weaknesses of Socialism. His text was "A Man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses." He said "The Master is not condemning here the possession of money. He nowhere says that a rich man is necessarily a bad man. He does say it is hard for a rich man to be good. But the thing which our Lord condemns is that estimate of material things which places a higher value on them than on the things of character, the things of the Spirit; which binds a man to the physical and temporal and blinds him to the things which are spiritual and eternal.

It is just here that Socialism finds its strongest condemnation. I am not of those who would make a wholesale condemnation of Socialism. There are many things for which it stands which are praiseworthy, things which are in completest harmony with the teachings of Christ. Indeed there is a school of Socialism which claims that Jesus was a Socialist, the members of which delight to call themselves Christian Socialists.

I do not condemn Socialism because it demands a more equitable distribution of the wealth of the world; or because it has set for its goal a condition of affairs where everyone shall be well fed, well housed, and no overworked in the comunity.

I do not condemn it because it preaches the doctrine that the great natural resources of the world, the land, the mines, the forests, the water are the property of the people and not of a few men who use these things for their own enrichment, and the slavery of the multitudes. The thing which condemns Socialism, from the Christian standpoint, is its estimate of life. That estimate is purely a materialistic one. Its chief concern is work and wages, earthly comfort and the things of time. And any such program as that for the life of immortal beings, made in the image of God, carries with it its own condemnation, for "Life does not consist in the abundance of the things which a man possesses." Over against such a program of life is the program of the Master: "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." Christ taught that the whole duty of man is not physical enjoyment, nor for that matter, intellectual or aesthetic enjoyment." He taught us that any such ideal for life as that is poor and barren, good enough for animals; but for men made in the image of God with spiritual instincts and experiences, it is not sufficient. As Victor Hugo says: "Truth is nourishment as well as wheat," or as the Master elsewhere says: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

GOOD EGGS AND THE BAD ONES

As regards quality an egg is one of the most difficult of food products to grade. Fortunately, the egg is semi-transparent when held before the light, and permits, if carefully rotated, of even minor defects being seen. Many appliances for commercial and private use have been invented for the detection of bad eggs, and it is now possible for anyone with a little practice to tell at a glance the main points between good and bad eggs.

In order to teach the proper methods of examination there has been prepared, under the direction of the Live Stock Commissioner, a pamphlet entitled "The Candling o' Eggs," by Mr. W. A. Brown, B.S.A., chief of the poultry division. This pamphlet, which is No. 3 of the Live Stock Division, points out clearly that the size of the air cell, the consistency of the albumen, the color and mobility of the yolk and the general transparency of the whole egg are the factors most generally recognized as determining the quality. It also explains the construction of a simple home-made device which gives excellent satisfaction in the testing of eggs.

This pamphlet, which can be secured by making application to the publications branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, concludes with the following paragraph: "Store-keepers will find it to their advantage to acquire facility in candling, and it is recommended that every housewife should provide herself with a simple candling appliance, by the different use of which she may safeguard her family from many unpleasant occurrences at hte breakfast table."

MARGARET ANGLIN

To Appear at "The Grand"—Welcome News for Local Theatre-Goers.

Manager Turner announces as the attraction at "The Grand" on Monday, January 26th, Margaret Anglin and a notable Shakespearean organization in an elaborate revival of "As You Like It," in which Miss Anglin will be seen in the role of Rosalind. Miss Anglin has devoted years of study and experience to her present Shakespearean revivals, and from all accounts, local theatre-goers will have an opportunity of seeing Shakespere acted by a company of superlative artists, and not by amateurs recruited from the Metropolitan schools of acting. When Miss Anglin resolved last season to return to the Shakespearean drama, she announced that she would assemble an organization of players experienced and trained in the so-called "legitimate" school. Her organization numbers upward of forty people, every one of whom has had years of experience in the Shakespearean and classic drama. The principals are Fuller Mellish, Ian MacLaren, Ruth Holt-Boucicault, Eric Blind, Max Montesole, Eugene Shakespere, Wallace Widdecomb, Felice Morris, Allan Thomas and Florence Wollerson, each of whom were engaged on account of their special fitness for the parts assigned them. The scenic equipment for Miss Anglin's production is vast and elaborate, requiring three cars for its transportation.

MARGARET ANGLIN.

Street Car Victim Dies.

TORONTO, Jan. 19. — Alexander McPherson, 19 Mount Stephen avenue, the Toronto Railway employe, who was injured in the King street car barn accident, just before midnight on the night of the 14th, died of his injuries at St. Michael's Hospital, at 12 o'clock last night.

His death puts the two men being held by the police on criminal negligence charges, in a much more serious position. Conductor Hendry, who was refused bail, will in all probability, face a manslaughter charge, and Henry Gilbert, who was allowed out on $500 bail, possibly that of criminal negligence.

LISBON, Jan. 19.—Strikers in ambush behind the parapet of a viaduct on Friday threw three dynamite bombs and fired a volley at a train on which high railroad officials, guarded by soldiers were inspecting the condition of the tracks. Three of the soldiers were wounded, but others of their party succeeded in arresting several of the strikers before they could make their escape in an automobile.

BERLIN, Jan. 19.—The list of decorations made public yesterday includes the Red Eagle of the third class, with knot, to Col. Von Reuter, who recently was acquitted by court-martial of charges made against him in connection with the troubles between the military and the townspeople at Zabern, Alsace. When the last army list was published on Nov. 6, 1913, Col. Von Reuter held only the Red Eagle of the four class.

Among others decorated was Rear-Admiral Von Reuben-Paschwitz, who commanded the German squadron which visited the United States in 1912. He receives the Red Eagle of the second class with oak wreath.

Victoria Blacklisted by Navy?

VANCOUVER, Jan. 19.—That constant spite and malice on the part of officers of his Majesty's navy in the Pacific against the port of Victoria, is in a large measure responsible for the placing of the contract of the repairing of the Algerine in Seattle, was the startling statement made by H. F. Bullen to the Board of Trade Saturday.

"I think H. M. naval officers should receive a severe reprimand," said Mr. Bullen, "not only from the organizations in this city, but by the Admiralty as well. I say it without fear of being challenged, that an officer of the navy in this city stated flat-footed, that no Victoria firm would be allowed to do any work for the Admiralty."

American Artist Murdered?

ROME, Jan. 19. — Advices from Sassari, Sardinia, state that the body of Miss Ellen Giles, a writer and artist of Philadelphia, has been found there. She had been killed by a revolver shot, and it was at first reported she had committed suicide, but further investigation led the police to believe she had been murdered.

Miss Giles had been studying the historic monuments and customs of the people. She appeared to be well supplied with funds, $100 in Italian money being found in her pockets.

KEEPING SIR JAMES ALIVE BY ADMINISTERING STIMULANTS

Doctors Thought the End Had Come This Morning.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Sir James Whitney is hourly growing weaker. It is hardly expected he can last another day. The Premier had a very bad turn at ten o'clock this morning, when for a few minutes the doctors thought the end had come. Heart stimulants however, revived him and he was conscious for a time.

"We are just keeping him alive with heart stimulants," said Dr. McPhedran, with an ominous shake of the head.

Dr. McPhedran holds out practically no hope for recovery.

LAND SPECULATION IS WORSE THAN GAMBLING AT CARDS

Presbyterian and Methodist Young People at Variance Verbal Combat Between Two Societies—St. Paul's Wins the Debate

Last evening the young Methodists and Presbyterians of George St. and St. Paul's Churches met in the school room of George Street Church to debate the question "Whether it is worse to make money by speculating in land than by gambling in cards."

A very large number from both churches attended, and an interesting and enjoyable evening was spent. The debate was presided over by Mr. Hill, president of St. Paul's Guild, who was introduced by Mr. C. S. Thompson, of George St. League.

The following were the rules of the debates:

1. Each society shall be represented by two lay members.
2. Their contestants shall not read their arguments or speeches.
3. Each speaker shall have twelve minutes and the affirmative leader five minutes to reply.
4. Each society shall provide a suitable judge, and the challengers shall provide a chairman of the judges, a third suitable person, he being a member of neither society.
5. The following points shall be considered in arriving at a decision by the judges:

1, Delivery; 2, style and language, 3, argument.

The wording of the debate was: "Resolved that it is worse to make money speculating in land than by gambling at cards."

The contestants were:

St. Paul's Guild—Mr. A. Brown, Mr. S. Taylor.

George St. Epworth League—Mr. T. Shields, Mr. A. Morrow.

The judges were:

St. Paul's Guild—Mr. H. B. Cowan.

George St. E. League—Mr. G. N. Gordon.

Chairman of Judges—Mr. S. J. Stubbs.

Mr. S. Taylor led off for the affirmative; he said that God had forbidden ownership of land. Speculation made a few people rich while it brought suffering to the poor. Land values are created by the community and land should belong to the community. The man who speculates in land takes the gambler's chance. Who is the real owner of the land? We are told in Genesis that God created the earth—therefore the land belongs to God Almighty. No one can have absolute ownership of land. The Bible says: "The land shall not be sold." The speaker then went on to prove his points by a drawing on a board, to the effect that landlordism was an injustice as it took to itself what belonged to all.

Mr. A. Morrow followed for the negative. In reply to the argument of the last speaker said that if we cannot buy and sell land, then we cannot buy and sell or own anything. Speculation in land, he argued, is based upon judgment, while gambling at cards is based upon chance. In land speculation neither sides need lose money, while at cards one side is bound to lose. Who would not rather speculate $1,000 on real estate than on a game of cards? Speculation is the struggle of intelligence, as one had to study environment. The gambler renders no value to the community but is a parasite. The speculator exercises judgment and contributes to advancement.

Mr. A. Brown followed with a bright and interesting speech for the affirmative. He said that speculation was worse than card gambling, because it enslaved those who had no land of their own. Card playing was indulged in by the few and affected the few, but speculation was world-wide in its evil effects. The speculator takes something from the public and gives nothing in return. He buys a plot of land and when it goes up in value by the progress of the city, he reaps all the profits. He remarked that there were people here in Peterboro, and maybe in the audience who had reaped profits from speculation in land they had never seen, out west. He spoke of the land slaves of England and the States. He said that J. D. Rockefeller gets as much in one day from his speculations as a workingman gets in 338 years. If we could only get rid of the land speculator, the earth would be turned into heaven.

Mr. T. Shields then took up the cudgels for the League and defended the speculator. He gave a graphic picture of the curse of gambling and the horrors of Monte Carlo. He argued the question from the moral side and tried to prove that from the moral standpoint there was no comparison between the card gambler and the speculator.

After a brief reply by Mr. Taylor, the judges retired to consider their verdict, and the audience were served with refreshments.

Mr. S. J. Stubbs in announcing the verdict, congratulated the debaters upon their fluency and the topic of their arguments and added a little criticism. He said that they had some difficulty in arriving at a verdict, owing to the wording of the subject of debate. They had decided that St. Paul's had had the best of the argument.

Rev. Robert Pogue and Rev. R. G. Peever spoke a few words. Mr. Pogue hoped that his congregation as a result of that meeting, would disgorge all their ill-gotten gains by next Sabbath so that they could build a fine new Sunday School.

Miss Dorothy Allan contributed a vocal solo and little Miss Myra Baird gave a selection on the piano.

NEARING THE END

Strathcona's Death is Only Matter of Short Time, It is Felt

Canadian Press Despatch

LONDON, Jan. 20.—Lord Strathcona passed a fair night but be has continued to lose ground, and is gradually sinking.

LONDON—later—Lord Strathcona is dying. The doctors say he became unconscious at half past four this afternoon.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—At 2 o'clock this (Tuesday) morning the condition of Lord Strathcona was stated to be extremely grave and the end was expected at any moment.

No official bulletin has been issued since yesterday afternoon.

The Financial News give prominence this morning to the statement that such dispositions have been made with regard to Lord Strathcona's very large holdings in leading Canadian securities as will completely obviate any shock to the market in the event of the present grave apprehensions being realised.

The arrival in London Sunday morning by special midnight train from Edinburgh of Mr. Garson, Lord Strathcona's solicitor, reminded the public that Lord Strathcona's interests in this country are concentrated with Mr. Garson's law firm of Edinburgh.

Mr. Garson has long been entrusted with Lord Strathcona's will and all matters concerning the peerage and succession, also his British properties which consist chiefly of the London residence in Grosvenor Square, "Debden Hall," a fine country seat in Essex, "Glencoe" with its moors and deer forests; and also "Colonsay," a large island off the west coast of Scotland which he acquired from the executors of the late Sir John McNeill some years ago.

It is said that since the death of Lady Strathcona, a few weeks ago, the High Commissioner has lost his old zest for life.

Directors' Report.

As proposed and recommended a year ago, the new gates and fences of a permanent character at the entrance of the cemetery have been erected during the past year, and your Directors believe they will be found to possess in a very considerable degree a character of elegance and distinction, and to harmonize with the adjacent beautiful burial grounds. As will be remembered, the corner stone was, with befitting ceremony laid on the 8th day of July last. It had been intended that a new fence would be erected on the West and South limits of the cemetery adjoining Haggart Street last year, but this was deferred to the present. In view of the fact that the old fence is generally in a bad condition it is expected by your Directors that the matter of a new fence will be given earnest and early consideration by the in-coming Board.

The grounds where the old wooden buildings stood in the cemetery have been cleared, levelled and put in lawn, and the appearance of the grounds at this point has been much improved.

A large amount of cinders were obtained during the past summer and spread on the drive ways and thoroughly rolled in. This has been of decided advantage, and may, your Directors think, be continued.

Debentures for $2500 have been paid off and a new debenture for $2000 obtained by the Company. Your Directors recommend the purchase of a debenture for $1000 which will place the reserve maintenance fund at $16,417.31.

Your Directors are assured that a good showing for the year's operations generally on the grounds has been made, and it has been gratifying to them to frequently hear favorable comment upon the beauty of the cemetery from all using it or taking an interest in its good appearance.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. MOORE.
President.

Superintendent's Report.

Gentlemen:—

The past year has been a very busy one in your Cemetery. A great amount of new work having been undertaken, an outline of which I give below.

In the first place the grounds whereon the old stable and sheds stood were cleaned up, graded and seeded. This is the first step towards beautifying the Lake Shore Drive, which, when once completed, will be one of the most beautiful sections of a system of boulevard drives which I trust will be shortly undertaken by our City.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NICHOLLS HOSPITAL BOARD

SMALL CUT LED TO LOSS OF LIMB

Mr. Jos. Jones, London Street, Suffered Amputation of Leg.

It will be with extreme regret that the many friends and acquaintances of Mr. Jos. Jones, 149 London St., will learn that he was removed to the Nicholl's Hospital this morning to have his leg amputated. Some time ago Mr. Jones was manicuring a toe nail and in some manner he inflicted a slight wound in the big toe. He thought nothing of it at the time but later the wound gave considerable trouble. Finally blood poisoning set in.

The big toe was amputated but the poison bad spread into the leg and later it developed into gangrene. As a final step toward saving his life, the leg was amputated at the knee. The Review inquired this afternoon and learned that Mr. Jones is doing as well as can be expected.

GIRL TELLS HER STORY TO COURT

John McClay is Committed for Trial by County Judge.

John McClay, was this morning committed for trial by Magistrate Dumble on the charge of supplying drugs to Margaret Elmdale. Mr. Joseph Wearing conducted the prosecution while the prisoner was defended by Mr. V. J. McElderry.

McClay pleaded not guilty and declined to elect.

In the witness box the girl told a tearful story of how she had been wronged by the prisoner. She had met McClay a number of times on the street and one night of the circus in the month of June he had stopped her and asked her to go to the show. She went. The next day he met her and they made "a date" to go walking. The "date" was carried out and the prisoner became very intimate with her but was resisted. She met him several times after that.

It was during these meetings she was wronged by the prisoner, not by consent however. Shortly afterward he advised her to see a doctor, and he also procured drugs for her but she refused to take them, not knowing what they were for, until after considerable persuasion on the part of the prisoner. She was not aware of the use of the drugs. She also admitted seeing a local doctor at the advice of a friend and also the prisoner.

The prisoner had also told her he would fix everything all right.

The complainant is an English girl. Her parents are dead, and she has been in the city about two years.

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, JAN. 20, 1914.

FARM PRODUCE.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Canadian Bank of Commerce President Walker made some very interesting comments on business conditions of 1913 in Canada. The reports for the year from the various Provinces have been on the whole very satisfactory. In regard to farm produce in Ontario there are many signs of change and transition in the kind of production. The tempting prices offered by the cities for milk, and the high offers by the United States for cattle have worked great changes. Mr. Walker says:

The dairy industry has always taken a very important place among the various branches of our agriculture, and whilst the money results from the various products have probably this year, as a whole, been profitable, yet we feel there is some cause for concern lest the industry should suffer a serious setback for reasons which have only recently been brought to light. We refer particularly to the large decrease in the number of milch cows in the province between the months of July, 1912 and 1913; namely, 12,138. The slaughter of these animals and the indiscriminate export of them to the United States has brought about this deplorable condition of affairs. It will be easily seen that any continuance of such a course cannot but work to the detriment of the dairy industry of the province, and thoughtful agriculturists should pause and consider whether temporary high prices for beef secure in the end the best financial results. We are inclined to thing not, but that, on the contrary, the best results are obtained through the cheese factories and creameries, coupled with the production of pork, which is the natural complement of this industry. We think it well to quote here the report which we have received from a central point in old Ontario, which only a few years ago was regarded as in the front rank as a cheese-producing district:—

"During the past year farming has undergone a great change from the previous methods, and cheese making and its allied business, hog raising, are being rapidly discontinued. The enormous demand for milk from the cities and for condensed milk have caused the value of milk to rise to such figures as to render cheese making and hog raising unprofitable. The farmers are producing milk and milk only. They sell their calves as soon as possible, and the quantity of cheese made is daily growing less and promises to disappear altogether."

Farmers in this district ought to make a note of these things and profit by the mistakes of the past, especially in regard to hog raising and the conservation of cattle. We have already drawn our readers' attention to destruction and the selling of calves, and we have made some enquiries among farmers near Peterborough on the subject. One farmer informed us that he raises all his stock upon his farm, that he sells none of his grain or hay but feeds it all to his stock. He believes it pays to raise cattle for beef as well as for milk, because while you are feeding your stock you are enriching your land at the same time. This farmer, by the way, sends his cream to the city and reckons that is more profitable than sending it to the factory. President Walker urges farmers to support the cheese industry, but the farmers must support themselves first even if the cheese factory has to go. On this question the farmers themselves have to decide.

THAT MAIL ORDER.

THE EDITOR of the Belleville Ontario has been reading the citizens of Belleville a lesson on civic patriotism which we might well take to ourselves in Peterborough. The gist of the lesson is that we ought to support home industries and patronize local tradesmen. The "Ontario" says:

By patronizing our local merchants, mechanics, factories and industries of every kind, instead of going outside of the city for what we want, whether goods or labor, we keep our money at work in our home town. When a merchant employs two clerks where he employed one before, he has added to the city's employed persons one. When a local mechanic is given work that compels him to hire more help, he adds to the list of employed in the city, and so adds to the unearned increment that goes to enhance the value of all property in the city. In patronizing your home people, you are aiding yourself. By patronizing other places you are adding to the unearned increment of those places. This is all trite, but it is true, and we all know it, but we do not act upon it.

The statement has been made that "the mail order business of Belleville and vicinity is larger han that of any store in the city." If this is e, it can readily be seen that Belleville is los- a pay-roll of a hundred or more people, los- a population of several hundreds, losing all rofits on this vast amount of goods which ong with the cost, to Toronto or some ail-order centre and add to value of prop- re, instead of having these profits and ey spent for labor left in the channels s here. Is Belleville doing the right erself when she pays the salaries of people in Toronto and adds to the f that city five hundred or more? ight in adding to the value of prop- o when she could add these same values to her own property? Is she doing right in cutting off the chance for employment of Belleville people and paying for the employment of a horde of peopde in some other place? Let us bring is still closer home. Are you who read this doing your duty by your fellow twonsmen when you give your patronage to people you do not know in preference to your home people? Are you doing the right thing when yon, by sending your money for supplies to some other city, deprive your neighbor or your neighbor's daughter of a chance to find employment in their home town?

Self-interest demands that every community stand firmly together for whatever helps anyone in that town, for no one can be helped without some others being indirectly benefited thereby. Let us all try the mutual help plan. If we are tempted to send away for something the mail order houses advertise, at least first visit your local stores, see what they can supply the same goods for, and if you do not then find that you can do as well, if not better than by sending away, we lose our guess. If the local stores cannot supply what you want, then, but not till then, are you justified in sending away for goods, and you can do so then without having cause for blushing about it.

This puts the position very clearly and calls for some reply from citizens who for one reason or another send out of town for goods that they can get right here. We would like to hear from our readers upon this question. They doubtless have something to say in defence of themselves and it would be good for our tradespeople to know just why so many people of Peterborough pass them by and send their money out of the city. There are two sides to every question. The Belleville editor has presented one side admirably, but what of the other side?

Is it true that people have a craze for mail-order dealing? Do they send to Toronto for goods that they can procure as cheaply and as satisfactorily in Peterborough? We are anxious to know these things; for this mail-order business should stop, so far as Peterborough is concerned. It can only be stopped by creating a better understanding between buyer and seller.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A Toronto theatrical advertisement reads: "A company of 125 beautiful girls—bigger than a three-ring circus."—Some Girls!

THE HIGH COST OF RADIUM is now a problem which scientists are taking into serious consideration. Needless to say it is not troubling the ordinary house-wife so much as the high price of food and clothing just now.

THERE IS AN AGITATION in rifle-shooting circles in London, England, for the abolition of the bull's-eye. It is argued by some that this would "kill the interest in rifle-shooting." The bull would scarcely object to this, but what has the "magpie" got to say in the matter?

IT MUST STRIKE the readers of The Examiner as somewhat inconsistent that it should now be so keen for a Senatorship for Peterborough, when for 15 years the opportunity for Sir Wilfrid to do something in that way was ignored.

THE WOMEN are moving pretty rapidly in Sweden. Not content with the franchise they are now to enjoy the privilege of sitting in Parliament. This does not necessarily reflect very great credit upon the intelligence of the men of Sweden. No Britisher ever prided himself upon having a head like a swede.

A JAPANESE SEISMOLOGIST has committed suicide, the act dignified by the name of "hara-kiri" in Japan. The reason for his rash act was because he informed the citizens of Kagoshima that they were in no danger from the eruption of the volcano Sakura-Jima which destroyed their city. Nature has a habit of upsetting all our calculations, even the weather man can never be quite sure of his "probs."

WHETHER WE GET a woman officer on the police staff of Peterborough or not, we have already got quite an army of vigilant women in the Council of Women. Their report of local moral conditions made rather sad reading. What will the Local Council of Men do in the matter? A Woman Police Officer will not cure this state of things, it may help, but a severer handling of the prowlers who accost young women would help a great deal too—and the men Police only can do this. Get after these prowlers, Mr. Policeman, and put them behind the bars where all wild-beasts ought to be.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Pork and Devils.

The Gazette.

An evangelist has caused a decline in the price of pork at Mount Braddock, Pa., by frightening the people into the belief that porkers are infested with devils now as they are credited with having been in ancient times. One large dealer has disposed of all his pigs at bargain prices and others are following his example. The housewives' leagues should secure the services of the alarmist evangelist and get him to talk to the cattle breeders and the packers of the country. He might convert them into a slaughtering of prices.

For The Homeless Wanderer.

The Globe.

There were people in Toronto who had no place in which to sleep on Monday night when 22 below zero was recorded. Toronto ought not to turn its back on the homeless wanderer. "Be thou warmed and fed" is not a self-operating injunction. There are dozens of down-town church basements in the city that could be kept open all night just now for the benefit of the homeless and penniless. The cost in fuel and labor would be little compared to the result. There are probably not a few men's associations the members of which would be glad to provide coffee and rolls in the morning for those who have nthing with which to pay for either food or shelter. It looks as if the churches might do much toward lessening the suffering that is inevitable during such a cold dip as we are now experiencing.

THE OLD MAN

By Walt Mason

Be kind to your daddy, O gamboling youth; his feet are now sluggish and cold; intent on your pleasures, you don't see the truth, which is that your dad's growing old. Ah, once he could whip forty bushels of snakes, but now he is spavined and lame; his joints are all rusty and tortured with aches, and weary and worn is his frame. He toiled and he slaved like a government mule to see that his kids had a chance; he fed them and clothed them and sent them to school, rejoiced when he marked their advance. The landscape is moist with the billows of sweat he cheerfully shed as he toiled, to bring up his children and keep out of debt, and see that the home kettle boiled. He dressed in old duds that his Mary and Jane might bloom like the roses in June, and oft when you swallowed your porterhouse steak, your daddy was chewing a prune. And now that he's worn by his burden of care, just show you are worth all he did; look out for his comfort, and hand him his chair, and hang up his slicker and lid.

MR. BURNHAM IN THE HOUSE

Says People Are More Interested in the Tango Than in Liberal Theories.

In the debate on the speech from the Throne in the House of Commons, yesterday, the question of the high cost of living was discussed. Sir Wilfred repeated his blue ruin prophesies and other Liberals joined in the lament.

Mr. Burnham (West Peterboro), in an excellent speech, declared that the people were more interested in the tango than in the fine-spun political theories of the Liberal leaders. He asserted that the Liberal majority in the Senate had been used by the Opposition in the Commons to defeat the Highways Bill and the Naval Bill. The members of the Opposition had realized that the bills would appeal to the people and that they were hopelessly ont of power. They had therefore called upon the Senate to act. As to the demand for tariff reductions, he pointed out that the cost of living was lower in France, the most highly protected country in the world.

MOYES NOT PRESENT.

But Mysterious Papers Will Be Privately Read by Court.

TORONTO, Jan. 20. — Instead of the serious developments expected at the resumed inquiry into the affairs of the Ontario West Shore Railway Co. by the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board at the Parliament Buildings yesterday, the air of mystery thickened and the investigation was adjourned sine die.

Mr. John M. Moyes, ex-president of the railway, who has been persistently called as a material witness, was absent and a doctor's certificate of illness was presented. It said Mr. Moyes was too ill for mental or physical effort.

The much-talked-of papers connected with the inquiry were on hand in charge of Crown Attorney Corley and Detective Twigg of the Toronto detective department, and this was the signal for much discussion regarding their ownership and as to whether they should be opened to the public gaze before Mr. Moyes could be present. It was finally decided to allow Messrs. Wm. Proudfoot, K.C., M.P.P., and Herbert Lennox, K.C., M.P.P., the respective counsel for the municipalities interested in the road and Mr. Moyes, to open and inspect them in the presence of a representative of the Railway Board and accountants to be appointed by that body.

The papers were seized at the home of William Baxter of Toronto, on a search warrant.

Elephants' Teeth.

The elephant has no cutting teeth like most animals, but only a series of molars. These molars or grinders as they wear away gradually move forward in the jaw, and the remnant of the tooth, when the surface is completely destroyed, is cast out in front. The same molar can thus be replaced as many as eight times. The tusks, which are only enormously elongated teeth, can be renewed only once. This wearing process and the ejection of the stump of the tooth go on very slowly during the life of the elephant. Only one or two teeth at a time are in use or in view in each jaw. There are always other teeth waiting to pass forward and begin their work, although there is a limit to this succession, for, when the last has come into use and been worn down, the elephant can no longer chew his food and must die of starvation, if he has not already succumbed to old age.

The Poet's Banknotes.

In "The Tragedy of Isabella II." it is said that the unfortunate Spanish queen, blessed with generous impulses, was exceedingly charitable. Unfortunately she had no notion of the value of money and would want to give away sums out of all proportion to the occasion. Once the queen had commanded a large grant in aid to a man of letters, and the steward, in order to give her a just idea of its magnitude, decided to present the donation in the form of many banknotes of small value—enough of them to paper the walls of the boudoir. Isabella was startled—she would never have believed, she said, that there were so many banknotes in the world. "But no matter," she concluded. "Since banknotes are so easy to get, it is quite proper to send the poor poet plenty of them."

Three ladies had planned a drive together, but when the hour appointed came one of them asked to be excused on the score of an attack of indigestion. Her companions expressed their disappointment and sympathy, but the elder of them insisted that the excuse was insufficient.

"You shouldn't let yourself be governed by such ideas," she said. "It is really all as you think. What is indigestion, anyway?"

The third lady, wishing to avoid the apparently impending discussion on mental control of illness, broke in quickly:

"Indigestion," she said, "is the failure to adjust a square meal to a round stomach."—Harper's.

By WALTER C. RADCLIFFE

While making a tour in Spain I stopped one evening at a little hostelry in the province of Cordova. It was quite dark before I ate my supper, and the table was dimly lighted by a couple of candles. But behind me was an open door through which streamed a bright light from a kerosene lamp hanging in the hall. During the evening I sat at the supper table reading, being alone, with no one to talk to. I spent the time thus till 10 o'clock, when I closed my book and pushed back my chair preparatory to going to my room and to bed.

Just as I did so I saw on the white wall before me a shadow of a figure. The head and shoulders only were defined, and even from these I could not tell whether the person behind me was man or woman. I sat looking at it before turning to see who it was, for it was immovable, and I fancied that it was watching me. One thing about it arrested my attention. The shadow of the head was so shaped as to convince me that either the face or the back was turned directly toward me. That which I noticed especially was that while one ear cast a shadow the other did not. I was speculating how this could be when I saw the shadow of an arm slowly raised. In the hand was something, either club or knife.

I did not stop to consider whether I was about to make myself ridiculous; I instinctively ducked under the table. There I remained a few minutes and, hearing no sound, peeped from under the cloth. Seeing no one, I slowly crawled out, keeping an eye open for any one who might be laying for me. Gradually straightening up, I stood and looked about me. The shadow had disappeared; I was alone. Looking downward, I saw something red on my trousers. I put my hand on it. It was wet; there was a slit in the cloth. I pulled up my trousers and saw that the calf of my leg had been slit by some sharp instrument. The wound was still bleeding.

I had a problem to decide, and quickly. Some one had intended to murder me, doubtless with a view to appropriating my effects, but the attempt had been foiled by my quick duck. I was still in danger. What should I do? Go out into the darkness or remain where I was? I decided that my best chance was to pretend to be undisturbed till I could get at my revolver, which was in my room.

"Landlord!" I called. "A light. I am going to bed."

"Si, senor," and he brought me a candle.

"I fell asleep over my book and dreamed that some one was going to murder me. I ducked under the table. Wasn't it ridiculous?"

"Ridiculous! Yes, certainly."

"Well, good night."

My first act on reaching my room was to lock the door, the second to examine my wound. It was some two inches long and about a quarter of an inch deep.

After deliberation I concluded to remain where I was till morning. Quite possibly the would be murderer was unaware that he had cut me, and the landlord might have been deceived by my story of a dream. I kept awake all night, with my revolver cocked in my hand. In the morning I mussed the bedclothing, and after making such sounds as one would make in dressing I softly opened my door and looked carefully out into the hall. Seeing no enemy, I went downstairs. Reassured at the ordinary appearance of those getting breakfast, I determined to keep up my simulation, and, taking a seat at the breakfast table with my back to the wall, where I had seen the shadow, I deliberately partook of the meal, then went out, paid my bill and departed.

If the persons in that house had known what was in my mind—in other words, if I had not deceived them—I would never have been permitted to depart. I went to the city of Cordova and straight to a police station, where I told my experience to an officer. He was much interested in my story and when I had finished said:

"There are bandits in the mountains near where you were lodged, and we have for some time suspected that the landlord of the inn is in league with them. Persons have been missed, traced to that place, after which nothing has been learned concerning them. We will now set a trap for them."

I remained in Cordova several weeks awaiting the results of the trapping. One day the landlord and half a dozen ill favored men who had been caught red handed were marched into the town to the police station. I went there and looked them over. The chief police officer inspected them and, going to one villainous looking man whose hair fell over his ears, pulled it aside and exposed a place where an ear should be, but it was not there.

"Hah—Jose Madrillo! So you have turned up again, eh?"

"The man of the shadow!" I exclaimed.

Madrillo was an old offender who had lost an ear in a fight. Why he did not keep his hair in position when he attacked me I don't know. I suspect being among friends, he was careless and did not realize that his shadow was giving him away.

The landlord and the bandits except Madrillo were imprisoned. He was executed.

SQUELCHING A NUISANCE.

Returned Tourist Got Paid Back In His Own Coin.

One general nuisance (a traveler who returned from his first European trip a few weeks ago and has been a bore to his friends ever since) was substantially squelched on a wet day recently.

"Isn't this weather the limit?" he inquired as he met a friend who was equally aware that the gamut of atmospheric change had been run in the preceding twenty-four hours. "Reminds me of the night I spent at a pretty little hotel on an Alpine lake."

"Well?" responded his friend, hoping it would be short.

"When I arrived the sun was just going down on a scene of unsurpassed beauty. The hotel was entirely surrounded by blooming gardens and green terraces leading down to a charming little lake colored by the last rays of the sun and prettily marked by the shadows cast by trees on shore. The next morning the landscape was buried under two feet of snow. Some change, eh?"

"Huh!" was the preliminary of the squelcher. "In Minnesota when I was a boy I recall a quicker change than that. Some of us boys were having a snow battle. One let fly a snowball at another. It scalded him to death!"—New York Tribune.

Value of a Lawyer's Talk.

A young lawyer was defending an old convict on the charge of burglary in a state where the court rules allow each side one hour to address the jury. The young lawyer, somewhat nervous, consulted a veteran member of the bar who happened to be standing near. "How much time do you think I should take up in addressing the jury?" he asked in a rather pompous manner.

"Take the full hour," was the gruff reply.

"The full hour! Why, I intended to take only fifteen minutes."

"Take the full hour," responded the old lawyer.

"But, why?"

"Because the longer you talk the longer you will keep your client out of jail."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Training John.

A California woman in training a new Chinese servant to wait on the door had her daughter ring the bell and present her card. The next afternoon a friend called and handed her card to the Celestial, who pulled out of his sleeve the card the daughter of the house had presented the afternoon before and carefully compared the two. "Tickee no matchee!" he exclaimed, handing back the visitor's card. "No can come in!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Way of Modern Fathers.

"Yes, before papa would consent to my marrying George he insisted on looking up his past life."

"Mercy! That was risky."

"But he didn't go very far. He stopped just as he found that George was the only nephew of three rich uncles."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Natural Supposition.

"Johnny," the teacher asked, "can you tell me anything about Christopher Columbus?"

"He discovered America."

"Yes. What else did he do?"

"I s'pose he went home and lectured about it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Resemblance.

He (to wife at the piano)—That new piece you are trying is pretty difficult, isn't it?

She—Yes; I feel like an aviator.

He—How so?

She—I'm trying to conquer the air.—Boston Transcript.

The Tender Age.

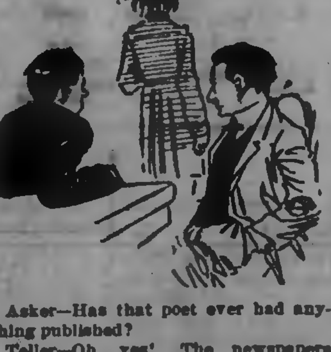
"What's the matter, little boy?"

"M-maw's gone and drownded all the kittens."

"Dear, dear! Now, that's too bad."

"Yep. An' she p-promised—boohoo—that I cud do it!"—Everybody's.

Ample Success.



Asker—Has that poet ever had anything published?

Teller—Oh, yes! The newspapers published the poems he wrote to a widow who sued him for breach of promise.—Chicago Daily News.

A Curious Turkish Rug.

Quite an odd interpretation of the directions sent to a Turkish rug manufacturer has resulted in a rug the value of which is enhanced about $1,000 as a curiosity. The plans for making the rug were drawn here and sent over to the maker, who has copied everything with painstaking fidelity. The rug is now in this city and is a beautiful and expensive thing in itself, but authorities say that it is worth over here the full $1,000 more than the order price. The oddity is that the maker has woven English words into the design wherever they were to be found on the plan sent to him. So that in one corner one may read, "Put blue here." In another part, "Put yellow here," or "Put green here."—Philadelphia Record.

FOUR WINTERS OF RHEUMATISM
Cured of Sciatica And Muscular Rheumatism By "Fruit-a-tives" RIDGETOWN, ONT., May 21st. 1913.
"Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism. It was the only medicine that made any impression on me. I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism. I was laid up for four winters with Sciatica and Muscular Rheumatism, and was completely crippled.
Some neighbor of mine told me that "Fruit-a-tives" helped him, and I started in to take them. I used "Fruit-a-tives" faithfully for two years, taking them every day as I saw they were doing me good, and the results were marvellous.
For over two years, I have been completely free from any Rheumatic Pains whatever, and I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit." W. H. RACHER.

OLD BROAD CREEK CHURCH.

It Is In Ruins Now, Yet Washington Once Worshiped There.

Within eight miles from the national capitol at Washington is an old church which was built in 1694. Its parish was founded even before that. Very few people have ever heard of this old church, for the simple reason that for the past fifty years the place has been falling to rack and ruin.

It is a famous church, and in the early days it was a well known parish, for it was the first that was founded near the city of Washington. Of late years the old families have all moved away, and their children have had interests elsewhere. They have all forgotten the little old church where their ancestors worshiped.

It was this church of St. John's that George Washington attended on his frequent visits to its side of the river. A few years back those old parishioners who could remember their father's stories of having seen Washington rowed by his slaves over from Mount Vernon to service there, put in Washington's pew in the old church a silver plate as a memorial to him.

The old graveyard is overgrown with honeysuckle, but beneath the masses of vine there are many famous old Maryland people buried.

The church itself is a curious old structure. It is nearly square and the bricks, which are of exceptional size, were imported from England. The hardware was also imported.

There is no chancel at all in the church. There is a place where the altar should be that is set apart from the church by a small rail. At one time there was a great high pulpit, but this was taken out by some rector who thought that it was unnecessary.—Living Church.

EXPENSIVE DINING.

Prices Soar Sky High at the Hotel des Roches Noires.

Trouville is in the season one of the most expensive spots in Europe. It contains what is assuredly one of the most expensive hotels in Europe. The individual who takes his wife and family to the Hotel des Roches Noires for, say, a month in the high season and does them really well—that is, gives them the best which the house has to offer—when he comes away—if he has paid his bill—has left a small fortune behind him.

The idea that an Englishman because he is being charged a high price is being cheated is absurd. Nowadays—whatever it used to be once upon a time—an Englishman in a really smart hotel in France is looked at askance. French people on pleasure bent are much more extravagant than we are. They do not seem to care what they spend.

I remember dining once at Trouville when a basket of nectarines was offered by the head waiter. They were quite nice nectarines, but that head waiter wanted 25 francs apiece. Five dollars for two or three mouthfuls seemed to me too much, but those nectarines all went. There was scarcely a Frenchman in the room who did not treat himself to one. At the next table to mine was a man with his wife and his daughter. They had three apiece, $45 for dessert as a windup to an extremely expensive dinner! — Richard Marsh in Strand Magazine.

Changing Lead to Gold.

Professor Soddy makes the assertion boldly that it is only a question of application to change lead into gold. He says that while now we can only work with electricity at 100,000 volts it is only a matter of perfecting the method to be able to work at ten times that voltage when the baser metals can be changed into the more precious. In other words, electricity, when brought to its highest efficiency and application, is the real philosopher's stone for which the alchemists of the middle ages searched so long.—New York World.

Neatly Managed.

"Are you sure your husband will stay awake and look after the baby?" asked one woman.

"Oh, yes," replied the other. "I gave him a Welsh rabbit for dinner that won't let him sleep a wink."—Washington Star.

Bearded Women in France.

According to a French law passed in the eighteenth century, any woman growing a beard has, ipso facto, the right to dress like a man.

Diligence is the mother of good luck, and God gives all things to industry.—Benjamin Franklin.

NEARLY DIED OF STONE IN THE BLADDER
GIN PILLS SAVED HIM
513 JAMES ST., HAMILTON, ONT.
"Five years ago, I was taken down with what the doctors called Inflammation of The Bladder—intense pains in back and loins, and difficulty in urinating, and the attacks, which became more frequent, amounted to unbearable agony. I became so weak that I could not walk across the floor.
My wife read in the papers about GIN PILLS and sent for a box. From the very first, I felt that GIN PILLS were doing me good. The pain was relieved at once and the attacks were less frequent.
In six weeks, the Stone in the Bladder came away. When I recall how I suffered and how now I am healthy and able to work, I cannot express myself strongly enough when I speak of what GIN PILLS have done for me." JOHN HERMAN. 178
GIN PILLS are sold at 50c a box—6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your dealer does not handle them. Sample box free if you write us, mentioning this paper. Money back, if GIN PILLS do not give satisfaction. National Drug & Chem. Co. of Canada, Limited, Toronto.

SANITARY CONDITIONS IN NORTH MONAGHAN

Information From the M. H. O. Should be Sought When Cess Pools Are to be Provided

At the meeting of the Board of Health for North Monaghan, in Dr. Greer's office, Monday afternoon, at two o'clock, all the members of the Board were present.

Mr. W. B. Anderson, Sanitary Inspector, was also present and reported that he had made a house to house canvass of the thickly populated parts of North Monaghan and reported that the sanitary conditions were good.

There was considerable discussion as to the drainage question in the western part of Brownton. It was the opinion of the Board that the property owners whose property the drain runs through, should open up the same so as to allow the water to get away, in the interests of public health.

Apply to M. H. O.

In suburban districts parties contemplating cesspools should first apply to the Medical Health Officer, Dr. T. N. Greer, or the Board of Health, for the township, for instructions as to the requirements of the law. By so doing, the cesspools will be properly constructed.

KRAFCHENKO'S LAWYER SAID TO HAVE PLANNED ESCAPE

Self-Confessed Accomplice in Sensational Delivery of Murderer From Winnipeg Jail Gives Details of Plot, Implicating Hagel, Constable Reid and Another—How Revolver and Rope Were Taken In.

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 20.—Bail amounting to $20,000 was insufficient to release Percy Hagel, John Krafchenko's counsel, when application was made by R. A. Bonnar, K.C., counsel for Hagel, before Sir John Macdonald, yesterday afternoon. Hagel was brought before the court, charged with unlawfully assisting Krafchenko to escape from custody.

"I've defended a good many murderers, and none of them was ever hung, and I don't want this one to hang. If we can't get him on the street one way we will have to try another." According to John H. Buxton, under arrest for assisting in the escape of Krafchenko, testifying yesterday afternoon before the royal commission, Percy Hagel, who Buxton claims engineered the whole plot for escape, had no other motive than shown in the foregoing statement, made to him by Hagel.

Buxton, who was formerly secretary of the Winnipeg Builders' Exchange, told his story without reserve, and it was stranger than any dime novel. It was Buxton who on Sunday night led the police to the sensational and unexpected arrest of Krafchenko. He had then been under arrest nearly twenty-four hours, and as it was his first time behind the bars he quickly caved in and told all be knew to Mayor Deacon.

It is generally understood that Buxton will be given immediate immunity, while the charges against Percy E. Hagel, counsel for Krafchenko, Constable Reid and John Westlake, who sheltered Krafchenko in his room, will be pressed to the limit.

He detailed the whole working out of the plot. The gun and rope were supplied by Buxton to Constable Reid through Hagel, ad taken by Reid to Krafchenko's cell. Buxton secured the gun only after a good deal of trouble, having forced a boy in Ashdowne's hardware store, over whom he had influence, to steal the gun, a Colt automatic. At Hagel's request he bough a hank of ordinary cotton clothesline, which was also given to Reid.

Over and over again Buxton declared that he had no motive whatever himself in assisting, and that it was only when too late that he realized that he was making a fool of himself.

Frank Holt, a young man who shared the rooms with Westlake on Toronto street, declared that be had been forced into the affair unwillingly, and that he kept quiet because he was afraid to "split." He took no active part.

SAYS THE KING MUST SEE THEM

"Or We Shall Know Why," Adds Suffragette.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—"The King has got to see us or we shall know the reason why," Mrs. Dacre-Fox told a meeting of militant suffragettes in London last evening. It was at a meeting called to re-open the campaign for equal suffrage after the recent lull and the women were full of fight.

Mrs. Dacre-Fox said the suffragettes had not anticipated that His Majesty woud refuse to see a deputation of women on Jan. 7, but if he had been advised by his Ministers not to see the women he could not shield himself that way.

"He has got to see us," the speaker added, "or we shall know why. The next deputation will go to Buckingham Palace prepared for all emergencies."

Falls Four Stories To Death.

QUEBEC, Jan. 20. — Dr. Henry Russeau, a member of the St. Frances Snowshoe Club of Sherbrooke, who arrived in Quebec with his club, fell down the elevator shaft of the St. Louis Hotel at three o'clock yesterday morning and was instantly killed.

Dr. Russeau was on the fourth storey of the hotel, and in a dazed state pulled open the closed door to reach the elevator which at the time was at the bottom. He slipped into the space and was hurled to his death.

A Prisoner By Mistake.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20. — Locked since Wednesday morning without food or water or protection from the cold in the hold of his barge, the McCarthy, moored in Hoboken, Captain Nelson Lees was found almost dead from exposure last night. He will probably die. After Lees' crew had unloaded a cargo of potatoes on Wednesday, they closed the hatch, not knowing the captain was in the hold.

STRAIN IS ACUTE

Resignation of Either Churchill or Lloyd George Expected

LONDON, Jan. 20. — The Daily Telegraph asserts that the antagonism between, Winston S. Churchill First Lord of the Admiralty, and David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, on tho question of naval estimates has reached a point where the resignation of one of these Ministers is a possibility of the next few days.

A majority of the Cabinet support Chancellor Lloyd George in opposing Mr. Churchill's estimates, and should the First Lord resign rather than reduce the estimates, the paper adds, the whole Admiralty Board will resign with him.

It is stated that a meeting of the Cabinet will discuss the navy question and Mr. Churchill's attitude on Thursday.

Another Typhus Ship.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—Another typhus ship, the third within two weeks, was detained at quarantine yesterday by Dr. Joseph J. O'Connell, health officer of the port. The vessel is the Kaiser Franz Joseph I. of the Austro-American Line.

The patient on the vessel was removed to Swinborne Island, where the case was diagnosed yesterday as typhus. One hundred and forty-nine steerage passengers who bad been exposed to infection were detained at Hoffman Island for observation until the incubatory period of the disease terminates.

Relief Fund Goes Back.

HOUGHTON, Mich., Jan. 20.—Because of the refusal of members of the Western Federation of Miners to accept the $30,000 collected from the citizens of the copper country for the relief of families who suffered by the Italian Hall disaster, on Christmas Eve, the money may be returned to the donors.

The relief committee will try to distribute the money this week, although union men declare they are able to take care of the sufferers without assistance.

RICH NEVER HANG HE SAYS

OTTAWA, Jan. 20.—Robert Bickerdike, M.P. for St. Lawrence division, thinks that his bill to abolish capital punishment will go through the House. Hon. G. P. Graham is to second it.

"I have interviewed the Minister of Justice," said Mr. Bickerdike, "and he is going to think it over.

"If the gallows are a deterrent against murder, it is only to the poor man. No one ever heard of a rich man being executed in Canada or anywhere else."

HYDRO LIGHTS AT BRANTFORD

Citizens are Delighted at the Big Change Brought About.

Without any fuss of ceremony the Hydro-Electric juice was partially turned on in Brantford on Saturday night, says the Brantford Expositor. The streets illuminated were Colborne, Market, Dalhousie, George and Queen. In all 147 lamps of the single pillar variety were used and they averaged one thousand candle power apiece. The effect was a transformation scene almost equal to one from fairyland. Citizens were out in full force to note the changing of dark Brantford into a "White City" and all who came within the zone of the lighted area were loud in their expressions of satisfaction and delight. "They are some lights" and "Gee, but they are dandy," were some of the expressions heard among the crowd.

The effect on Market street was perhaps more pronounced than on Colbourne for the reason that there were brilliantly lighted shops on both sides of the latter for the Saturday night trade. The flame proved to be soft and steady and so penetrating that in buildings faced by them it was quite possible to read a newspaper or magazine without any artificial aid within.

At present the illuminations which will take place between 7 and 10 p.m., are just to show what the system can do. Soon after the first of next month it is expected to have the entire plant in operation, domestic and otherwise. In the latter regard there are already many requests for installation.

The direct power at the main station is at present 110,000 volts "stepped down" for city use to 26,000 volts.

ornamental wrought iron fence and gates is a fitting monument to the beautiful grounds within. A great amount of pains was taken to make the foundations for the walls substantial. These are built of concrete four feet six inches deep running down to eleven feet at the lake shore, reinforcing iron being put in at this point to guard against the uncertainty of the lake shore bottom. About 200 lineal feet of lake shore outside the gates on the north side was graded and sodded, and a concrete curb was constructed around all grass plots at this point, the whole now complete making a most substantial as well as beautiful entrance.

About one hundred and forty loads of cinders have been used on the roadways, and as these cinders mixed with hardpan clay and sand and rolled make good roadways I would recommend that enough be secured to put all the roadways in good condition.

About two hundred and fifty feet of eight inch tile drain was laid in Section N., emptying into the open drain in the south west part of the Cemetery. This was found necessary owing to a clay bank damming back the water in the spring.

Some fifteen pine trees have been taken out in Section O., so that another Block and lots can be graded and laid out as this land will be required in a short time for burial purposes.

Owing to the condition of the fence on Haggart Street it will be necessary to replace it with a fence that will be in keeping with the new gateway. When this is done practically all permanent works will be completed for some years to come.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

POLICE CHIEF IS LOCKED IN Falls Victim to Sharp Trick of Prisoner.

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Jan. 20.—To be locked up himself in the cell in which he was about to incarcerate a prisoner, was the novel experience of Chief of Police Watt of this town. Thomas Connolly was remanded to the cells on a drunk and disorderly charge, having not sufficiently recovered from the day he was arrested, to stand trial. The chief turned his back to the prisoner for a moment in the corridor of the police cells, when Connolly seized the officer, and, thrusting him into the cell, locked the door and decamped.

The noise raised by the imprisoned policeman finally brought assistance, and Chief Watt was liberated. Connolly was found in a barroom, begging the barkeeper for a drink. He fought all the way back to the cells, but was finally locked up.

When left alone Connolly set fire to the mattresses of his cell cot, and his shouts only saved him from a fiery death. He was taken to another cell and locked up after another big fight.

Caught In Quicksands?

PLYMOUTH, Jan. 20.—"The submarine 'A 7' must be found" was the order issued yesterday at the office of the naval commander-in-chief, who is determined that the search for the ill-fated vessel, which has been missing since Friday, when she disappeared with her crew during manoeuvres here, shall not be given up.

From early morning 12 destroyers, working in pairs, have steamed slowly up and down, sweeping with cables the sandy bottom of Whitesand Bay, but thus far without result. The quest is to be continued throughout the week if necessary, but the impression is growing that the "A 7" may already have been swallowed up by the quicksands which prevail in the vicinity.

GIRL ILL-TREATED.

Deaf and Dumb Child Alleges Terrible Brutality.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Jan. 20.—Deaf and dumb, with a broken arm and an injured hip, emaciated, and thinly-clad, a fifteen-year-old girl giving her name as Winnifred Graham came to police headquarters yesterday claiming that her stepfather had brutally ill-treated her in Merritton and thrown her out of his house five days ago, since which she has been wandering about from place to place getting what she could to keep body and soul together and stopping where she could get a night's shelter.

When questioned on paper she told Chief Kimmins that her injuries were due to her stepfather's treatment. The Medical Officer of Health examined the girl, and found that it would be necessary to treat the arm and reset it. The girl fainted twice on her way to the police station; she was later removed to the hospital. Chief Kimmins will make an investigation.

GEN. PICQUART DEAD.

He Was One of the Central Figures In the Great Dreyfus Trial.

AMIENS, France, Jan. 20. — The death occurred here yesterday of Gen. Marie-Georges Picquart, commander of the second French army corps, who was, except for the prisoner himself, the most prominent figure in the Dreyfus case. He was in his 60th year.

Gen. Picquart, regarded as one of the most brilliant officers of the French army, rose to high rank at a very early age. He was an Alsatian by birth and an extremely good linguist, and this aided his appointment to the general staff. It was while serving there that Picquart discovered a number of forgeries which had brought about the condemnation of Dreyfus to the horrors of Devil's Island. Picquart thereafter became one of the most enthusiastic appellants for a revision of the judgment on Dreyfus, and his zeal led to his arrest and imprisonment on various charges, which were, however, dismissed for want of evidence.

Second Execution For Murder.

OSSINING, N.Y., Jan. 20.—Frank Meuhlfield, alias "the Kid," went smilingly to his death in the electric chair at Sing Sing Prison yesterday. The second man to die in the chair for the murder of Patrick Burns in New York City two years ago. "Big Bill' Lindley, Meuhlfield's pal, was executed on May 6 last.

Both Lindley and Meuhlfield left statements absolving Ralph Furcolo of any connection with the crime. Furcolo is serving a 20-year sentence.

Burns was robbed and shot down in his saloon in the Bronx early on the morning of Feb. 11, 1912.

PREMIER BORDEN SAYS POLICY WILL BE CARRIED OUT

Government's Naval Plans Are Unchanged, Declares Prime Minister in Opening Debate of Session and Slates Sir Wilfrid for Crying "Hard Times" to Aid Cause—Liberals Avoid Tariff Issue.

OTTAWA, Jan. 20. — For all the clamor about the vigor with which the Opposition would fight the naval and tariff issues their assault in the debate on the speech from the throne was anything but slashing yesterday. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had next to nothing to say regarding free food and tariff reduction.

The Prime Minister emphatically announced that the Government policy was unchanged regarding naval aid and he delivered a strong hint that the Senate might need reform if it persisted in blocking the will of the people. He scored Sir Wilfrid severely for crying "hard times."

Mr. McLeod (Con., York, N.B., in opening the debate, urged against any reduction of the maritime representation under redistribution, and stated the claim of the Province of New Brunswick for aid in the building of the St. John Valley, Railway, which he said had been made necessary by a mistake in the route of the N. T. R.

Mr. Lavallee (Con., Bellechasse) seconded the address in French.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier referred to the absence of Hon. Geo. E. Foster from the House. It was true that Mr. Foster was a member of the Dominion Commission, but it was doubtful whether a Cabinet Minister should sit upon a commission of that kind. He could not serve two masters.

The failure of the Government to make any reference to the naval aid bill in the Governor-General's speech was hailed as the indication of the position taken by the Liberal party at last session. We know now, he said, that naval scares, panics and emergencies which from time to time excited the world, were deliberately manufactured by the armor plate manufacturers, who bought space in newspapers.

Sir Wilfrid contended the peril of Canada was financial, not military.

We now had 100,000 idle men in the country. For the first time since 1897 there was unemployment in Canada and the Finance Minister was not justified in saying at Montreal, and subsequently at Gananoque, "that the crisis had come and passed." The Government knew there was a situation to deal with, and had appointed a commission to enquire into the high cost of living. It was a good commission in some respects, but being composed of civil servants, it could not touch the tariff or any political question.

What was the remedy? In Sir Wilfrid's opinion it was wider markets. By a stroke of the pen, the Prime Minister could give Canadian wheat and flour free access to the American market. Why did he not do so? The request had come from the Conservative legislation of Manitoba, from the Legislature of Saskatchewan, from the Grain Growers' Association, and from the Conservative members of the Alberta Legislature.

Sir Wilfrid closed by offering the following amendment, "we regret to represent to Your Royal Highness, that in the gracious speech, with which you have met Parliament while it is admitted that business is in a depressed condition, yet there is no indication on the part of your advisers of determination to take any steps relieving such situation."

Premier Borden in his reply said he was amused at the solicitude displayed by the leader of the Opposition over the absence of Hon. George E. Foster. He doubted if Sir Wilfrid or the Liberal party would shed any tears if Mr. Foster never came back. However, for their relief he would tell them that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was now on the ocean and would be in the House on Monday next.

The Prime Minister reviewed the action of the Dominion Senate in loading the highways bill, the Intercolonial branch lines bill, the tariff board legislation, and the naval aid bill, with amendments which the Government could not accept. In no other country, he said, was the upper chamber so beyond control when it saw fit to defy the people. The Liberals were warned that if they persisted in using their majority in the Senate to defeat the popular will, that the matter of dealing with the upper chamber would be forced upon the Government, in which event Mr. Borden said that the subject would be dealt with once for all.

Reviewing the history of the naval bill the Prime Minister said that the action of the Senate in rejecting that bill had created a profound impression within and without the Empire. It had delighted the foes of Britain and had been interpreted as signifying that Canada would be hereafter not a source of strength but a source of weakness to the British Empire. To pass the bill again, and to have it again rejected by the Senate would be to further discredit the country and imperil the Empire. He promised that the three Dreadnoughts would be built if the Government remained in power.

Mr. Borden said that he regretted to see that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had not scrupled to summon to his assistance the cry of "hard times." He had criticized the Government for having no policy wherewith to cure the present temporary depression, but the amendment offered by him showed that Sir Wilfrid had himself no policy to suggest. He had already retreated from the "free food" platform proclaimed at Hamilton only two months ago.

Mr. Borden did not wonder that the Liberals had fled from the free food policy, which meant that the farmer should be left without protection while the tariff was retained for the benefit of all other classes of the community. As for the trade depression he was confident that the slight check to our prosperity which we were now experiencing would be overcome by a great revival of business with the opening of spring.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer) declared that the greatest event of recent years from the standpoint of Canada had been the passage of the Underwood tariff law. He also urged free wheat. Argentina, he said, accepted the offer of the United States, and Canadian statesmen should be no less allied to the best interest of their country.

High School Lunches.

High school pupils in eight American cities spend $1,500,000 each school year for lunches. The American Home Economics association estimates that this amount, spent for lunches outside of school, will buy only $1,000,000 calories in food value, whereas if spent in the school lunchroom, with its carefully supervised menu, it will purchase the equivalent of 173,000,000 calories.

REPORT IS READY.

Commission's Finding on Technical Education Now In Printer's Hands.

OTTAWA, Jan. 20.—Dr. J. W. Robertson, as chairman of the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education, has now completed his work. The voluminous report is being published by the Labor Department and will be in the hands of the public in a few days.

Dr. Robertson has received numerous invitations to address Boards of Trade and Canadian Clubs throughout the country. He has accepted some of the invitations and will outline the nature of the recent world-wide movement for the training of the productive, constructive and conserving workers of the foremost countries.

SIX WORKMEN DEAD.

Three Others Badly Injured In Dynamite Explosion Near Arnprior.

OTTAWA, Jan. 20.—Six men were killed and three others seriously injured in a dynamite explosion late on Saturday on the C.N.R. construction work at Ross' Point, Que., opposite Arnprior. The name of the dead so far as known are:

Joseph Elliott, aged 22, single, Bristol Mines.

Stephen J. Trudeau, aged 32, with a wife and three children, at Bristol Mines.

Duncan Herron, aged 55, married, but leaving no children, of Bristol Mines.

The other three were foreigners.

The accident occurred on the Pembroke-Ottawa branch of the C.N.R. The men were engaged by Brennan & Grant, contractors, in excavating rock for a bridge pier, and had exploded one blast successfully. Another had been put in, but a premature explosion caught the gang before they had time to reach safety. Four of the men were killed outright and two died later. There were ten men in the gang, and the one who escaped is a Polish laborer, unable to give anything but the barest details.

TWO WOMEN SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Their Own Stories Here Told.

Edmonton, Alberta, Can. — "I think it is no more than right for me to thank you for what your kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me.

"When I wrote to you some time ago I was a very sick woman suffering from female troubles. I had organic inflammation and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend your medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, and think they are fine. I will never be without the medicine in the house."—Mrs. FRANK EMSLEY, 903 Columbia Avenue, Edmonton, Alberta.

The Other Case.

Beatrice, Neb.—"Just after my marriage my left side began to pain me and the pain got so severe at times that I suffered terribly with it. I visited three doctors and each one wanted to operate on me but I would not consent to an operation. I heard of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing for others and I used several bottles of it with the result that I haven't been bothered with my side since then. I am in good health and I have two little girls."—Mrs. R. B. CHILD, Beatrice, Neb.

HELPING CHICAGO GIRLS.

Special Court, With a Woman Judge, For Poorly Paid Workers.

The working girl of Chicago is to have a special court, which is to be of the nature of an employment bureau and provide a place where a girl who is out of money or employment may come and tell her troubles to a woman judge, who will help her get work, put her among people who will be her friends and show her that the city is not the lonesome place she may have thought it.

All the concerns of the city which employ girls are asked to co-operate with Judge Hopkins, who will preside over the court in bettering conditions of girls who have become discouraged and are about to give up the struggle as hopeless.

"This is the plan," said Judge Hopkins: "Any girl in Chicago who is dissatisfied with the wages paid her—that is, if they are below $8 or $10—is asked to report her case to this court, either to Miss Louise Towsey, adult probation officer; myself or one of the women connected with this court. In this way we will be able to give the girl a new start. She will not only be given a new job, but she will find the women of this court the best friends she could find anywhere in Chicago who will look after her and keep her from becoming lonesome."

Big Gun For the Canal.

The great coast defense gun, with a bore sixteen inches in diameter, which was built a dozen years ago at the Watervliet arsenal, is no longer a "white elephant" at the Sandy Hook proving ground, to which it was sent for tests. The gun stood its trials satisfactorily, but because big guns such as this went out of favor and were displaced by high velocity twelve inch guns the big piece has lain for a decade at Sandy Hook. A disappearing gun carriage, however, is now being built to carry the piece, and it will form part of the battery of the defenses of the Panama canal.

Boone's Portrait in Oil.

There never was but one oil portrait of Daniel Boone painted from life, and that was by Chester Harding, a distinguished artist of Boston, who came to Missouri in June, 1820, and painted it in the residence of Flanders Callaway, Boone's son-in-law, where Boone was then living, near the village of Marthasville, in Warren county. The Rev. James E. Welch, one of the oldest Baptist preachers in the state and father of Aikman Welch, attorney general of Missouri during Governor Gamble's administration, sat in Boone's bed behind Boone for him to lean against while Harding painted the picture, the pioneer being too feeble to sit alone. Harding's portrait of Boone now hangs in the state capitol at Frankfort, Ky.—Kansas City Star.

"LITTLE FORTY-TWO"

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

Well, now, but weren't we surprised! You see, we had encountered such a run of hard luck up at Point Despair that one morning we packed up, bag and baggage, to the last man, and set off down the trail in search of something better. I well remember—it was a hot July day, and there were exactly forty-one of us.

Seven miles down the trail we came to what was then called Uncle Joe's road, and right at the intersection was where the surprise hit us. An immigrant family had strayed from the main party for some reason which we never ascertained, and right at the crossing they had been attacked by Indians. The wagon broke down there, and there the pioneer made his defense and fired his last shot. That he was game we needed no other proof than that visible to our eyes.

The family had consisted of five persons, and there they lay, hacked, cut, shot, and a shocking spectacle under that bright sun and birds singing around us. It was a horrible heap which we surrounded, and for a minute no one spoke. Then the astonishment and horror of the men brought forth deep and angry exclamations, and amid the rumpus Uncle Ben Turner suddenly called out:

"Stand back—stand back! Here's a live young un!"

There was for a fact. Half hidden under the torn and blood stained garments of its dead mother was a boy about two years old. What could we do with him?

We had no kisses, no pet words, no dainties nor little clothes. We looked from the baby to each other and scratched our heads, and no man knew what another man thought until finally Uncle Ben called out:

"Boys, it's a token of good luck. If this here what d'ye call it don't bring us a rich find then we've all forgot our homes and wives and children."

That's what we were all waiting for. Up went our hats, cheers made the rocks echo, and the little toddler was one of us—one of forty-two.

When we were ready to go he stood in the circle, screaming out as we coaxed him in turn, but when old Ben finally advanced the young cub held up his arms and nestled against his shoulder as if he had found his own true father. I believe the rest of us were a bit jealous, but we were also helpless. Ben had a kind, fatherly face, a quiet voice, and the boy had only to look into his eyes to trust him.

As to the luck, the old man was right. Four miles farther down the trail the boy pointed to some flowers growing off to the right, and right there we halted and founded what was known for years as Lost Boy Diggings. It was the richest spot for fifty miles around, and all on account of "Little Forty-two," as we called the youngster.

As to the boy himself, he took to old Ben in such a way that they could not be separated.

If Ben wanted a kiss he got a dozen, and all the gold in California wouldn't have bribed the boy off his knee. At night his arm was the child's pillow, and the slightest move of the youngster brought the old man's eyes open. You might have expected that "Little Forty-two" would die on our hands, dying as we did, but he never had a moment's sickness. Old Ben had a way of preparing nourishing dishes out of our coarse provisions, and from the clothing found with the wagon he was kept comfortably clad. Old Ben was no dressmaker, and the boy would have looked queerly dressed in the States, but as long as he was comfortable we didn't care for looks.

"Little Forty-two" had been with us thirteen months and was to our figuring a little over three years old when some of the men who had made their stakes announced their intention of going home. Then the question arose, "Whose boy is our boy?" It was a stumper. Each man felt that he owned a share in the little chap, and each man would have been glad to take him home. We argued and discussed without avail, and old Uncle Ben sat there saying never a word, but his face was as white as chalk. "Little Forty-two" belonged to the old man in every sense, but I believe there would have been some trouble if fate hadn't come stalking up the rocky trail and halted at our diggings.

This was the way of it: Some were packing up and some using the pick and bar, and down near the creek powder was being used to blast the ledge. It was about 10 o'clock in the morning, and a blast had been prepared and the fuse lighted when from our retreat, full ten rods away, we suddenly saw "Little Forty-two" turn the thicket and run straight for the blast. He was laughing and shouting, having been playing "tag" with Uncle Ben. We sprang up and shouted and screamed, and the boy halted within ten feet of the blast and waved his cap at us. Next instant he was hidden in the dust and smoke, and when we reached him some of the men sat down and covered their faces. He was dead.

Well, that wasn't the end of it. That afternoon, after Old Ben had made the poor little body ready for burial and moaned over it and while we were digging a grave, the old man went down to the blast, placed the muzzle of a revolver to his heart and was dead before the report reached us. He had lost his boy and found him again.

Two pennies jingle louder than two $10 bills.

RARE SLEEPING PALM.

One That Was Brought Here From the South Sea Islands.

A specimen of the rare sleeping palm has been found in Golden Gate park, probably the only one in the United States. Curator Barron of the park museum discovered it as he was walking in the park with his young son.

The tree, which was brought to this country forty years ago by a famous Australian botanist, William Robinson, gives out a peculiar aromatic odor. Barron smelled the exotic fragrance and discovered the tree, whose upper branches were laden with a beautiful rainbow hued flower giving forth a heavy perfume.

Around the base of the tree were the dead bodies of small animals and birds. Barron soon felt drowsiness stealing over him, his son complaining of the same feeling.

It was found that the tree, which had originally been brought from one of the south sea islands, belonged to the species Cocineae somnambuine, or sleeping palm, which blooms only once in fifty years and the flowers of which were formerly used as a drug by the islanders.

Samples of the flowers have been sent to the medical department of the University of California, where a test will be made to discover the source of their peculiar properties.—Exchange.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Snoring.

Snoring during sleep is generally an evidence of some obstruction of the nasal passages. Possibly the person is suffering from adenoids or thickening of the nasal mucous membranes, and, if so, he should consult his family physician. If it is a mere habit and there is no sign of obstruction of any kind, then bandaging the mouth will sometimes bring about a cure. Apply the bandage sufficiently snug to prevent the air from getting into the mouth. Bandage the same as you would for a broken jaw, taking pains to close the mouth or place pieces of court plaster over the mouth, shutting the lips tight together.

How to Handle Obstacles.

Uncle Joe Cannon was encouraging a young advertising man of Danville who had failed to land a national advertising contract.

"Don't take it so to heart," said Uncle Joe, patting the young man on the shoulder. "This is an obstacle in your upward climb. Well, there is only one way to treat an obstacle.

"Treat it as a stepping stone."

FITZ IS STILL WAITING.

Oh, where is Fitzhugh Cecil Gray,
A nineteen thirteen graduate
Who read upon commencement day
A thesis that was simply great?
He told about success in life
And how to win it right offhand.
He solved financial problems grave
And whooped it up to beat the band.
He juggled mighty fortunes in
The paper that he read that night.
He labeled "Poverty a Sin"
And set the whole blamed world aright.
You ask where Fitzhugh is right now?
He's holding down a job that's—well,
He's waiting table, so they say,

FRY'S Cocoa—Every Drop is Nourishment

Dr. Andrew Wilson, the eminent British authority, once said of the cocoa bean—"It is a kind of vegetable egg which contains all that is needed to build up a living body." Tea and coffee are mere infusions—but cocoa is an actual food in itself. Elderly folk should remember that. Cocoa, made the FRY way, from a selection of the world's choicest cocoa beans, is pure, extremely soluble, and of delicious aroma and flavor. PETES LANDED ON TOP BUT COBOURG MADE THEM HUSTLE

Locals Lead at the Half by 4-1 and Won Out by 6-4

"Mayor" of Cavan Again Prominent in the Defence Work

Peterboro Intermediates made another step forward to the O. H. A. championship, at Cobourg, last night when after a hard battle, they emerged with a win to the tune of six to four. The figures read 4—1 at half time, when the invaders had by far the better of the play.

Peterboro scored the next goal after the rest and then the Lakeshore seven awoke to the fact that they were trailing far behind. They came to life with a vengeance and scored the next two goals, making the tally five to three.

With both teams going at a terrific pace, the Petes scored the next counter and were held back for the remainder of the fray, while the homesteaders took their fourth goal, leaving them two tallies in the rear.

A big crowd of local fans took in the excursion, and they witnessed a fine game. Freeman, the youngster, who is well known for his performances on local ice, was the star of the Cobourg team, his great work netting three of the goals registered against Janes. Paton in the nets, was also a classy performer, and had it not been for his stellar work in the first half, Captain Giroux's men would have piled up a bigger lead.

Denison was going strong all the time. The line contributed some effective combination, and goals were the result. Park, as usual, was a prominent figure in the scoring. Before the old home crowd, Bond played a strong game.

"Chad" Toms, the well known forward man of the old 'Varsity team, handled the game and was very impartial. He let a few cross checks get away from him, but on the whole be handled it well.

The teams:

Peterboro—6		Cobourg—4
Janes	goal	Paton
Bond	r. defence	Duckett
Denison	l. defence	Payne
Giroux	rover	Lavis
Park	centre	Crowther
Bradshaw	right wing	Cunning'm

The Play

The locals appeared to be lost on the small ice, and kept bunched, playing no combination. Denison rushed well but the Cobourg defence appeared very strong. Duckett broke away and was skated into the corner by Bond, but he passed to centre ice and Freeman slammed the disc in. Time 2 min. Peterboro—0, Cobourg—1.

Denison was the whole works for the next few minutes, his fine rushes and superb stick handling had the Cobourg fans in wonderment. Kelly showed some of his old-time form and his back checking worked wonders. At last after five minutes Bradshaw tore up the side and lodged Peterboro's first counter in the upper corner of the net. Peterboro—1, Cobourg—1.

The play at this stage of the game was fast and clean with the homesters having most of it. Janes was called upon to show his class and the little fellow produced some nifty work. Time and again he drew the admiration of the crowd by his steadiness and coolness. Kelly and Park contributed an end to end rush which resulted in the latter scoring. Time, 3 minutes. Peterboro—2, Cobourg—1.

Great Goaltending

Lavis drew the first penalty of the game for body-checking Park, but was back on the ice again before any scoring occurred. Janes electrified the crowd by coming out and blocking, and he also handled several close shots without a miscue. Denison got away on one of those old-time rushes of his, and after circling around the forward line, he came down the boards passed the defence. Duckett was back checking, so Dennie passed to Park, who scored from close in. Time 5 minutes. Peterboro—3, Cobourg—1.

The ice began to get sticky and overskating the puck became common. Janes was given a warm reception but proved to be equal to the occasion, and nothing passed him. After 4 minutes of the best O. H. A. hockey ever viewed in the horse-show town, Kelly and Park broke away and once again did the fair haired centre man register one. Peterboro—4, Cobourg—1.

Second Half

Denison, who was playing the best game of the season, collided with Duckett and fell, striking his head on the ice. The big fellow took the count but revived quickly and resumed play. He and Kelly made an end-to-end rush, but the latter fumbled the puck when about to shoot and the golden opportunity went by. Captain Giroux drew a term in the box for cross-checking and while he was in the cage "Brad" tore up the wing and passed to the ever-ready Maurice, who scored. Time 4 minutes. Peterboro—5, Cobourg—1.

With the sturdy little captain again on the ice, play hovered around the Cobourg net. Paton gave a fine exhibition of blocking and turned off shot after shot. Park was cooped for chopping and was followed by Duckett for tripping but both were on again before anything happened. The forward line pace was beginning to tell on Bradshaw, and Freeman ran wild. After 4 minutes of play he tore down and gave Cobourg their second tally. Peterboro—5, Cobourg—2.

One goal did not satisfy the plucky little wing man, and he wanted more. He was for a while the speediest man on the ice. He, combined with their forward line and came down several times and at last lifted from outside the defence. Denison attempted to bat it down but the rubber glanced off his stick and passed Janes. Time 3 minutes. Peterboro 5, Cobourg 3.

It didn't take the locals long to rally and Kelly cut loose with a few of his old time rushes. "Kel" went up his wing, passed to Park, and Maurice lifted the disc in. Time 2 minutes. Peterboro—6, Cobourg—3.

The puck was hardly faced off when Cunningham shot up the side and scored. Time 40 seconds. Peterboro—6, Cobourg—4.

Could the locals hold them? Every Peterboro fan fairly stopped breathing. There were six minutes to go and Janes was being bombarded from all sides. The "Mayor" of Cavan was there however, and opened the eyes of the excited spectators. Duckett drew a penalty for body-checking and the puck centred near the Cobourg goal for a short time. The big defence man returned but was of no avail as time rang a few seconds afterwards.

The scoring:

—First Half—

1—Cobourg	Freeman	2	min.
2—Peterboro	Bradshaw	5	min.
3—Peterboro	Park	3	min.
4—Peterboro	Park	5	min.
5—Peterboor	Park	4	min.

—Second Half—

6—Peterboro	Park	4	min.
7—Cobourg	Freeman	4	min.
8—Cobourg	Freeman	3	min.
9—Peterboro	Park	2	min.
10—Cobourg	Cunningham	40	secs.

Penalties—Peterboro, Giroux, Park. Cobourg—Louis, Duckett 2.

TORONTO IS ADMITTED TO THE CANADIAN LEAGUE

Toronto, Jan. 20.—At a meeting of the Canadian Baseball League yesterday afternoon, held in the Prince George Hotel, President Fitzgerald was in the chair, and the following delegates present:—London, S. Stevely; Erie, G. O'Neill; St. Thomas, C. O. Stanley; Hamilton, G. Lee, J. Burns, M. M. Robinson; Brantford, T. J. Nelson, Ray Brown; Toronto, P. Kerwin, E. McCafferty; Peterboro, W. H. Denham, E. Carr; Ottawa, F. Shaughnessy.

Toronto was formerly admitted to membership in place of Berlin, and this with Erie, Pa., as a member gives the league a sufficient population to get into Class B.

Erie Proposition.

The proposition from Erie that the league purchase a franchise and turn it over to the old franchise holders of that city was not considered. Mr. O'Neil was authorized to transfer the Guelph franchise to Erie.

The president was instructed to notify Secretary Farrell of the fact that they had now sufficient population to go into Class B.

The schedule meeting was left to the call of the president, likely the first week in March.

The salaries of umpires was raised to $175 per month and railway fares.

It was announced that Knotty Lee had sold one-third interest in the Hamilton Club to J. Burns, one of his partners, and that George O'Neil, of London, had secured an option on the club with a view of forming a joint stock company of local people to take over thec lub.

BIG CHANGE IN LINEUP

Joe Dwyer May Guard Nets for Juniors

Who said the Peterboro Juniors were out of the running? Far from it, they are there a thousand ways and expect to follow the example of the Intermediates and clean up the district after losing one game. Manager Craig has given his team a general shake-up. Joe Dwyer has signified his intention of turning out, and will in all probability, be on the lineup for tonight's game. If he is, the Cubs should win over Port Hope hands down for Joe's experience is a great asset to such a young team. Interest in the Kingston game has grown a great deal since the "Peerless Red" joined the team and it would be a safe bet that they will take a fall out of the Frontenacs on Friday.

Captain Halpin will play right defence and his partner will be Richardson, who played such a fine brand of hockey against Port Hope.

"Silver" Knapman wil rove and Long will hold down right wing. The big boy is in shape and should combine well with the forward line. Barrie will be at left wing, and Rose at centre. The team will be tried out in their new positions tonight and the fans can have an opportunity of judging how much stronger they are. Dwyer will play, if his certificate arrives, but he will be on for sure against the Frontenacs.

Harry Clancy and Hugh Burrett are playing great hockey for the Dominions in the Toronto Bank League. Last night the Dominions beat the Standard 10—0. Reg. Bloomfield was also a big feature.

Oshawa Intermediates were defeated last night 6—4. The game is reported as being very fast.

HAMS LOST $4,500

The loss of $4,500 suffered by the Hamilton club in two years is heavy, but is is not more than was expected. Last summer the lack of good Saturday dates and the poor showing of the club in mid-season accounted for a big deficit. Playing at Britannia park the club would be enabled to play here every Saturday. The improvements would cost considerable, but would pay eventually. —Hamilton Herald.

KNOCKOUT IN SECOND ROUND

Pat O'Keefe Was Easy for the French Champion.

Nice, Jan. 20.—George Carpentier, the French heavyweight champion, knocked out Pat O'Keefe, of Ireland, last night, in the second round. O'Keefe went to the floor with a right hook to the jaw, and stayed there. In the first round O'Keefe was also floored, and seemed to have little chance at any time against the Frenchman.

After the fight Carpentier was challenged by "Kid" McCoy, the former American lightweight, and by George Gunther, of Australia. He said he would take on McCoy.

THIS GAME WILL GO DOWN IN HISTORY

With appropriate oriental decorations including a liberal supply of fruit-in-cog, the battle of the Oriental Tonsorial Artists and the Oriental Staff is staged for the evening of Wednesday, the 21st, between the hours of 11 and 12, at the Brock Street Rink.

The Knights of the Scissors have announced their five man lineup, but as yet the bell hops and three-dollar-a-day clerks have failed to comply with the request to bring forth their dark horses.

The referee is also unannounced as yet, but this is a small matter to artists who have already bribed every likely looking candidate.

The Artists lineup is as follows:

Goal—Man. "Vezina" Lewis Jr.

Left Defence—"Some Come Back" Lewis.

Right Defence—"Baldy" Throop.

Forwards—"Razor Blade" Rylie and "Clipper" Donahue.

Manager Tommie McDonough of the challenged aggregation, complains of being under the weather with a lame leg, but he hopes to be in condition for the game.

BRENTON'S CHALLENGE.

The Brinton Carpet Company hereby challenge the Peterborough Canoe Company to a game of hockey to be played at Brock street rink as soon as arrangements can be made.

CHARGE AGAINST DOIG DISMISSED

The charge of stealing $15, against John Doig, was dismissed by Judge Huycke, this afternoon. The complainant was John Findley, who claimed that Doig had stolen his money.

G. N. Gordon appeared for the defence.

His Honor advised Doig to keep to the life of honesty. He did not approve of the defendant's conduct.

INJURED BACK IN FALL FROM LADDER

Mr. Fred Oke, of Port Hope, brother of Mr. Walter Oke of this city, was the victim of a painful accident at Port Hope yesterday morning. He had been shoveling the snow from the roof of an ice house and when using the ladder, it fell backwards, throwing Mr. Oke to the ground.

The ladder fell across his back, causing serious injury and also spraining the muscles of the right leg.

PAY BEFORE VOTE.

Cobourg, Jan. 20.—It is expected that Cobourg Town Council will shortly introduce a by-law making it compulsory for a man to pay his taxes before he can vote at municipal elections.

EDWARD DEVINE.

Edward Devine, aged 75 years, died this morning at his residence, 573 Bolivar street.

Now that Secretary Daniels has decided to send the fleet on a European cruise some of our expatriated citizens will be given an opportunity to refresh their memories as to what the American flag looks like.

The humiliation of England is complete. At Binghamton, in a close contest that went to fifty-one games, Pomeroy, the American, defeated Jordan, the Englishman, for the world's championship at checkers.

MISS ANGLIN'S ENGAGING PERSONALITY

One of America's Foremost Stars.

Lovers of Shakespeare have a rare treat in store for them in the forthcoming engagement of Margaret Anglin, in her revival of "As You Like It" in which she will be seen in the character of Rosalind, supported by an organization of notable Shakespearean players.

If there is any choice among the really good things of the stage, and the really good actors of the country, that choice should fall on the classic head of Miss Anglin. For many years she has held an enviable position in the foremost ranks of American stars. Any play of Shakespeare's is like a great painting in which the artist has known perfectly how to place his lights and shades. Miss Anglin has staged her revival with no sparing of expense or artistic pains, and yet even all this background of beauty would have no rhythm if it were not for the action. How often do Shakespeare's plays come on the stage in a weedy fashion, struggling and stumbling because the actors cannot subdue their individual parts to the simitry of the ensemble and the harmony of the picture. From reliable advance reports there will be none of this in Miss Anglin's company. She, herself, is an artiste, the purity of whose style, linked with intelligence of reading, and engaging personality have long since won her enviable distinction.

AN EPOCH IN CENTRAL BRITISH COLUMBIA

On Tuesday, January 13th, the laying of steel on the Grand Trunk Pacific reached Prince George, the coming city of Central British Columbia, situated at the junction of the Fraser and the Nechaco Rivers. This was a momentous event as it gives Prince George the first rail connection it has had with the outside world.

It is interesting to note that up to date, the Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite & Development Company have sold in their town of Prince George, 3,171 lots. Total value of same being $2,322,003.33.

Owing to the large area of agricultural lands in the district surrounding Prince George and the vast territory of unknown possibilities that are in the immediate vicinity, will make this an important city, and as a great distributing point for the entire Central British Columbia region.

LORD STRATHCONA HAS PASSED AWAY

After a Few Days Illness Famous Canadian Financier, Railroad Builder and Parliamentarian Succumbs to to Frailties of Old Age—His Career One of the Most Wonderful in the History of Canada

LONDON, Jan. 21.—(Canadian Associated Press Cable.)—Lord Strathcona passed away peacefully in his sleep at 2.15 this (Wednesday) morning. It was realized from an early hour Saturday morning that the venerable statesman was passing.

His lordship on several occasions within the last few years had been confined to his house for an odd day or two, but at such times, despite his heavy burden of years, his friends alway had confidence in his power to resist the illness. Unhappily such confidence could not be entertained on this last occasion. An attack of catarrh, which would be a comparatively trifling matter for a man in the prime of life, was too severe a strain for one who had passed the four score and ten mark well over three years ago. The malady completely prostrated Lord Strathcona, eventually inducing heart weakness. The aged patient sank into a state of coma, and the end came perfectly peacefully.

Hon. Mrs. Howard, his daughter, who succeeds to the title, and the other members of the family were at Grosvenor Square at the time. The King and Queen and other members of the royal family made repeated inquiries, expressions of sympathetic interest also being received by hundreds from all sections of London's diplomatic, philanthropic, and social life.

THE LATE LORD STRATHCONA.

Until two months ago Lord Strathcona attended his office in Victoria street daily, arriving at ten o'clock or even earlier, and remaining often till after nightfall.

Donald Smith (Lord Strathcona), whose life forms one of the most fascinating stories in the history of Canada, was born in 1820 at Forres in Morayshire, Scotland, which Shakespeare has hallowed in "Macbeth," entering the employ of the Hudson Bay Company in 1838.

When Donald Smith entered the employ of the Hudson Bay Company at the age of eighteen, he was assigned to a post in far-off Labrador, a thousand miles from Montreal. For thirteen years he was a faithful, painstaking, energetic, astute steward. His balances were on the right side of the ledger, and ultimately he attracted attention. Reward came when he was made Chief Trader, and after more years spent in the Hudson Bay territory he became Chief Factor. In 1868 he rose to the important position of Chief Executive, with headquarters at Montreal. Since 1889 he has been Governor of the Hudson Bay Company.

About this time two events that had an important bearing upon Donald Smith's future took place. In 1867 Sir John A. Macdonald had brought up in Parliament the question of acquiring the territory of the Hudson Bay Company, known as Prince Rupert's Land. In 1889 the formal deed of surrender was executed. The halfbreed settlers around For Garry did not like the change, and led by Louis Riel, an agitation was fanned into the uprising known as the Red River Rebellion. Donald Smith's offer to act as mediator was accepted by the Dominion Government, and Smith was sent west as Special Commissioner "to inquire into and report upon the causes and extent" of the disaffection. Smith was virtually made a prisoner.

On Jan. 19, 1870, a meeting of the settlers was arranged, which lasted five hours. There were many other meetings, a convention was named, and ultimately the mission succeeded and Riel fled to the United States.

For his services during the rebellion Smith received the thanks of the Governor-General in Council. When the Province of Manitoba was organized he was elected to the Legislature for the riding of Winnipeg and St. John, and was also called to the Northwest Territorial Council. He also sat for Selkirk in the House of Commons.

The crowning achievement in Donald Smith's life was the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. After many vicissitudes which form a complete history in themselves, the line was built and Donald Smith drove the last spike in 1885, having

WANT RAILWAY ACT AMENDED

A delegation from the Canadian Union of Municipalities which includes Peterboro in its membership, waited on the Minister of Railways at Ottawa yesterday, asking for amendments to the Railway Act. Restrictions are asked to prevent indiscriminate shunting and whistling of engines. Protest was also made against municipalities being forced to pay part of the cost of protection; at level crossings. It was urged that companies should be forced to bury wires at their own expense and also that the blocking of crossings by trains be prohibited.

CHARGED WITH THEFT FROM C.P.R.

Tedoa Minkaff and Petas Minkaff, two Bulgarians, were committed for trial by County Magistrate Edmison this afternoon on the charge of theft of a quantity of C. P. R. tools and blankets, at Havelock. Mr. Joseph Wearing represented the Crown, while Detective Hawke, of Toronto, gave evidence of the theft.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY LIFE

The Daily Routine of an M. P.—Why Does He Seek It?

A TASTE OF IT

A member of the civic deputation that went to Ottawa recently, gives some interesting impressions of life in the House of Commons. His final judgment was that parliamentary life is about as tedious and tiresome as anything can well be. And yet he had had only a bare taste of it. With nothing better to do for the time being, and being somewhat curious, he sat in the gallery of the House of Commons for three hours. He heard two front benchers discuss the High Cost of Living. The subject was not dry. But at six o'clock the listener had had enough of it. How does this experience compare with the usual routine of parliament? A member goes in the morning to his P. O. box and gets his letters. Then he sits down and digests them. He proceeds to the various government buildings in the city to get the information sought by his correspondents. Often he has to wait in the ante room. Then he rushes back to the main building to his committees that meet from 11 o'clock till one, and wrestles with the most irritating work in the world, viz.: building up acts, clause by clause, holding investigations and watching closely what transpires on the daily Order Paper of Parliament. The M.P. then goes to luncheon. At 3 o'clock the House assembles and a faithful active, useful member will be regular in his attendance. Casual attendants are of little use either to the country or their constituency. They are not viewed with favor by Ministers of the Crown. At six o'clock the House adjourns till 8. After 8 it continues always till 12, usually to two and in times of stress and estimates till 4 and 5. Early in the session only, Wednesday, has a half holiday and Saturday is a day reserved by Ministers for councils. Later in the session every day but Sunday is pressed into service. A common question asked by M.P.'s is "What ever brought me here?" It expresses the real and wearied feelings of the victim. Wives and daughters if well provided for, lead a fashionable life.

Taken all in all there is no fan in parliamentary life. Why do men go into it then? Perhaps because the world must go on. Perhaps because they want to spite their opponents. Perhaps it is fate. Likely. So is death.

DEPUTATION AT OTTAWA

Mayor Buller and Party Presented the Claims of Peterborough for Senatorship

The deputation headed by Mayor Buller journeyed to Ottawa yesterday to wait upon Premier Borden and to present the claims of Peterborough in the appointment of a Senator to represent the city.

Mayor Buller informed The Review to-day that Mr. Borden received them very cordially and promised to give the matter careful consideration.

The deputation were satisfied that the claims of the city would be acceded to, and that Mr. Kendry would be favorably considered for the Senatorship left vacant by the death of Senator Cox.

The Deputation also visited the Government Agricultural Department, with the view of proposing the establishment of a Government Agricultural farm near Peterborough for educational purposes.

Great Programme At Red Mill And Princess Theatres

With the Red Mill Theatre offering a program of 6 British feature films for 5c, and the Princess providing a program of six reels at the same price, Manager Clayton has the biggest combination in Canada. By visiting the two theatres, one can see twelve reels of the biggest pictures for 10c, the biggest bargain in the picture line ever offered.

The British films at the Red Mill are making the biggest kind of a hit.

ONE CRITICAL STAGE PASSED

TORONTO (noon) Sir James passed a restless night, his condition is practically unchanged; he is still delirious. Dr. McPhedran admitted this morning that the Premier did not realize he is back among his own people. It was largely for sentimental reasons that the patient was brought to Toronto.

TORONTO, Jan. 21.—The following buletin was issued last night by Dr. Alexander McPhedran, who is attending Premier Whitney at the General Hospital:

9.30 p.m.—"Sir James Whitney is a little better to-night. He is quieter and his pulse is a little stronger. He is taking nourishment somewhat better, but is still very restless. We hope he will have a good night."

The bulletin reflected a distinct improvement in the condition of Sir James Whitney after an unfavorable day.

In order to be as far as possible from noise or other annoyance, the stricken Premier and his attendants were quartered in the west wing of the General Hospital. Yesterday morning the condition of Sir James took a bad turn for the worse, and about 10 a.m. he experienced an unusually severe seizure and was thought to be sinking. Lady Whitney was immediately summoned to his bedside. Shortly afterward a turn for the better was noted and any immediate anxiety was relieved. Sir James was delirious most of the time and failed to recognize anyone.

THE DRUG HABIT

Outside cities are experiencing alarming growth in the drug habits of the various fiends of the cities. the majority of them claiming that the trade is heaviest in the drug known as heroine, but is morphine in another form. Local druggists say that very little trade in these drugs is carried on.

Chief Thompson, in response to a scribe's inquiry into the situation, said there was a heavy penalty for the sale of this drug without a doctor's prescription.

WEARS HOOPSKIRT TO DANCE WALTZ, ONE-STEP AND TANGO

MRS GEORGE WASHINGTON HILL

To prove that the tango and other modern steps may be danced easily in the hoopskirts of a half century ago, Mrs. George Washington Hill, of New York, wore a quaint costume of the period of 1840 at a fancy dress dance recently.

Despite all formulae of the laws of centrifugal and other forces, Mrs. Hill proved her proposition that the dip and glide are as easily done in such a gown as in the modern clinging skirts, satisfying herself and her friends as she tangoed, waltzed and one-stepped throughout the evening with her husband and other young men.

LADIES ENTERTAIN THE MEMBERS OF TEMPLE BAND

Proposed Trip to England is Discussed at the Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Temple Band with the banquet for the bandsmen and their wives, was held in the Temple hall last evening. A most enjoyable repast was provided by the ladies, after which speeches were made by Adjutant McElheney, Bandmaster Peryer, Band Sergeant Brown and Band Secretary Hensley, Bandmaster Richardson and others.

The proposed trip to England was discussed. It is expected that definite information will be received in the course of the next few days.

Citizens Were Liberal

The band had to thank the citizens for their generosity during the Christmas and New Year's serenading, when the donations and subscriptions made the handsome sum of $800, which is a record for the local corps. These receipts are used exclusively for band equipment.

The following are the officers for the year:

Bandmaster—W. H. Peryer.
Dep. Bandmaster—W. C. Forde.
Band Sergeant—R. Brown.
Band Sec.—E. Hensley.

DEATH AND INJURY BY EXPLOSION IN BUILDING USED FOR WINTER FAIR

Canadian Press Despatch

OTTAWA, Jan. 21.—Howick Pavilion, a huge cement and steel structure at the Exhibition Grounds, in which the winter fair was being held, was partly wrecked this morning by an explosion in the heating plant.

So far as is known four are dead and a number of others are injured. It is feared several more are in the ruins who cannot be reached for some hours.

There are a great number of prize horses and cattle buried in the ruins. The building caught fire following the explosion but the firemen subdued the flames after a stubborn fight.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING DEBATE AT ST. ANDREWS

Both Sides Say There is Too Much Extravagance—Phonographs in the Ash-barrel—The High Price of Beefsteak—The Glories of Going Without—Wit and Eloquence Abound

St. Andrew's Men's Bible Class had a rousing debate last night on "The High Cost of Living," and despite the stormy weather there was a good gathering. The men of the class are a hearty and bright lot of fellows, and perhaps more humor than argument flowed from their lips on this occasion. The debate could not be described as dull, many of the speeches abounded in wit and the audience was often convulsed with laughter.

The programme was as follows:

Prayer—Rev. Jas. Rollins, Chaplain of Class.
Piano Solo—Venetian Love Song—Mr. Treneer.
Introduction of Chairman of Evening—By President.
Vocal Solo—"My Ain Folk"—Mr. Anderson.
Opening Affirmative..N. C. Mills.
Opening Negative—C. P. Joy.
Music, Banjo Solo—"Skipping-rope Dance"—Mr. Parkins.
Affirmative—A. D. Jardine.
Negative—W. S. Campbell.
Affirmative—C. P. Fee.
Negative—W. S. Campbell.
Affirmative—John I. Allen.
Negative—Fred Weir.
Closing Affirmative—N. C. Mills.
Closing Negative—C. P. Joy.
Vocal Solo—"There's a Land"—Mr. J. M. Greene.

The question for the debate was: Resolved: That the High Cost of Living is not Retarding the Healthy Growth of Canada.

The debaters were:—Affirmative—Messrs. N. C. Mills, A. D. Jardine, C. P. Fee, J. I. Allen. Negative—Messrs. C. P. Joy, W. S. Campbell, T. Sills, F. D. Weir.

The judges were:—Chairman, G. A. Gillespie; Alderman, G. W. Green; Alderman, Wm. Langford.

Mr. N. C. Mills led off for the affirmative and spoke of the Hydro system as an expensive means of lighting the city. He said that in a few years' time all the Hydro-Electric plants that Adam Beck had established would be thrown upon the scrap heap, as they would be superceded by steam. He went on to say that the high cost of living was imaginary. People had enough money to live upon, only they were extravagant in their tastes, they wanted picture shows and phonographs, and such things that our grandfathers did not require. He said that every home to-day has a phonograph in the front room or in the ash-barrel. There was too much money spent upon luxuries and we had less and less money for food. Food was necessary, man could live without clothes, and out in the open air, until some missionary got hold of him and persuaded him to wear clothes and live in a house.

Mr. Mills' speech was full of witty sayings, some of which were to the point. He said that "some of us would have to get back on the land—or under it!" He declared that a young family of five or ten children was a curiosity to-day in Peterborough.

Mr. C. P. Joy argued that the high cost of living was retarding the growth of Canada, and that we needed to conserve our resources. We were suffering from inflated values. We ought to encourage thrift. He referred to the example of Dan Crawford, who spoke of the "glories of going without." Dan Crawford had gone without a collar and had never had a knife or fork for twenty-two years and he said he had had a good time. The speaker said that he did not advise the audience to go without collar or eat their meals with their fingers, but we ought to cut out the extravagancies and get down to essentials. The high cost of living was retarding our educational growth because our children had to stay from school in order to work to keep up the income. Mr. Joy also spoke of the influence of the newspapers in the matter of the cost of living. He said they should cut out all matter that led people astray by fraudulent advertisements. If a newspaper could not exist without these advertisements they should raise the price to ten cents a copy and give the public a clean sheet.

Mr. A. D. Jardine, for the affirmative, said that the high cost of living was only felt in progressive countries like England, France, U.S.A. and Canada. In China, where the cost of living was low, there was no progress. Give China a Hydro scheme, Armouries, a C.P.R., etc., and you would find the cost of living would go up. Where the high cost of living exists crime is on the decrease, prosperity, happiness and education abound.

Mr. W. G. Campbell, following for the negative, complained that he had to pay thirty cents a pound for beefsteak recently. He had been tempted to go on strike against the butcher. He could have done without the steak and could have lived until the price returned to twenty-five cents.

Mr. Campbell tried hard to take himself seriously, but he could not refrain from making a pun on the Hydro—which he said was "too serious a thing to make LIGHT of!" (After this speech Mr. Campbell, Mr. Mills and Mr. Joy drank quite a lot of water, of which there was a plentiful supply on the table—this was doubtless owing to the Hydraulic nature of their speeches.)

Mr. C. P. Fee spoke of the Dominion and its great resources, that Canada was the most progressive country in the world. People would not come across the seas and from the United States if Canada was not prosperous. Canada was void of great calamities, strikes, murders, etc., as compared with other countries.

Mr. J. I. Allen, speaking for the affirmative, said that we had for a number of years had a good time in Canada, with high wages men were able to dress and live better; that the high cost of living was a spur to enterprise. Canada was a prosperous nation through the high cost of living, a nation where living was cheap was a cheap nation.

Mr. F. D. Weir was the last speaker for the negative. He argued that the high cost of living had been detrimental to Peterborough, that we had to mortgage our cities. He said that the workman to-day does not earn wages in proportion to what it costs him to live.

The judges, after retiring, announced through Alderman Gillespie, their verdict in favor of the affirmative side, which they said had put up the best arguments.

Mr. C. P. Joy then pinned a medal upon the breast of Mr. Mills, the leader of the winning side.

ALL NIGHT BLIZZARD CAUSES TRAFFIC BLOCKADE

The blizzard of last evening and night introduced the first real blockade in traffic of this winter. Conditions are particularly bad in the country. Trains are running behind time.

The first C. P. R. midnight train was half an hour late and the second was one hour and a half behind schedule. The third train was withdrawn. Conditions on both lines are little improved today. The snow drifts in the country are in some places as high as ten and fifteen feet and in many cases impassible.

The Chemong Road is badly blocked and the fields will have to be used. One farmer who resides just outside the city, said this morning that he had not seen the roads become so badly drifted in such a short time.

Some residents were without milk this morning because the milk vendors could not reach them at the usual time.

The sweeper of the Street Railway was at work on the line throughout the night. The snow plow men had a bid task on their hands and the usual complaints as to their non-appearance are to be heard.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 21, 1914.

THE DISEASE AND THE REMEDY.

THE LOCAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN of Peterborough are asserting their right to have a hand in the government of the city. They have constituted themselves as a sort of gentle dictatorship on civic affairs. They are not clamorously claiming the vote as their sisters across the sea, but they are going to insist that those who have the vote and the power shall use these properly and to the best interests of the whole community.

Some of us may differ as to votes for women, but we must all agree that our wives and daughters have as much right to have their say in the affairs and government of the city as in the affairs and government of the home. There should be the same unity of interest and mutual responsibility in matters municipal as in matters domestic. Woman is the weaker sex only in the brutal sense. On the finer and moral qualities she is certainly the better-half. She does not need to have a vote in order to exercise her influence in the community, no more than she needs to have her name on the rent book in order to rule in her household affairs. Therefore we believe that our local women are using their influence in a legitimate way by bringing it to bear upon the powers that be, in this matter of public morals.

The morality of a city has as much claim upon the consideration and action of a City Council as sanitation. It is as important, and more so, that our morals should be kept clean as that our water should be pure and our sewage and garbage system should be efficient. There are moral diseases as well as physical diseases and one can be as well prevented as the other. If a sewer should be exposed in George Street and become a public nuisance and a source of infection to innocent passers-by the Council would be on the job to stop the offensive condition. Diphtheria and other contagious diseases are devils that must be kept under and kept out altogether if possible. There are open moral sewers in every city which are neglected and ignored by the people who pretend to be so clean and particular in other respects. And from all accounts Peterborough is not far behind other cities in this respect.

There are those who say that these women are exaggerating. If they are, it is much better to exaggerate a little, than to be indifferent to and entirely ignore what may grow into a far worse state of things than these "exaggerated" statements indicate. But are these women exaggerating, is the picture overdrawn? Are there not rank cesspools of vice in our city which even Inspector Spence would find it difficult to match in the worst sanitary conditions in the city?

The incidents recorded in the women's report were only a few and are not mere isolated cases. If these have come to light how many are hidden in the darkness? for these evils love darkness rather than light. Many cases of moral degradation never come to the ear of the public or the police even. In scores of instances young people have, in their shame, fled the city and been swallowed up in the whirlpool of some larger place like Montreal, Toronto or in one of the cities of the States. It is only too true that smaller towns are often the training ground for the more highly organized hells of great cities. It is all very well to say that Peterborough is not as bad as Toronto or Montreal but these larger cities might justly retort: "We would uot be so bad if it were not for you."

We talk of getting at the root and source of things. The root and source is right here. We can starve out the demand by cutting off the supply. Purify your villages and smaller towns and you will go a long distance toward cleaning up your larger cities. All that is vile in humanity flows out of the smaller streams into the larger and accumulates there.

But what is the remedy? We can far easier diagnose a disease than prescribe a remedy. It is the easiest thing in the world to criticize, and some of us like to do the easiest things. Any one with a nose can scent a bad egg or an open drain. But the chief point is to get rid of the offensive thing. We do not want a Woman Police Officer or any other officer to bring these cases of moral turpitude to light, we want some one who will prevent our young people from going into outer darkness. We do not want a Home for the Unfortunate so much as HOMES for the innocent. EDITORIAL NOTES.

LARKINISM is now to be at an end in Dublin. Transport-workers are returning to work. The question that most of the ex-strikers will be asking one another is: "Who has been struck?"

THE ORIGINAL journals of Captain Scott written during the fatal South Polar expedition, have been placed in the British Museum by Lady Scott, where they are to remain on view for an indefinite period. They consist of three small pencil-written books found upon the explorer's dead body. These will remain ever memorable of one of our noblest heroes.

THE ULSTER ARMY now exceeds 100,000 men. Seven hundred women have qualified as nurses. Hospitals have been arranged and even a convalescent home, and arrangements are under way for the purchase of a convalescent ship. Was ever a civil war planned under such promising conditions? —it will be almost a pity if it does not come off.

IT IS SAID that the Borden administration has greatly limited the facilities enjoyed by members and their guests in the parliamentary restaurant. This policy of restriction might well have been inaugurated long ago. The restaurant is now a legitimate attachment to the House.

THE PRIME MINISTER, Sir James Whitney, is back home in Toronto. There is some little gleam of hope in the fact that he is able to travel at all. Sir James has evidently made up his mind that if he is to die he will die fighting, and he may win out yet.

THE COBOCONK fire, in which six children perished, was one of the saddest things that has happened in this district for some time. Six children take some raising, and Mrs. Weatherby deserves the sympathy of all mothers who spend their care and toil in rearing of a family. It must be hard for this mother to feel that all her home-work has gone for nothing. Life is often like that.

THERE SEEMS TO BE a conspiracy among certain British politicians to egg Winston Churchill on to revolt against his party and form a Third Party as a protest against Lloyd George's little navy policy. The Churchills all have a streak of the rebel in them and there is something tempting in the offer of support from some of the Tories. But "Winnie" will have to be careful, and remember the mistake of his sire Randolph.

IN A LECTURE on "The Citizens and the Press" at Cornell University, Franklin Matthews of the teaching staff of the Columbia University school of Journalism described Captain Robert F. Scott who lost his life in an antarctic polar expedition as "the foremost reporter of modern times." Scott, said the speaker, was born and lived and died a reporter, although Scott and the world never realize it. Scott's memory deserved from England as "high a monument as Nelson's," he declared. Mr. Matthews quoted Scott's dying words, "These rough notes and our dead bodies must tell the tale," as a true epitome of the spirit of modern journalism.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Conservatives and the Empire.

From La Patrie.

The Conservative party has always understood that the future of Canada depends upon the security of the Mother Country and the Empire, that is what prompted the Borden Government to come to the assistance of the English Admiralty in offering it three Dreadnoughts pending the adoption of a permanent policy. The duty of Canada, as of all the colonies, is to aid the Mother Country. If the Mother Country needs our arms we will lend them voluntarily. To speak of sending the "blood, nerves and brain of the Canadian people for the service of the Empire," is to simply exploit the ignorant public and not worthy of a party which has had Sir George Etienne Cartier, Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper as its leaders.

The Attack on Titles.

Montreal Mail.

J. H. Burnham, M.P. for West Peterborough, will introduce in Parliament, for the second time, a bill providing for the abolition of titles. The bill will of course find little favor in the House. Even if it had the good fortune to become a parliamentary enactment it would not be effective, because conferring titles is one of those peculiar privileges which the Crown enjoys without being answerable to Parliament.

This at least is the strict interpretation of the constitution. In practice, the Crown usually acts on the advice of responsible ministers, though it is not required to do so.

Mr. Burnham's efforts are, therefore, doomed to failure before he introduces his bill in the House. Still, it may be assumed that a debate which developed substantial support of Mr. Burnham's designs on knighthoods and similar honors would not be without effect in restricting a practice which is in harmony with the spirit of the Dominion and which has been sufficiently abused to bring it into popular disfavor.

From "In Memoriam."

If Sleep and Death be truly one,
And every spirit's folded bloom
Through all its intervital gloom
In some long trance should slumber on;

Unconscious of the sliding hour,
Bare of the body, might it last,
And silent traces of the past
Be all the color of the flower;

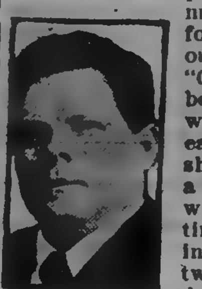
So then were nothing lost to man;
So that still garden of the souls
In many a figured leaf enrolls
The total world since life began;

And love will last as pure and whole
As when he loved me here in Time;
And at the spiritual prime
Rewaken with the dawning soul.

—Tennyson.

THE WINTER FLY

By Walt Mason



Oh, now and then a languid fly is seen upon the ceiling, or on the cake or pumpkin pie, in drowsy fashion reeling. We missed it in the autumn haze, we missed it or forgot it, but now, in view of future days, we ought to rise and swat it. We're apt to say: "One fly, gadzook, won't hurt, if we don't hit it; besides, we have a hot-stuff book, and do not wish to quit it." And so we sit in slothful ease, with volume by Miss Bonner, when we should take our snickersnees and make that fly a goner. For that one fly, through winter days will linger, if not swatted; and in the springtime it will raise a family dodrotted. A stitch in time, the poet said, will save nineteen or twenty, and every winter fly knocked dead cuts down the summer's plenty. So let us as one man arise, and chase the pests and bleed 'em, still shouting as we swat the flies, the battle cry of freedom.

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—

"When any fresh guy comes to this boro we look after him, without a woman cop. Another rise in the rates, I'll have to sell those lots. It isn't the emigrants, you won't find one fresh enough at this time of the year; did you ever board? I can't see why a fellow wants to rush about the streets, there's something queer about it. Been here long enough. I never could think a fellow could find any trouble in getting married a dozen times. Them tag days and sich ways of getting money, and the bad drink too, and rents cause it all. True the people behave bad, I have to spend most of my time talking to some idle citizen or other."

Yours truly,

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-FIRST

The Hon. Jules Allard, Minister of Lands and Forests in the Quebec Government, who is fifty-five years of age to-day, was born and brought up at St. Francois du Lac, P.Q. He is a lawyer by profession but has long taken a considerable interest in public affairs. Beginning by being a school commissioner in his native village, he rose to be mayor and then was elected to the Legislature. For a time he led the government forces in the Legislative Council. His abilities were recognized by Premier Gouin a few years ago and he was given the portfolio of colonization and public works. Later he was shifted to the department of agriculture and five years ago to his present office.

LIFE IN ICELAND.

It is Not the Crude Existence That Many People Imagine.

Most people think of the Icelanders as being like Eskimos, a crude, unenlightened people, looking more like animals than people and living in snow huts, dressed in furs, whereas the Icelanders are handsome, cultured people, highly educated, with fair faces and brilliant eyes and a very dainty fashion of dressing. They live in neat, charming houses, have beautiful flower gardens and never wear furs, for the reason that it is never bitterly cold in Iceland on account of the gulf stream washing its shores.

As to their diet, it is somewhat wanting in variety on account of the lack of many food staples, but all their dishes have a certain odd richness that is very delicious to a stranger. It is largely because of the amount of oil they use. They cook many things in oil—a clear, sweet fish oil, though substituting olive oil makes the dishes quite as tempting. They try to use their native products, as everything else has to come so far and the steamers call only once in ten days from England and Denmark, and the imported goods are expensive for Icelanders who are not very well off, though never poor.

Their own products are fish in vast quantities; lamb, the chief meat; eggs, wild ducks, sheep's milk, cheese and butter; turnips, of which they raise and eat more than of any other vegetable; potatoes, onions and beets beans and occasionally peas; spinach, cabbage and Brussels sprouts; no fruit to speak of and rarely any beef—it is imported from Denmark and Scotland. Pork is rarely eaten and then in the form of imported bacon.

But out of this meager list of staples they evolve some truly delicious dishes, for the island people are all good cooks and have a native knack that like the French. They can make anything they cook taste good, no matter what the ingredients may be.—London Family Herald.

Literary Taste in China.

It is interesting to note that neither fiction nor poetry is in demand in China— that is to say, not the white man's fiction or poetry. The intelligent Chinaman prefers John Stuart Mill to anything else, and Adam Smith comes next. The translators have tried the Chinaman with Shakespeare, Byron, Scott, Dickens and Thackeray, and he wants none of them. But he does want science, and he prefers the student's text book.

A Monster Vegetable Marrow.

In a village garden in Mull there was grown this season a vegetable marrow weighing close upon 30 pounds. Its length was 29 1-2 inches, and, curiously, its girth at the broader end was also 29 1-2 inches. This huge marrow grew under most ordinary conditions—there being no attempt at forcing—in the garden of Mr. Hugh Bennett, Lochdonhead, in the south of Mull. The cultivator planted four seeds, but only two germinated.

RAFFLED HIS SALARY.

South African Official Has Hit on a Profitable Scheme.

A well-known statesman once said that no amount of legislation would ever stop a man from gambling. People would bet on the slightest pretext and on the smallest things. They would even bet on a lump of sugar a fly would settle on. That this is true of conditions at the present moment is exemplified by the rage for raffling which is now prevailing in Johannesburg and Pretoria.

When one has anything, from a house to a bicycle, to dispose of, the method of getting rid of it is that of raffling, and the American system is in great favor, and that is that the tickets run from a penny up to, say, ten or twenty shillings. In both of the towns mentioned there are dozens of people selling tickets for every conceivable article. Motor-cars, motor-bicycles, suites of furniture, jewelry, etc., soon entice the unwary, and tickets are sold like wildfire.

The limit, however, has been reached by an official in the Palace of Justice, Pretoria, who recently hit upon the ingenious idea of raffling his salary, and incidentally augmenting his own income for the month. His salary was, say, $100, and he wrote out tickets which, when sold, brought him in $135. The drawing resulted in one of the messenger boys gaining the prize, much to the chagrin of the other men in the office. The money was, of course, paid over to the lad, who was naturally overpleased with himself. Such a windfall did not come his way every day. Typewritten sheets have been circulated through certain of the departments giving a list of articles of household furniture, the first prize being the main bedroom suite, and so on downwards to a set of pots or a pen of chickens. In every case there has been no trouble in selling the tickets, and so imbued with the gambling spirit are the losers that even if they fail to secure a prize they are not deterred in the least from "trying their luck."

HE KNOWS HIS CANADA

PROF. BROCK HAS STUDIED DOMINION LIKE A BOOK.

Director of the Geological Survey Has the Reputation of Being the Best Traveled Man In Canada—He Is Also the Leading Authority on the Southern British Columbia Mineral Belt.

Prof. R. W. Brock, one of the foremost of Canadian geologists, as well as one of the most capable and efficient officers of the civil service, has been connected with the geological survey at Ottawa for more than 20 years and is now director of that important department of the Dominion public service. Prof. Brock is probably the best traveled man in Canada. He knows the Dominion most intimately.

Reginald Walter Brock was born at [illegible] years ago and educated at Ottawa Collegiate Institute, Mount Forest High School and Queen's University, from which he received the degree of M.A. and a medal in mineralogy in 1895. He also did work at Heidelberg University. Later he took the science course in the School of Mining at Kingston, becoming afterwards demonstrator of chemistry and professor of mining therein. He was appointed to the staff of the geological survey of Canada in 1891 and conducted many important explorations. At present he is regarded as the best authority upon the geological formation of the great mineral belt in southern British Columbia. He was made director of the geological survey six years ago.

PROF. R. W. BROCK.

At college Prof. Brock was celebrated as an athlete in hockey and football, and was president of Queen's Hockey Club, 1902-3. He is a councillor of the Canadian Mining Institute and also of Queen's University; a member of the American Mining Institute; a life fellow of the Geological Society of America and a member of the National Geographical Society. He was made a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1911.

Prof. Brock, assisted by F. C. Congdon, prepared two years ago a new mining law applicable to all Canada. He is the author of numerous reports and papers on scientific subjects.

A Bathing Ceremony.

The bathing festival of Hindus in which eighty thousand persons took part was held in the River Hooghly, near Calcutta, India, on a recent evening. The enormous crowd was lined along the river from Babu's Ghat to Nimtolla Ghat. An idea of the large number of bathers, assembled on this occasion, will be obtained from the fact that seen from any position, the river looked like a mass of heads as far as the eye could see. The festival, which is the celebration of the combination of certain stars on the day of a lunar eclipse, comes only once in twelve years, and is known as the "Churamoni Yoga." This explains why the festival aroused so much enthusiasm among devout Hindus. Ablution in the Ganges and its branches on the occasion of this festival is popularly regarded as very beneficial spiritually. Some thousands of Hindus, living in parts of the country remote from the Ganges, came to Calcutta with a view to bathe in the Hooghly.

His Queer Doctrines.

Two centuries have passed since the Scottish judge, Lord Monboddo, was born. In his "Origin and Progress of Language" he argued that human beings should be studied like other animals, but this doctrine seemed to the contemporaries of Dr. Johnson so ridiculous that the wags based many a jest upon it. His belief that men got rid of their tails by sitting upon them would now scarcely raise a smile among anthropologists. Among his more startling propositions was the earnestly maintained one that the orang outang "was a class of the human species, and that its want of speech was merely accidental."

Charlotte Bronte's Last Tribute.

"He will not separate us—we have been so happy!" These were the last words of Charlotte Bronte when, having become Mrs. Nicholls and having lived with her husband only nine months, death came to snatch the cup of domestic felicity from the lips of the happy pair. A low, wandering delirium came on. Wakening for an instant from this stupor, she saw her husband's woe worn face and caught the sound of some murmured words of prayer that God would spare her. "Oh," she whispered, "I'm not going to die, am I? He will not separate us—we have been so happy!"

A BANDIT-ARTIST

By EDWIN V. KIMBALL

One night Giovanni di Falco, one of those bandits who have from time to time figured in Italian history, remarkable for their gentlemanly manners and courteous treatment of their victims, made bold to enter the city of Florence with a view to trying his hand at burglary. Having gained access to a palazzo, or palace, a name given to any fine house, and finding himself in an apartment which on account of the darkness he could see little or nothing of, he struck a match and lighted the gas.

The furniture was handsome, giving the room an air of comfort and refinement. There were mirrors, curtains, divans and other articles, all of costly material. But Giovanni especially admired the paintings and statuary. He had descended from a line of artists, and the artistic instinct was very strong in him. Having admired the pictures on the walls and the statues on their pedestals, his notice fell upon a portrait of a young and beautiful lady resting on an easel. It was not framed and was evidently not finished. That it was in process of production was evident from the fact that a box of paints and brushes and a palette were on a table beside it, while a maulstick rested against the easel.

Giovanni stood for some time looking at the portrait. The face was one of perfect innocence, while a smile was spread over it, being most exquisite on the lips between a pair of dimples. Whether it was the contrast between this purity and the bandit's own wickedness no one, of course, knows, but the picture appealed to him so strongly that he forgot everything else.

In Rome one can't tell when he will pick up a relic of the days of the imperial Caesars nor in Florence when he will hit on an artist. Giovanni sat down before the easel, took up brush, palette and maulstick and began to work on the picture, little more than the drawing of which had been made. The night wore on, and still he painted, while under his brush that which was merely a drawing became a painting in oils. Suddenly hearing the rustle of silk behind him, he looked around. There stood the original of the picture. All other considerations in her or in him were lost in it. She did not seem to care who he was or how he came there.

"You are doing splendidly," she said, "but in filling in the drawing you have slightly changed certain features."

"That, signorina, is because I have not had my model before me. If you will pose before me I think I can make the features you mention more like the original."

Passing to the other side of the easel, she assumed the position of the picture. She was dressed almost exactly as in the portrait, which was to be accounted for from the fact that she had been out to a ball and had happened to wear the costume in which she had been drawn. This made the work much easier for Giovanni, though his attention was principally bestowed upon the face.

Time flew for both of these persons, the one absorbed in being reproduced on canvas, the other as producer. Prince [illegible], the owner of the palazzo and the father of the young lady, being an early riser, when the daylight was well on came from his bedroom and opened the door of the chamber, where the two were. It happened that he faced the artist, though Giovanni was too much absorbed in his work to notice him.

The prince recognized the leader of a gang who not long before had captured him while traveling between Florence and Siena and held him till he had been paid 50,000 francs ransom. What his daughter was doing in this singular position the prince, though surprised, did not stop to consider. Seeing that he was unobserved, he closed the door softly, went downstairs and at once sent out for the police. When they arrived they entered the apartment where the portrait was being painted by the two different doors leading into it, one party led by the prince. Artist and model both awoke as from a dream.

"Father," said the girl, "what means this interruption?"

"My child, what means this portrait painting at such an hour?"

"This gentleman is painting my portrait as it should be painted. See what he has done."

"Do you know who this gentleman is?"

"No, nor do I care."

"He is the bandit who recently sent you word that if you didn't send him 50,000 francs he would send you my ears."

"That may be," said the girl after a slight shock, "but he has earned the money. No other artist could have produced such a work as this."

Giovanni sat covered by the muskets of the police during this interview. The prince looked at the portrait and was evidently much impressed with it.

"Why do you not do such work as this instead of robbing people?" he said to the bandit-artist.

"I tried and failed. The critics"—

"You mean the robbers of reputations. You are a wonder. Become a respectable citizen and you may become a famous artist."

And that was the result of the affair. The prince interceded with the government for the man and secured a pardon.

Sirloin or Surloin.

King James I. is said to have been so well pleased with a lion of beef as to knight it and make it Sir Loin or sirloin. However, a story of the same kind was also told of Henry VIII. and is to be found in Fuller's "Church History." Dining with the abbot of Reading, Henry—according to this authority—ate so heartily of a loin of beef that the abbot said he would give 1,000 marks for such a stomach. "Done!" said the king and kept the abbot a prisoner in the Tower until he grew ravenously hungry and won his 1,000 marks and knighted the beef. But Webster characterizes this etymology as "erroneous," saying that the true spelling should be "surloin"—the "sur" being equal to "super."

King to Keep Stable.

It was said a short time ago that King George, in view of his relatively small success on the turf, had decided to give up horse-racing. The story, however, was quite without foundation, for His Majesty has some very promising yearlings in the stud farm at Sandringham, and intends to persevere in the hope that one of these days another Persimmon or Diamond Jubilee will be forthcoming, as in his father's time. When the next flat-racing season opens His Majesty will have about twenty horses in training, under the care of Mr. Richard Marsh.

Hot Stuff?

Stockings and clothing are now made from "nettle-wool." It makes a warm fabric.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Headaches.

Headaches may come from tired eyes, strained nerves, fatigue or a disordered stomach, and in four cases out of five it is the latter. When the cause has been discovered the trouble must be removed. No temporary relief will serve when the headaches become constant visitors, but an immediate removal of the cause will leave no reason for a return visit.

Disordered stomach is most frequently the root of most headaches. A good laxative taken at once will help, and then a dose should be taken once a week to keep the system clear of fermentation. Purchase a box of senna leaves at any drug store for 5 or 10 cents and take a large pinch of these at night, followed by a glass of water. These are excellent to keep the system in a clear condition.

A simple diet should be followed while the head and stomach are weak, and rich foods should be avoided for some time after an attack of sick headache.

Many headaches come from strained eyes. The only thing to be done in such a case is to consult an oculist. If the eyes are only tired an eye wash of boracic acid will help them, but it is safest not to neglect these delicate organs.

Nervous headaches and headaches caused by fatigue should be treated by complete rest in bed for a day or longer if necessary.

Economical and Effective.

"That boy is trying to shake the coin you gave him out of his toy bank!" exclaimed the solicitous aunt.

"Yes," replied the patient father, "it's a great idea. I'm putting a penny in his bank and letting him rattle it out we can keep him out of mischief by the hour."—Washington Star.

NITROGEN IS A LOAFER.

This Gas Is Too Lazy to Do a Thing Except "Being Around."

Nitrogen in its normal condition—as it occurs in the air we breathe, of which it forms over 75 per cent—is a singularly lazy member of the family of elements. The average human loafer is ambitious by contrast. He will at least whittle a stick by way of occupation and scramble up with some alacrity if asked to "have something."

Nitrogen gas just puts in its time "being around." And it doesn't do anything else. No ordinary stimulus can stir it to action. We breathe in gallons of it every day, but we breathe it all out again absolutely unchanged except that it is a little warmer. And this despite the fact that the body has to have a regular supply of nitrogen and that we spend much money on expensive food to get it.

In the outer world, too, elements of all sorts go wandering by, and nitrogen sits like a dummy uninterested and quite unresponsive to any advances they may make. To be sure, a few years ago the industrial chemists succeeded, by using powerful electric currents, in waking up the atmospheric nitrogen, and now there are several large factories in which nitrogen activated in this way is being turned into explosives and fertilizers. But in the laboratory and in the street it has continued to be the inert element par excellence.

In view of the very important part that nitrogen combined plays in the world, chemists, with the necessary idealism to make them great, have long suspected that if just the right conditions could be provided this indifference of nitrogen to its fellow elements would disappear.—New York Post.

Frugality.

The daughter of a southern congressman had recently been a bridesmaid at the marriage of a college chum. On her return home she was telling the family, including the old colored mammy, of the ceremony. "And just think, Aunt Comfort," she finished, "the bride wore the lace veil that had belonged to her great-grandmother!"

"Law, Miss Sidney, chile!" exclaimed mammy in tones of horror. "That sholy am one saving fambly!"—Judge.

Rough on the Plumbers.

"Are there any plumbers in heaven, dad?" asked a small boy.

The gentleman addressed had just received a "small" bill from one of the plumbing fraternity as he answered, promptly and emphatically:

"No, my boy. Certainly not! But what made you ask?"

"I thought there couldn't be, because the sky leaks such a lot."—[illegible]

The world owes something more tangible than improved health to its ball games, for it was its suitability as a plaything that first led to the use of india rubber. One of Columbus' companions recorded how the natives of Haiti played games with balls "made of the gum of a tree" centuries before the plant and its possibilities were known in Europe. The Spaniards in Mexico, however, used it at an early date to waterproof their cloaks. In view of the present wide utility of rubber it is interesting to note that it made its first appearance in England as a curiosity for erasing pencil marks.

SHARP DIVERGENCE OF OPINION ON THE COMPENSATION ACT

Delegates Representing Both Sides of Question From All Over Ontario Wait on the Provincial Government.

TORONTO, Jan. 21.—Sir William Meredith's draft Workmen's Compensation bill was the subject of vigorous warfare at the Legislature yesterday when manufacturers and labor men from all over Ontario gathered to present criticism of the proposed measure.

The labor organizations to a man rallied to the defence of the draft bill as it stood; the manufacturers almost without exception introduced amendments great or small. Towards evening, however, the atmosphere mellowed somewhat and both interests were content to leave the ultimate disposition of the bill in the hands of the Ministers. The manufacturers criticized the bill chiefly on the ground of inadequacy and unfairness.

The first claim was that the scale of benefits was far in excess of any other in the world. It was three or four times that of any other province.

Compensation would follow also in cases where death or disablement followed wilful misconduct; through wilful or intentional acts of their fellows; in uncontrollable accidents like cyclones.

The grouping system was attacked. Manufacturers and builders were grouped, whereas telephone companies, railway and navigation concerns were allowed to be individually liable. Objections were also taken to the extent of the board's powers, the cost of administration, the difficulty of collecting premiums, inclusion of clerks, and tho failure of the bill to make workmen contribute.

Nine omissions were pointed out, among them the lack of adjustment of pay roll, adjustment between contractors and sub-contractors, no premium adjustment between successive owners of business; no provision for capitalization reserves, nor for action by the board against a negligent employer, nor obligation of physician to report, nor for liens, nor for associations to make representations in doubtful cases.

FACTORY IS GUTTED.

Forty Thousand Dollar Fire Burns Out Four Firms.

TORONTO, Jan. 21.—Fire, originating from a cause as yet unknown caused between $40,000 and $50,000 damage to the four-storey brick building and its contents at 88 Terauley street, next the Toronto Electric Light shop, last evening.

The blaze started in the J. W. Hewetson Manufacturing Co.'s flat on the third floor, and is believed to have been started by the explosion of some chemicals used in the finishing of leather goods, of which the Hewetson concern are manufacturers. J. H. Hewetson, owner and manager of the company, was the first to hear the explosion, and, rushing from his office, was caught outside his door by the rush of flame, and severely burned about the face, hands and arms. He was conveyed to the General Hospital and his injuries attended. The losses in the fire are fully covered by insurance.

Sacrificed to the Nile.

The ancient Egyptians, if they did not worship the river Nile, held it in great veneration and even dread. The Nile had its appointed priests, festivals and sacrifices, and if its rising was delayed for a single day a sacrifice was thrown into its waters in order to appease the god's anger and secure his favors.

Stackhouse Buys Discovery.

Capt. Scott's old ship Discovery used in the first Antarctic expedition was acquired recently from the Hudson Bay Co. by Foster Stackhouse, leader of the British Antarctic expedition in 1904. The Discovery, on her former voyage, was frozen in the ice field for three years.

GROWTH OF THE SILVER BLACK FOX INDUSTRY

A small library of fiction might be written and all the plots drawn from the history of the trade in furs. It would begin with Marco Polo, take the early Christian Fathers who objected to the worldly and barbaric character of furs ; the political history of Russia and Canada, the settlement of colonies farther south and in the romance of the Hudson Bay Company would all furnish material. Royal captives have been ransomed with furs, they have been esteemed as gifts to kings and emperors ; furs have been and are the peculiar badge of State functionaries and figure in heraldry.

The Commercial Side.

The plain commercial side of the question is also interesting. Scarcely an animal whose covering is fur escapes capture. Squirrels yield most pelts, the number being 6,000,000 ; the rabbit follows with 5,000,000 and the hare with 4,500,000. The muskrat gives 3,000,000, and the lamb 2,700,000. The house cat furnishes 1,000,000 skins ; the fox, in all varieties, gives over 500,000 ; the beaver, buffalo, chinchilla, ermine, fitch, and marten contribute over 100,000 each and the mink and raccoon give over 500,000 each. The skunk is slightly in excess, giving 550,000. The silver black fox gives about 2,000 skins a year ; it is this variety which is being "farmed." For twenty years the experiment has been going on in Prince Edward Island.

Furs Excellent.

The Newfoundland Government, in a document recently issued, says : "Some of the highest-priced silver-black fox skins ever put on the market have been from animals reared in captivity and improved by selective breeding." A large amount of capital is being invested in black fox farming. A pair of fine foxes will bring as high as seven thousand pounds.

TIME TO BUY FURS IS RIGHT AT HAND

A genuine slaughter of this season's furs is now in progress at Barrie's Limited, 420 George Street. This well known house has inaugurated a clearing sale, where the reductions are from 20 to 33 1-3 per cent. off all costs. A careful reading of their large advertisement in another column will convince you of the great savings that can be made by buying now. Their advertisement is full of interest.

And the silence of a woman is golden because of its scarcity.

HON. T. W. WHITE ANSWERS OPPOSITION FISCAL CRITICS

Instead of Being Increased the National Debt Has Been Diminished by $18,000,000 Since 1911 Says Finance Minister—Present Depression is Unparallelled World Over But Spring Promises Change

OTTAWA, Jan. 21.—Hon. W. T. White carried the burden of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne in the Commons yesterday, and ably defended his financial regime against two adversaries, A. K. Maclean (Lib., Halifax), and Hon. Frank Oliver, who laid the present world-wide stringency at the door of the Minister of Finance. Instead of increasing the national debt, the Borden Government had reduced it by $18,000,000. The recent loans had been for large special items and one was a debt of $22,000,000 incurred on G. T. P. bonds by the previous Government.

In view of the death of Lord Strathcona, the House will hold only a brief formal session to-day, when the Government and Opposition leaders will pay tribute to the work of the great Canadian and will then adjourn for the day.

A. K. Maclean, resuming debate upon the address, referred to the forthcoming estimates as likely to be large in amount, and many of them, he said, were expenditures for local party needs instead of for really national undertakings. In the face of a falling revenue we were increasing our expenditures. During the past year, Mr. Maclean said, the Government had borrowed fifty-three million dollars, of which thirty-five million represented a permanent addition to the national debt Yet Mr. White in his budget speech a few months ago had promised to pay all current expenses and nearly all capital expenditures out of current revenue.

Continuing, Mr. Maclean said that the Government was treating the question of naval defence with silent contempt. Their policy was one of cowardice and inactivity. The Prime Minister had said in effect that he would do nothing toward the naval defence of Canada or towards strengthening the naval foreign forces of the Empire until enough Liberal Senators had passed away to give the Conservatives a majority in the upper chamber.

The Senate, he declared, had not prevented the Government from reducing the tariff, from nationalizing telegraphs and telephones, or from carrying out many other pre-election pledges.

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, dealt with charges brought against his administration. The people had been led to believe that he was a spendthrift heir or the prodigal son. As a matter of fact the national debt which stood at $321,000,000 on Oct. 11, 1911, when the Borden Government came to power, declined to $303,000,000 on Dec. 31, 1913. The Government had borrowed not $53,000,000 but $43,000,000 during the Parliamentary recess of which $10,000,000 went to pay off maturing loans. During the past year the revenue had decreased as a result of the financial depression, while extraordinary demands had been made upon the national treasury. The payment of the Canadian Northern subsidy and the loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific were special items involving large amounts, while no less than $22,000,000 had been expended in buying up the three per cent. Grand Trunk Pacific bonds guaranteed by the Dominion Government.

Contrasting the operations of the Government during the present financial stringency with those conducted by Mr. Fielding during the panic of 1907, Mr. White reminded the House during the thirteen months between December, 1907, and January, 1909, Mr. Fielding had borrowed in London over $100,000,000. A considerable portion of this, Mr. White explained, represented refunding operations, but the national debt during that period increased $43,000,000.

"What is the truth about our condition?" asked Mr. White, and then proceeded to answer his question.

"We have passed through a very trying period of depression unparalleled in its severity and duration. For two years trade has been restricted and the country has suffered from scarcity of money and curtailment of credits. Now that money is easier throughout the world, I believe that Canada will go ahead more prosperously than ever if the spring opens well with the prospect of a fine crop."

At the evening session the Finance Minister dealt with the high cost of living and the proposed remedy of free food. He did not believe that the tariff had anything to do with the steady increase in prices since 1896. Free food would mean distress to the farmer and would also cripple or ruin great industries like the manufacture of cheese, the packing industry, the canning industry, etc.

Hon. Frank Oliver said the Government was following an ostrich-like policy by pretending not to know distress existed. We were told that another trouble was the under production of food products. The Government, however, did nothing to stimulate the production or attract people to the land. Immigration had increased, but the number of homesteads had decreased. Agriculture was at a standstill because the profits of the farmer were absorbed by extortionate freight charges. The inland navigation merger had so raised transportation rates on the Great Lakes as to make $3,000,000 this season from the farmers of Western Canada through additional freight charges. Mr. Oliver said that the refusal of the Government to bring about free wheat as requested by the Governments of the prairie provinces meant a loss of millions of dollars to the farmers of the west. It meant a difference of six cents per bushel.

SHIPPING CONFERENCE.

To-day's Meeting Will Be One of Great Importance.

PARIS, Jan. 21.—Matters of great importance will come up at the meeting to-day of the North Atlantic Shipping Conference, which will discuss rates among other things. Owing to the differences which have arisen between the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American lines, no representative of the latter company will take part in the conference.

The action of the Hamburg-American Line has caused considerable comment among the officials and directors of the other companies, but what effect it will have on the continuance of the North Atlantic pool and the fixing of rates cannot be known in advance of the meeting.

Postponed State Ball.

OTTAWA, Jan. 21.—The following official bulletin has been issued from Government House:

"In view of the grave news concerning Lord Strathcona, Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught feel that they can best interpret public sentiment by postponing the date of the state ball from Jan. 21 to Jan. 29 as a tribute of respect to the distinguished personality of the High Commissioner."

Ask Armistice In Mexico.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Jan. 21.—The International Peace Union, whose headquarters are here, is arranging for all the peace societies of the world to send telegrams on the same day to Provisional President Huerta and to Venustino Carranza, the Constitutionalist leader in Mexico, requesting them to agree to an armistice, pending which their rival claims and the real interests of Mexico shall be submitted to arbitrators.

New York Has Tie-Up.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—New York experienced the worst tie-up of its transportation systems in its history yesterday, when both express and local trains on the subway were blocked for nearly two hours, and a derailed car on Third avenue "L" tied up downtown travel on the elevated. Thousands of persons were from an hour to two hours late in reaching their work.

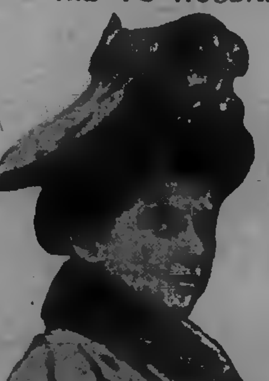
MRS. FORD REAL AID TO HUSBAND



MRS. HENRY FORD

"No one would know the Fords had money to talk with Mrs. Ford," was the remark of one of the friends of the man who is to give away $10,000,000. "She is a typical homebody in every sense of the word. Why, she refused to have any servants around her house until two or three years ago, and insisted on doing every bit of her own work."

This is as pithy a description of Mrs. Henry Ford as could be given.

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—Bearish prospects for the winter crop in the United States more than counterbalanced in the wheat market today an effort to lift prices because of unusually cold weather and lack of snow protection in western Europe. Despite an early bulge the close was steady at the same as last night to a shade decline. Other speculative articles all showed a net loss—corn 3-8c to 5-8c, oats 1-8c to ¼c, and provisions 7½c to 12½c.

Liverpool wheat closed ¼ to ½ higher; corn, ⅛ to ⅜ higher.

In probing highways department irregularities, Osborne discovered that both Republican and Democratic state campaign committees have made it a practice to assess each candidate elected or appointed three per cent. of his salary each year.

The courts have since offered Miller to give an accounting, but this is the subject of an appeal now before the Supreme Court here.

LORD STRATHCONA HAS PASSED AWAY

done more than any other man to build the road.

For this conspicuous achievement Donald Smith was Knighted by Queen Victoria.

From the time of the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway to 1896, Sir Donald Smith did not take a prominent part in Parliamentary matters, devoting himself almost entirely to his own affairs.

At the age of seventy-six, when most men were facing the twilight of life, new responsibilities came to him. Advancing years did not seem to exhaust his strength nor time impair his faculties. Sir Charles Tupper resigned the post of High Commissioner for Canada in London to become for a brief while Prime Minister, and Sir Donald Smith was induced to succeed him.

He assumed office when the tide of Imperial sentiment was rising, and no man has been a more potent factor in bringing about a closer relation between the Motherland and the colonies. On April 24, 1896, he was sworn in as a Privy Councillor. In the early days of his High Commissionership he was created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, to which he was admitted in 1886, and was summoned to Windsor for a private investiture by her late Majesty. When the Diamond Jubilee honors were published in 1897 he was raised to the Peerage.

A few weeks later he was gazetted as "Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal of Glencoe, Argyllshire," and Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, Canada."

Passing mention can only be made of some of his activities as High Commissioner. He was a commissioner to the Pacific Cable Conference in 1896; attended the sittings of the Commercial Congress in London in 1892, and again in 1896; was a delegate to the Anglo-American Commission in Washington in 1898; became Vice-President of the Imperial Federation League, and later was appointed to the Council of the British Empire League. In 1898 a new honor was conferred upon him when he was made Grand Commander of the Victorian Order. In 1908 he became a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was named a Knight of Grace of the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England.

In the world of finance and industry Lord Strathcona was a no less important figure than in Imperial affairs. He was one of the largest shareholders in the Bank of Montreal, become Vice-President of that institution in 1882, President in 1887, and Honorary President in 1905. Some of his directorates include the Paton Manufacturing Co., the New Brunswick Railway, the Dominion Coal Co., the Northern Life Assurance Co., the London & Canadian Loan & Agency Co., the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, the International Commercial Association, the Royal Trust Co., the London & Lancashire Fire Assurance Co. and the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Lord Strathcona's philanthropies were as extensive as they were unostentatious. With his cousin, Lord Mount-Stephen, he gave $1,000,000 to build and equip the Royal Victoria Hospital of Montreal in 1887, which was supplemented in 1896 with $800,000 as an endowment for maintenance. To McGill University, of which he was chancellor, he gave at different times upwards of $1,000,000, and was directly instrumental in bringing Principal Peterson to that institution. His more recent benefactions included $450,000 to promote physical training and drill in Canadian public schools; $1,000,000 to the King Edward Hospital Fund; $52,500 to Queen Alexandra's unemployment fund; $125,000 for Marischall College, Aberdeen; $50,000 to Aberdeen University; $5,000 to the Archbishop's Western Canada fund; $150,000 to the funds of the Y. M. C. A. for buildings in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Nova Scotia; $15,000 for Dalhousie University, and $25,000 for the new Knox College and $15,000 to Toronto Y. M. C. A.

The Timothy Riggs Ghost

It Philosophizes on Christmas

By F. A. MITCHEL

It was Christmas eve.

In a princely mansion a man lay dying. He was attended by servants and nurses, but no wife or child stood by his bedside. Presently a physician laid his hand on the man's heart and said:

"He is dead."

The dead man awoke to his new existence. He felt that he had the power to move over great distances in an infinitesimal space of time. He could see, hear and touch, but could not make himself seen, heard or felt. It was his corpse, not he, that was lying on the bed. Those who were in the room shed no tears, going out silently, but without reverence.

"He was the meanest man that ever lived," said the butler to a maid.

"A good time for him to die, on Christmas eve," the maid replied. "He wouldn't have given away anything tomorrow."

The spirit of Timothy Riggs heard and saw those who were passing out from the body he had left behind him. When a boy he had often picked up the shells of locusts or of marine animals, and he felt toward his body as he had felt toward those shells. When all had left the room he passed out of the house, going straight through the walls.

"If they hadn't discovered the X ray and radium before I died," he said to himself, "I would not have understood how I do this. As it is, I see it very plainly."

Though he could be everywhere at once, for the present he concluded to remain in the city where forty years before he had begun life a poor boy and by thrift and stinginess had accumulated millions. But now his valuation of riches had dropped from him as his body had dropped. All the treasures of the Indies seemed worthless to him. Yet, following instincts that clung to him, he passed into the vaults of banks and other places for storing money.

Then he passed in among the houses of the rich. Those in them seemed to him to be satisfied with material possessions. He noted the poor and how many they were and how they suffered for want not only of comforts, but the necessaries of life. Since he could be among the rich and the poor alike, the great difference between them came home to him as never before.

A rich family were preparing for Christmas, but without fervor. The oldest son had quarreled with his father because he had made a will leaving another son more property than his share.

"Money," thought the ghost of Riggs to itself, "that I have been heaping up all my life is, after all, a bad thing. It has made enemies of this father and son. It has been truly said that money is the root of all evil."

Then he took cognizance of the jails where men wore striped clothes, marched in lockstep and when not working were kept in little cells. Not one of them had any enjoyment in Christmas.

"No," thought the Riggs ghost. "it is not money alone that is the root of evil, but the want of it."

Events succeeded one another in different times from when he was a mortal and he had power to will them to move slowly or fast. He willed it to be Christmas morning. Everywhere children were waking from sleep and running to their stockings to see what Santa Claus had brought them.

"Why is it," thought the ghost of Tim Riggs, "that the desire to possess comes with little children? Some of these are so young that they can neither speak nor walk. Yet when their parents hand them a bauble they stretch forth their hands eagerly to grasp it. Surely mortality takes its chief delight in possession."

Now that Tim Riggs had passed into a spiritual world and had no use for material things he wondered that he could have been so absorbed in this inherent passion to own things. Nor could he understand it. These little ones did not know what it was to be without comforts and necessaries. They were born covetous. Was it not this that had made him a mean man? From the time that he had accumulated a property to give him $2,000 or $3,000 a year he had all he needed. Why, then, had he wanted more and more and more? His answer was, "For the same reason that a little child dives down into his stocking on Christmas morning for all there is in it."

Then the spirit of Tim Riggs heaved a deep sigh. He had loved a girl in early life. Had he not been born with this universal passion of covetousness he would have married her, and, instead of passing through a lifetime heaping up riches that were now dross to him, he would have had a companion and would have seen children growing up about him. Instead of servants standing about his bed when he was dying, his loved ones would have ministered to him.

Then the spirit of Tim Riggs passed away to his future dwelling place thinking. And this is what he thought:

"It is the natural desire to possess that moves the world. It enables those who have to confer pleasure on themselves and the needy by giving. It is the abuse of the natural instinct that is bad. Under proper restraint it is good. A child on Christmas morning represents it in its innocence."

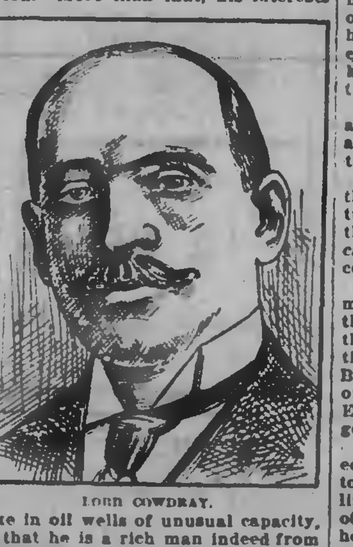
THE REAL MAN BEHIND

LORD COWDRAY LOOMS LARGE IN MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

Great British Oil Magnate, Who Declares That Present Crisis Is an Effort to Dislodge Him From Rich Mexican Petroleum Fields, Is Reported to Have Paid Country's Expenses for a Month.

The story went out not long ago that Victoriano Huerta had got money enough from the British Government to run his own Provisional Government in Mexico for a month. This money, the report had it, came through Lord Cowdray, head of the Pearson syndicate. Lord Cowdray denied the story, and gave the illuminating information that the Mexican trouble is being fomented by the U. S. oil trust because the latter wants to drive British oil interests out of the country. Whatever may be behind Lord Cowdray's statement it serves to illustrate the extent of his interests in Mexico. Lord Cowdray, who probably is better recalled to most persons under his former name of Sir Weetman Pearson, has interests in Mexico so vast that it might be well worth his while to further the affairs of any Government in that country which seemed to have a good chance of survival.

When Diaz was president and Lord Cowdray was Sir Weetman Pearson they worked together mightily to improve Mexico. Both made much money out of it, but it is not to be denied that this extraordinary contractor and engineer helped to change the face of nature in Mexico and did some marvels of building work. More than that, his interests take in oil wells of unusual capacity, so that he is a rich man indeed from the work he has done in Mexico alone. And his Mexican achievements are not the complete tale of his activities.



LORD COWDRAY.

It was some years ago that his firm, S. Pearson and Son, Limited, took and completed a $5,000,000 contract for extensive harbor works in Vera Cruz. Later came the gigantic task of draining the Valley of Mexico with a canal which cost $15,000,000. These tasks were done and well done, so that later when President Diaz contemplated the reconstruction and completion of the Tehuantepec Railroad it was not unnatural that the Pearson firm should get the job.

It was in 1902 that this work was started. A limit of fifty-one years was set for the task, involving the construction of the railroad and of proper terminal ports at the Atlantic and Pacific ends, so as to compete with the Panama Canal for transcontinental traffic and the trade to the Far East.

The railroad has been completed on modern lines with steel rails of eighty pounds, although there was much rock cutting and other hard work to be done. The more spectacular part of the job was at the terminal ports.

At Salina Cruz the work was an undertaking of considerable difficulty because that Pacific port was nothing but an open roadstead. Without assistance from nature the contractor evolved an outer and an inner harbor by means of vast breakwaters of masonry. The blocks in some cases weighed from thirty to forty tons apiece. The inner harbor is an artificial basin with perfectly quiet water.

Coatzacoalcos, the Atlantic terminal, presented a different problem. The river formed a good natural harbor, but was obstructed by a bar. An elaborate system of jetties was built across there so that the bar was scoured out by the action of the river itself. At either place a model town was built up, furthering the best hygienic conditions.

In the oil business Sir Weetman was early to recognize that there was plenty of good crude oil to be got in Mexico and there have been reports that he was for a long time a thorn in the side of the Standard Oil Co., although to match these there was a report not so very long ago under the Madero regime the struggle went against Lord Cowdray to such an extent that he wanted to sell out to the Standard. President Diaz was a director in the Mexican Eagle Petroleum Co., as the name of the Pearson concern in Mexico may be done over into English.

Lord Cowdray is rather a remarkable personage. He is in the neighborhood of 57 years old now. He is not what can be called a self-made man, but under him the firm of S. Pearson and Son, Limited, has certainly not failed to make great strides ahead.

Amended His Course.

Smeaton, one of the greatest of English engineers, was placed in a law office, which he detested. He doggedly cut loose, put on overalls and went into mechanical work, achieving the highest success and renown.

Liberia in 1912 produced 93,822 pounds of crude rubber.

CONTENTED WORKERS.

The Cats of the London Docks Never Gon on Strike.

There is at least one section of contented workers in the London docks. They are a silent army. They never strike, never ask for a rise, and never go home. They number at least five hundred — five hundred sleek cats—and they are non-unionists, too, for they work night and day.

How many horses this little army of cats devours in a year it would be hard to say, but their daily rations must come to over two hundredweight of meat.

The sheds and warehouses of the London, the East and West India, and the Millwall Docks are the happy hunting grounds, for here are stored immense quantities of all the things that mice and rats live for; cheese and doormats and butter and sewing machines and tallow and hides and grand pianos and oil in drums.

For a dock rat will eat everything except tombstones, and he uses those for sharpening his teeth.

To fight these voracious vermin the port authority has tried poisons galore, and powdered glass, and white lead; only to return to the domestic puss. She alone can keep their death-rate as high as their birth-rate.

"Cats," is it?" said an official — a big Irishman—to a reporter recently. "Sure!" and led the way to shed AB, where the bales of flax are stored. "Tiger — Tiger — Tiger!" he called, and snapped his fingers. There came blinking into the light a huge striped puss, with perpendicular tail, and rubbed her chin on the official's boots.

"She's a devil, she is. Ten or twelve rats in a night she've killed, and laid 'em all in a row. And mice. I'd be ashamed to tell you how many mice she's caught. Ah, and there's old Oppy. See her coming. All anyhow. One leg shorter'n the rest, or else the other three is too long. Don't know which. She's got a family tucked away somewhere."

The cats are spread abroad through all the many wharves and warehouses and docks and vaults that come under the port authority.

The average dock cat will not eat the rats it catches, and many of them turn up their noses at the mice. So the port authority has to provide cat's meat; tons and tons of it in the course of a year.

Although the Irishman had a tremendous list of endearing feline epithets at his command, and whispered them in many dark holes, for a long time not a cat would be coaxed out. But presently he found another asleep on the jib of a crane. "That's old 'One Eye'," he said. "Her port light's gone, but she's a ratter non the less.

"And there's the 'Stowaway,' called 'Punch' for short. He's supposed to have walked up the gangplank of a liner one night and been taken to the other side of the world. At any rate, he was missing for a long time and didn't turn up again till the same Donald Currie that was in when he disappeared had come into dock again."

She Weeded.

One of the stories Lady Dorothy Nevill used to delight in telling was of a certain lady not very well versed in the ways of society, who wanted to give a smart ball. She desired to have everything "just right," and she appealed to Lady Dorothy to help her in the matter of invitations, and so on.

Lady Dorothy very obligingly gave her a number of hints, and the ball came off fairly successfully. Next day the hostess and Lady Dorothy talked it over, and her ladyship remarked, "It was very good for a first attempt, but next year you must weed your list a little!" meaning that she must be more particular to whom she sent invitations.

"And she did," Lady Dorothy would add, "for next year she weeded out my daughter and me!"

Silent After 200 Years.

The curfew bell which has been rung at eight o'clock every night for more than 200 years at the parish church at Wokingham is now no longer rung. The inhabitants feel that they have lost an old friend.

Two pounds a year was spent on the tolling of the bell, and this sum was derived from a piece of land on the Bearwood estate, which was recently purchased by Mr. W. M. Colebrook, of Reading, from Mr. Walter. The new owner denies that there is a charge on the land. The Charity Commissioners, whose opinion was sought, have replied that it appears that the land cannot be sufficiently identified, and that therefore it would be impossible, on the evidence obtainable, for the claim on the land to be successfully maintained.

Robert Burns.

Robert Burns belongs in the very front rank of the world's great men. As a song writer he stands along with Goethe, Heine and Beranger, and as a satirist he ranks well up with Juvenal and Pascal. His "Cotter's Saturday Night," his "Tam O'Shanter" and his "Holy Fair" are simply inimitable, as great in their line as the most consummate masterpieces of the world's greatest writers. Burns was original in the best sense of that word, and his songs, satires, epistles and many of his more serious productions stand forth unique and fresh and powerful as the tints of Titian or the chiseling of Phidias.

What Is Education?

Herbert Spencer tells us in one short, pregnant sentence that the function of education is to prepare us for complete living.

A true chord is touched by Sydney Smith when he urges the importance of happiness as an aid to education. He says, "If you make children happy now, you make them happy twenty years hence by the memory of it."

Equally wise are the words of Sir John Lubbock: "Knowledge is a pleasure as well as a power. It should lead us all to try with Milton to behold the bright countenance of truth in the still air of study."

After you have accomplished a really good thing get busy again.

GERMANY STANDS PAT.

She Will Not Take Initiative Regarding Commercial Facts.

BERLIN, Jan. 21.—The Minister of the Interior, Clemens Delbrueck, announced in the Reichstag yesterday that the Government had decided to "stand pat" on the present commercial treaties, all of which are subject to revision in 1917. The Government, he said, would neither submit a new tariff law as a basis for new treaties nor denounce the existing treaties. The initiative in the matter of new treaties must come from the foreign Governments; otherwise they will be automatically extended.

Apparently it is the intention of the Government to abandon the revision of the treaties in the fear of a portentous struggle between the advocates of a tariff in which no loopholes are to be found, and the reformers storming against high duties on foodstuffs.

KILLED HIS WIFE.

Aged Man Says She Asked Him to Slay Her.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 21. — Tottering under the weight of his eighty years, William Eberwein stood in the Criminal Court here yesterday and told a simple but dramatic story of how his wife, fifteen years younger, had pleaded with him to kill her and how he committed the deed.

After the old man had completed the story, Judge Walling of Erie, Pa., temporarily presiding in the court, fixed the crime at murder in the second degree and imposed the minimum penalty which, in this case, was practically a life sentence. It was solitary confinement in the penitentiary for not less than seven years or more than fourteen.

Municipal Picture Plant.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 21.—A municipally owned moving picture theatre is a possibility of the near future. On Monday night the city council authorized the board of control to seize the goods of J. M. Minter in lieu of rent for the old town hall in East London, where he has conducted a cinematograph show, and a suggestion that the controllers should utilize the equipment seized to embark on the theatrical sea is being considered.

To Check Loan Sharks.

OTTAWA, Jan. 21.—To make it impossible for money lenders to charge interest above the legal rate on any sum of money, is the purpose of an amendment to the Money Lenders' Act, which H. H. Stevens, M.P. for Vancouver, gives notice he will move.

At present the specified limit of interest which may be charged is on sums of $500 and upwards, Mr. Stevens proposes to make the act apply to loans of any size.

Fake Magazine Canvassers.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 21.—A letter from a resident of a village near London to Chief of Police Williams, tells of the operations of a gang of magazine canvassers, who, representing themselves as students competing for a prize to help them through college, were able to secure a number of subscriptions of a mythical publication.

Convention Is Signed.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The convention drawn up by the International Conference on Safety at Sea was signed at the Foreign Office yesterday afternoon. It was decided that the text of the convention, which contains 74 articles, should not be officially published until Feb. 15.

LOCALS DEFEAT PORT HOPE SEVEN

Visitors Put up a Stiff Argument Being Strong on the Defence---Score Was 8-4

By playing a superior brand of hockey, the local Junior O. H. A. team defeated Port Hope last night at the Brock Street Rink by a score of 8—4. The half time result was 4—2. The homesters are in first class condition and the class of hockey they displayed last night warrants a good game in Kingston on Friday. They played real fast combinations, especially in the second half and had it not been for the wonderful work of the visitors' goal guardian the score would have been much higher. The play grew a little rough in spots as is signified by the list of penalties, but on the whole it was good hockey, and the game never lagged for an instant.

When the locals went out first there was a much different lineup than in any previous game. Long was up on right wing, Knapman at rover, and Halpin was back on the defence but it didn't work for Long couldn't play the wing to advantage, and the players were all buching, thus combination was a minus quality. Captain Halpin soon saw need of a change and he sent his men to there usual positions with the best possible results. Combinations were frequent and they had good effect.

Joe Dwyer, in goal, played an extra good game, clearing and blocking nicely and his coaching was also a great asset. Richardson wasn't going so well in the first half, but after the resting period he found his pace and made the fans open their eyes. Long, as stated above, was lost on the forward line, but played a rattling good defence game. His rushes kept the play in Port Hope territory most of the 60 minutes. Captain Halpin showed better form than in any other game this season, and numbered among the fastest men on the ice. His strong back checking kept the Port Hope forward line in check all the while. Rose, at centre, had a bit of hard luck with his shooting the first few minutes but after that he was there a thousand ways and was incessantly back checking. Barrie, at left wing, contributed some nifty stick handling and fast rushes as did Knapman. "Silver" never gave up and had his check almost worried into a premature game.

For Port Hope, Hills, their centre man, was the speediest man, and the little fellow more than gave Rose a battle for the honors. Their goal keeper, Rowden, is there all the time and without a doubt, is about the best seen in action on Brock Street Rink this season. He certainly is a wonder.

The crowd was rather small, the cause no doubt, being the excursion the night before to Cobourg and the game tonight. Those who were on hand were by no means disappointed for the hockey was of the very best calibre.

Clarence Gorrie, of Toronto, a new face amongst the O. H. A. officials, handled the game and did so to the utmost of satisfaction.

The teams:

Port Hope—4		Peterboro—8
Rowden	goal	Dwyer
Sandercock	r. def.	Halpin
Darch	l. def.	Richardson
Forsythe	rover	Knapman
Hills	centre	Rose
Lowe	left wing	Barrie
Bennett	right wing	Long

The Play

The game had hardly begun when Barrie drew a penalty for slashing. He was quickly followed by Forsythe for tripping Richardson. Grover Halpin broke his skate and went off for repairs, accompanied by Bennett. Barrie came back as did Forsythe and for a while Port Hope had most of the play. The local boys were lost in their new positions and were not playing combination. Barrie rushed the puck and passed to Rose, who slammed it in. Time 4 minutes. Port Hope—0, Peterboro—1.

The lineup of the locals was then switched, Long going back to defence, Knapman going to right and Halpin roving. The pace was very fast and clean, both sides showing good condition, and playing combination. Rowden kicked out some fast ones, and then the play hovered around the Peterboro net, giving Dwyer a chance to show his class. Halpin drew a penalty for body-checking, and just as he returned, Richardson was banished for cross-checking. He returned before any scoring was done. Hills and Bennett broke away and the latter beat Dwyer, close in. Time 10 minutes. Port Hope—1, Peterboro—1.

Richardson's nose started to bleed as a result of a hook and he retired. Port Hope dropped Bennett. Both were on again in a few minutes. Sandercock was caged for body-checking and shortly after he returned. Darch took his place for tripping. With the latter off Hills made a beautiful lone rush which resulted in putting Port Hope in the lead. Time 5 minutes. Port Hope—2, Peterboro—1.

The play grew very fast and some nifty stick handling was exhibited. Both goal minders were bombarded but they proved equal to the occasion, Rowden in particular, showing great ability. Bennett drew a penalty for tripping and a few seconds afterwards Barrie scooped one in from the side. Time 5 minutes. Port Hope—2, Peterboro—2.

The fans who were waiting for Captain Halpin to come through with a long rush, were satisfied at this point of the game as Grover took the puck from his own net and circled everybody to Rowden. Time 1 minute. Port Hope—2, Peterboro—3.

The locals had the visitors on the run and the puck was soon around Port Hope's net. Rose had hard luck in his shooting, missing the goal by inches, but Knapman took the rubber from behind the nets and after some clever stick handling he snaked it around and scored. Time 1 minute. Port Hope—2, Peterboro—4.

That ended the scoring till after half time.

Second Half

Forsythe was penalized for slashing, and as he returned Bennett went off for the same offence. Peterboro appeared to have it on the visitors and only the fast work of Rowden saved tallies. Rose and Halpin combined on rush after rush, but all to no avail. At last after 10 minutes of lightning fast hockey, Knapman passed to Halpin in front of the nets and Grover lifted it in. Port Hope—2, Peterboro—5.

Joe Dwyer was given a warm reception, but a rush by Long relieved him before any damage was done. Forsythe was cooped for tripping Rose and soon Richardson was sent away for body checking. While they were off Bennett broke away and scored from close in. Time 3 minutes. Port Hope—3, Peterboro—5.

Both Forsythe and Richardson returned and for a while the locals had most of the play. Once again did Rowden produce the goods and saved sure goals by his clever work. The visitors' forward line at last broke away on a nice rush and Lowe drove one past Dwyer. Time 6 minutes. Port Hope—4, Peterboro—5.

The score was beginning to get a little too close and the fans became anxious but Rose took the puck from mid-ice and after passing every one, beat Rowden from close in. Time 40 seconds. Port Hope—4, Peterboro—6.

"Dank" Barrie came down the right wing on a beautiful rush but was hooked across the head by Darch. The "human god" drew a penalty of five minutes for the offence. Halpin went down centre ice and passed to Barrie, who scored on a neat shot from the side. Time 2 minutes. Port Hope—4, Peterboro—7.

Long was banished for hooking, and Darch returned. Richardson wound up the game by a spectacular rush, which resulted in a score. Time 1 minute. Port Hope—4, Peterboro—8.

CHURCH HOCKEY LEAGUE GAMES FOR THIS WEEK

Games This Week

Great interest is being manifested in the Church Hockey League games which will commence this week. The challenge cup, which is now held by St. Andrew's, is on exhibition in E. V. Warne's jewelry store window.

The first game will be held at the Brock Street Rink on Thursday, Jan. 22, from 7 to 8 o'clock, between All Saints' and Knox.

On Friday night Jan. 23, St. Paul's will play Murray St., from 7 to 8 o'clock.

The Y. M. C. A. clash with George St. on Friday night, Jan. 23, from 10 to 11.

There will be no admission. The dates for the following games will be published later.

PETES WILL SEND THE REGULAR LINE-UP AGAINST BOWMANVILLE

A very fast game is expected tonight between the local Intermediates and Bowmanville. When these teams met before neither was in very good condition, but all the players are in the pink now and can be relied upon to hurry for the whole 60 minutes. The locals are well on their way to the district honors and canont afford to lose tonight. To overcome any possibility of defeat, the fans no doubt will be out in large numbers to help the boys along.

Janes will perform in the nets and after his spectacular work in Cobourg on Monday night he is deserving of an ovation. Denison and Bond will work on the defence and should come through with some stellar work. Kelly, Park, Giroux and Bradshaw will compose the forward line. This and the game next Tuesday with Cobourg will be the last time this season to see any of the remaining district teams in action.

BRANTFORD LOSES CHUBBY COOSE AND GETS RUBE DENEAU

BRANTFORD, Jan. 21.—Following the meeting of the Canadian League magnates in Toronto, the deal is announced whereby George Deneau will come to Brantford as manager this year. President Nelson and London representatives got together and in a short time the deal was arranged, although it doubtless had been under consideration for some time. Brantford loses Chubby Coose, but gets Deneau. Coose had proved a most valuable player, and had occupied every one of the nine positions of the team, most of which he filled very creditably. He was always considered a dangerous batsman.

Junior Arrows

The Junior Arrows are going to play the Queen Mary School a game of hockey on Friday night, from 7 to 8, at Parker's rink. The two teams have never been together before and is expected to be a good fast game. The Arrows will challenge any amateur team their size.

Knowledge isn't always power, but it knows when to press the button.

DISTRICT CUP

The matches for the District Cup, group No. 2, will be played here on Tuesday, Jan. 27th. The curling will commence at 1 o'clock.

hTe Boston Exploits will practice on Monday evening from 7 to 8, at the Brock Street Rink.

SALARY LIMIT IN CLASS B IS $2500

The higher rate of classification means that Canadian league fans will see baseball in 1914 that will be in every way better than that witnessed in the circuit since its inception. And speaking of the higher rate of classification, it is only right to refer to the rapid rise of the league, which today, in the opinion of Frank S. Shaughnessey, the Ottawa manager, is one of the best in minor league ball. In 1911 the league was rated as D. class; in 1912 it was advanced to C. class, and now, in 1914, the fans are to see B class ball. The salary limit in a B class league is $2500, or $1100 more than in C class, and ensures an article of ball that will be entirely pleasing. The jump in the salaries will hurt the smaller towns somewhat, but the draft prices are higher and will no doubt even up matters should any of the clubs be successful in sending a few players to higher company.

ROWAN MAY GET BIRTH IN HAMILTON

Davey Rowan, manager of last year's Peterboro club, is out of a job. He was at yesterday's meeting, but was not approached by either Delegates Denham or Carr, the Peterboro representatives. Davey would like to come to Hamilton. The reason attributed for the Peterboro club not seeking him again is that they believed him to be sick last summer, but he has come around again and would be a handy man to have around.—Hamilton Herald.

RE-UNITED BY A SONG

It Was Composed by Rev. F. A. Conners of Park Street Church

The following is a popular song, written by Rev. F. A. Conners, pastor of Park Street Baptist Church, and is published by The H. Kirkus Dugdale Co., of Washington, D.C. One of the largest music houses in the United States.

This song was written from life on a young couple from Fort Wayne, Ind., who were separated after their first child was born. The husband was one of the crew that decorated the First Baptist Church at Cherokee Ia., during Rev. Mr. Conners' pastorate of that church. A copy of this song was sent to the husband while at Cameron, Mo., and was the means of bringing this couple together after about a year's separation.

WHAT MAKES LIFE WORTH WHILE?

By F. A. Conners.

We were wedded in the June time.
When the flowers were all in bloom,
And she told me that she loved me,
But she left me ah! so soon.
Now I can't think that she's happy,
Though her face I cannot see.
And I trust she'll see her folly,
And come back some day to me.

Chorus—
Now I'm planning for that meeting
And I know it won't be long.
So I'll send to her this greeting,
In the assumption of a song.
And I trust that she'll be waiting there
To greet me with a smile;
It's a loving wife and baby
That makes this life worth while.

Well I recollect the hour,
As I held her hand in mine,
And the Parson stood before us,
And in words almost divine,
Said: "You take this woman, do you,
To be your wedded wife?"
And I promised there to love her,
And provide for her through life.

And then in words as solemn,
In turn to her did say,
And the ceremony was ended,
On that bright and happy day.
But alas! she's gone and left me,
In this world to roam alone,
And I've been so sad and lonely,
For I've got no "Home Sweet Home."

But I've just received a letter,
That has filled my heart with joy,
For it brought to me a message,
From my wife and baby boy.
And she tells me as she wrote it,
That the baby tried to say,
"I want to see my Papa,
Who has gone so far away."

How I often think of baby,
With his prattle and his smile,
It's those happy little creatures,
That make this life worth while,
So I'm longing now to see him,
And I soon will take the train,
To return to wife and baby,
In the city of Fort Wayne.

OBITUARY

A PIONEER GONE.

The call of death was responded to yesterday morning, by one of this city's oldest and most widely known residents in the person of Mr. Edward Devine, 572 Bolivar Street, aged 75 years.

Deceased was born in Ireland but came to this country when a boy. He lived in Quebec. After working around the Ontario lakeshore district for a while he came up to this section via boat from Bay of Quinte, the only means of transportation then available. He was engaged in the lumber business and to him and men of his calling belongs the credit for cleaning away the primeval forest and tutoring Canada through her childhood days. In late years Mr. Devine would tell of the various trying experiences early life in this country contributed to the young unseasoned sons of the old countries.

The late Mr. Devine had one son, Edward, who served in the navy under the Stars and Stripes during the Spanish-American War but some sixteen years ago he passed away, in the service, near Boston. Mr. Devine leaves his wife and a stepson to mourn his loss. In religion he was a Roman Catholic and a faithful member of St. Peter's Cathedral.

The funeral will be held Friday morning at nine o'clock to St. Peter's Cathedral and cemetery.

A gold locket and chain was the groom's gift to the bride; to the bridesmaid an opal brooch, and to the groomsman a pear tie pin.

Mr. and Mrs. Kearns left on the 9.45 train for parts west, amidst congratulations and a profuse shower of confetti. They will take up their residence in Lindsay after their return from the honeymoon trip.—Lindsay Warder.

SHOVEL YOUR SNOW MADAM?

A Suggestion to Those Who are in Employment to Help Those Who Are Not.

A local clergyman has brought forth a very good suggestion on behalf of the army of unemployed. It is this: the heavy snow falls necessitates the citizens doing considerable shovelling. Now if the citizens would give some of these able-bodied men the job it would be of some help.

Mr. O. S. Matchett is in Toronto today, on business.

Mrs. Geo. Valway and son, George of Toronto, are in the city.

The Bishop of Toronto and Mrs. Sweeny announce the engagement of their daughter, Kathleen Chipman, to Mr. Cecil P. Liebich, of The Molson's Bank, Montreal. The marriage will take place in June, at Toronto.

Many of the older residents will remember and regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Dunham, nee Margaret Simpson, which occurred recently in the hospital at Elizabethville, New Jersey, after a very short illness from heart trouble.

Mr. R. W. Smith and Mr. W. B. Smart of Port Hope were in the city yesterday.

Miss Olive Alison having finished her three year course in the Toronto General Hospital, has accepted the position of first assistant in the Operating rooms of the private patients' pavilion, Toronto General Hospital. Her graduating exercises take place in May.

A QUESTION FOR THE SNOW SHOVEL MAN

A number of citizens have been wondering a few querries concerning the snow on the streets. When the snow plow man ploughed the snow off George Street this morning a quite respectable pile of snow was left at the intersection of the streets and where the cross streets were ploughd a similar ridge of snow was left across the George Street sidewalk. Now the snow plow man has certain duties to perform, but the question all those ladies and gentlemen that had to climb those ridges are asking is: "Is it the duty of the snow plow man to carry a shovel with him and clean the street intersections of snow or if not, whose duty it is?" This technical question might be answered by the Mayor, City Clerk, or City Solicitor.

MAYOR BULLER MUST HAVE HAD BUSY DAY AT 'PHONE

Between 25 and 30 Complaints Against the Snow Plow Men---City Engineer Will Soon Have Full Report on Sewerage Disposal Scheme---Board of Works Session

The members of the Board of Works with Ald. Duncan in the chair, were in grand form last night and they took up quite a variety of subjects. They even talked about street watering for the good old summer time. This has been good anywhere from one to three hours and the dust still remained.

Mayor Buller introduced the topic by referring to the suggested arrangement of last year, by which the Street Railway Co. would, with the use of sprinklers on the street cars, looking after the business section and the streets on their line.

It was decided to see the company again in regard to the matter.

In regard to the general system, Ald. Green said he had the matter of extensions to bring before the Board. He will have his innings at a future meeting.

Rocky Roads.

Mayor Buller suggested that this year an outfit of one horse and dump cart be provided for each ward so that attention might be given to the roads. His Worship would have all the "gullies" filled up. He believes that a stitch in time saves nine.

Ald. McIntyre wanted a team, his argument being that one horse would not be able to do the work such as making the much needed repairs to Concession street, south.

The motion of Ald. Green and Duffus that two horses and two carts be provided, as a test, in the city at large, was carried.

While the thoughts of the members were turned eastward, Ald. McIntyre asked regarding the petition for a sewer on Mark street, to serve the Brisbeau houses. The Engineer will rport.

Street Signs.

Ald. Duffus said the present system of designating the streets by using the pavement was rather inconvenient, particularly when "canvassing."

The discussion was brought about when the chairman uncovered a letter from J. J. Turner & Sons submitting an offer to supply enamel signs.

Mayor Buller said Brantford used these signs on small posts, in a conspicuous place, and they looked fine.

Ald. Anderson liked the signs, but not the price of 60 cents each. Action was deferred.

The same firm asked for a granolithic sidewalk on the south of their factory and the removal of the poles. The present walk is of boards. The Engineer will report.

Street Paving.

When Ald. Duncan discovered one of the Mayor's planks—street paving, he asked for opinions. His own was that the Board would find the ratepayers would ask for a continuance.

Ald. Duffus suggested looking into the question of providing a municipal paving plant to see if the work could be carried on more satisfactorily.

The paving constructors of last year have yet to pave George street to the C.P.R. station and Charlotte street to the G.T.R. tracks. The general opinion of the members was that the central district should then be completed before any branch lines were proceeded with.

Sewerage Disposal.

Another plank of the Mayor's, which received consideration was that of the sewerage disposal. The ratepayers will be familiar with the discussions and progress made last year.

In answer to a query, City Engineer Parsons said it would take three weeks to complete his plans and at that time he would be in a position to submit a full report. "Then that plank will be all right," remarked Mayor Buller, who evidently remembered having read a certain article in the newspapers which intimated that another plank had "busted."

Asked if he thought the plans would meet with the approval of the Provincial Board of Health, Mr. Parsons replied, "I think so." He had all the information the Provincial Board would give him. He intimated that the Board should go slow as to the capacity of the system of treating the sewage, as ina short time perhaps the system might be out of date, according to the opinion of the Provincial Board. For the present the system would be the most up-to-date in Canada.

The Engine House.

Ald. Green suggested further action to have the G.T.R. remove the engine house at the G.T.R. yards, in accordance with the understanding with the city last year, and on motion, the Clerk was instructed to write the proper authorities.

Ald. Green said the gatekeeper could not see the trains approaching from the couth. Ald. Duffus complained of the noise and incidentally referred to the question of a Union Station.

A Dangerous Point.

The G.T.R. company wrote that they were removing the tracks on the west side of Bethune street, where Alex. Ferguson lost a leg in an accident with a shunting engine with cars, and that they would be 4 feet 6 inches from the sidewalk instead of 3 feet 6 inches, as is now the case.

"Watch it closely and see that it is done," remarked Ald. Green.

A sign has been placed on a store or house at this place, so it was reported. The Engineer was instructed to get the width of the street and find out if the sign encroaches on the proper allowance.

Removing the "Beautiful."

Regarding the removal of snow from the sidewalks, Ald. Duncan opined that if the agreement with the contractors provided so, they be made carry a shovel and clear the street properly.

"They wouldn't get over the town in a month if that was adhered to," said Ald. Johnston.

Mayor Buller felt the service was not satisfactory. He had had from 25 to 30 telephone calls of complaints that day, particularly from the West Ward. He said Mr. Edmondson had informed him that he had only been able to get as far as Babb's lane at 10.30 a.m.

Ald. Anderson—They should keep going while it's storming.

Ald. Johnston—We'll never get it done properly till it's handled by individuals. He believed the men were doing their best. The people should assist opposite their property. Some did so and some did not.

Mayor Buller—Why should young girls and men have to go through snow up to their knees?

Ald. Duncan—The trouble is they don't get out early in the morning.

Ald. Johnston—In my division, there is as good a man as could be found.

Ald. Duncan—They had nothing to do up to a few weeks ago. When they have it easy they laugh up their sleeves; when there is a little rush, they ask for money. Ald. Duncan said the men had on one occasion received more money, despite Ald. Johnston's statement that they had not.

Continuing, Ald. Johnston said the City Engineer had already imposed two fines.

Mayor Buller referred to the practice of the railways causing banks of snow. He was speaking more of the locomotives.

It was explained that the Street Railway paid half the cost of removing the snow from the streets on which their cars are running. This arrangement is until the expiration of their franchise.

No definite action was taken by the Board in regard to the men.

Telephone Poles.

Permission was granted the Bell Telephone Co. to plant poles on sections of the following streets: Bolivar, John, Hazlitt, Aylmer, London, Dublin, Stewart and William.

It might be repeated that the company is compelled by law to give telephone services and the city cannot prevent the company from using the streets.

A FINE RECORD IN CHURCH WORK

It is gratifying to note the advancement that our city churches are making all along the line. The other day we published the Annual Statement of St. Paul's Church, which showed the splendid results of the work of the pastor, Rev. Robt. Pogue, for the last year, and this despite the fact that Mr. Pogue has been "under the weather" for much of that time.

To-day we publish the annual report of the Murray Street Baptist Church. The result of the year's labours of Rev. J. R. Webb is exceptionally interesting and encouraging. It will be noticed that one-half of the total income was put on the collection plate, and that all other departments are in a healthy state, and as it is more blessed to give than receive, the Baptists ought to be well blest.

Technical Society.

There will be a free lecture at the room of the Technical Society, Bank of Commerce Building, on Friday next, Jan. 23rd, at 8 p.m. sharp. The subject will be: "Wireless Telegraphy" and will be illustrated with working apparatus. The lecturer will be F. K. Dalton, B. Sc., M.A.

This will be a smoker and all men interested in engineering or scientific subjects are invited to attend.

BLOCK OF STORES LOST BY FIRE AT HAVELOCK

Havelock was visited by a bad fire on Tuesday night, when the brick block of stores on George street, east of the Postoffice and opposite the English church property, was burned. The block was owned by Mr. James Thompson, M.L.A., and was occupied by Mr. E. Singer, dry goods, millinery, etc., and Mr. W. A. McMaster, Clerk of the Division Court, and dealer in groceries, boots and shoes. The fire, which started in Singer's part of the block, occurred about twelve o'clock, midnight.

The block was valued at about $4500, being partially covered by insurance to the amount of $2500,

CENTRALIZE TWO SYSTEMS

Have Waterworks Engineering Work Under Control of City Engineer

Would Give Better Results and Unnecessary Money Would not be Spent

On the recommendation of the City Engineer and with the conviction that better results would be obtained and money would be saved, the Board of Works will ask the Board of Water Commissioners to assent to the engineering work of the commission on streets being placed under the control of the City Engineering department.

Mr. Parsons also suggested a new basis for charging up the salaries of the men in his department, to the various works. This was satisfactory to the Board.

Speaking of the system of having two departments, Mr. Parsons left that unnecessary money was spent. The part of the waterworks should be under the control of the City Engineer. Ald. Duncan—We should centralize everything.

Ald. Johnston—We should centralize for economy's sake.

Mayor Buller understood that the matter had been brought up last year and that the Water Commissioners had agreed to take it up this year. He favored the recommendation.

Mr. Parsons has had experience with waterworks systems and has designed a number of plants.

SOO EXPRESS LEAVES RAILS; ONE KILLED

Seven of Fifteen Injured Are Sent to the Hospital

Canadian Press Despatch

MONTREAL, Jan. 22.—The C. P. R. Express, for the Soo, which left here at 10.30 last night, was derailed from some unknown cause at Meath near Pembroke. Mrs. J. J. Salmon, who got aboard at Cobden, was killed. Seven others were injured, but not seriously.

Ottawa (later)—The wreck of the Soo Express at Meath was caused by a spreading rail. Altogether fifteen are reported injured, seven of whom are in Pembroke hospital. None of them is thought to be in a serious condition. Mrs. Salmon, who was killed, belonged to Sudbury. She had been visiting at Osceola and had boarded the train not far from Meath with her husband and child, who both escaped. Conductor Carter is among the injured.

Elphgrave and Barrett get the contract for the carpenter work and also the masonry. The contract for painting was awarded to Ald. Duncan, while the contract for the plastering was awarded to Mr. Saxby. The biggest contract, that of plumbing, has as yet not been let.

BRITISH SUBMARINE A7, WHICH SANK WITH 14 MEN

THE A-7.

SUBMARINE IS LOCATED

Lost War Craft is Found by Traces of Oil.

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Jan. 22.—The British submarine A 7, which sank to the bottom of Whitesand Bay on Friday last during manoeuvres, was located yesterday in twenty-three fathoms of water, four miles from shore. The submarine is lying a little east of the spot where she disappeared. The discovery was due to a member of the crew of one of the search vessels, who noticed oil floating on the surface.

A diver was immediately sent down and found the submarine. It was too late to start raising operations, which began at daybreak this morning.

FOREMAN OF SEWER WORK

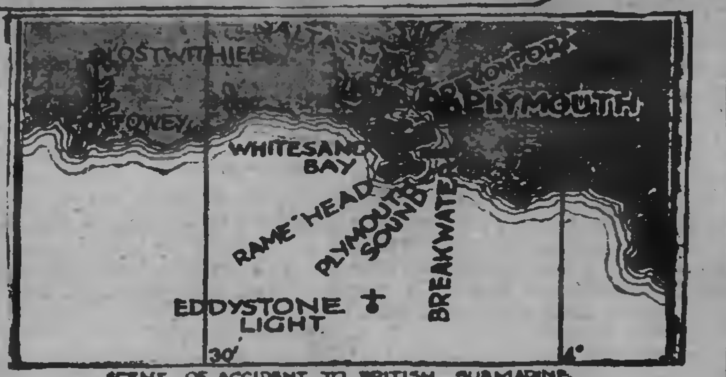
Board of Works Decide to Take no Action for the Present

Last year the Board of Works recommendation that the matter of appointing sewer foremen, be left in the hands of the City Engineer, was adopted by council.

Last night a similar motion was moved but it did not meet the necessary amount of favor. An amendment that the matter be left in abeyance was passed.

Martin Neary applied by letter for the job, and when Ald. Duncan called for the feeling of the meeting, Ald. McIntyre asked if it would not be a good idea to advertise for applications. Ald. Duffus thought the matter should be left with the Engineer as he was held responsible. He could round up the men early in the season so that both the department and the men would know definitely. It was moved by Ald. Duffus, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the Engineer make the appointments.

"It's too early in the year to pass that motion," said Ald. Green. Ald. Johnston felt that the course had been decided last year. If Mr. Parsons had been competent last year, would he not be so this year. Ald. Green moved, seconded by Ald. Stratton, that the matter be left in abeyance and this amendment was carried. Ald. Johnston did not vote.



SCENE OF ACCIDENT TO BRITISH SUBMARINE

QUESTION OF NEW BUILDINGS FOR THE PETERBORO FAIR AGAIN BROUGHT UP

Action by the Executive is Suggested at Annual Meeting

Mr. J. H. Garbutt Is Given Another Term As President

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Board of Directors was held yesterday afternoon in the City Council Chamber, President Mr. J. H. Garbutt presiding. The first business was the clearing up of a few protests. An exhibitor protested the distribution of prizes for one class of cattle. Director Mr. Millburn entered some cattle in this class and although they were registered, their pedigree had not arrived from Ottawa. Without the pedigree it was impossible to claim a prize. After Mr. Millburn gave the explanation he moved that the other competitor be given the prize which was carried. The meeting then awarded Mr. Millburn second money. It was remarked during the discussion that directors should not exhibit but no action was taken in the matter.

A protest of Mr. Humphrey was next dealt with. He stated that he exhibited 1913 grain but the judge threw it out claiming it to be old grain. He exhibited it at other fairs and as he had had trouble with the same judge the previous year, at Norwood he thought it was a case of prejudice. Mr. G. A. Gillespie thought that the grain should be put to the moisture test if Mr. Humphrey would make a declaration to the secretary that it was the same grain as he exhibited. The matter was left in the hands of the President, Mr. S. Deyell, and Mr. F. Wise with power to act.

President Mr. J. H. Garbutt then gave his address stating that the year's work had been very gratifying from every point of view. The gate receipts had fallen off a little but that had been made up for in other ways. The prize list was very large and the entries especially in the live stock line far surpassed all previous years. It was necessary on the second day to erect tents to afford accommodation. On the whole the exhibition had far surpassed any previous year.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., had a statement which appeared in the local press some time ago and in it the statistics differed from those made by Mr. Garbutt. The matter was left over and will be looked into before the next meeting.

Secretary-Treasurer Hall then read the minutes of the last annual meeting and they were confirmed. President Garbutt then paid a very touching tribute to the late director, John Brown, who passed away a short time ago. He was one of their most energetic members and was always on hand when needed. A letter of condolence will be sent to the family of the deceased gentleman.

Financial Statement.

The financial statement was then read. Mr. J. J. Turner requested that some information be given him as to why the Board had hired help to collect the money while the year previous two directors, Mr. Conway and himself, did this work gratis. He also intimated that Mr. Conway had not been treated fairly by the Board as he was not given notice of the meetings they held, and he expressed himself as being very sorry that such a good man be treated in this way. Mr. Garbutt replied and stated emphatically that he had on two occasions asked Mr. Conway personally to attend the meetings

A LIVE CHURCH

Reports Are Made From Fifteen Departments of Murray Street Baptist Church; Income for Year was $12,748.20

Last evening a large audience gathered in the Murray street Baptist edifice, the occasion being the annual meeting of the church. The chair was occupied by Rev. J. R. Webb, the pastor. The reports of fifteen different departments were presented and adopted, each of which showed that the people of Murray street are alive to their opportunities and that the erection of the handsome building on the side of Central Park has been fully justified. The numerical statistics show that between fifty and sixty have been added to the membership. The givings of the people have always been most worthy, but this year surpasses all others and shows that over eleven thousand dollars has been contributed by its members in twelve months exclusive of certain sums paid into the building fund by those outside of the church.

The following are the receipts of the different departments:—

General Fund	$ 6,119.60
Building Fund	4,766.00
Sunday School	602.23
Ladies Aid Society	598.00
Mission Circle	335.92
Fellowship Fund	102.29
Mission Band	161.26
Young People's Union	58.76
Baby Mission Band	3.30
Cradle Roll	80
Total	$12,748.20

The Sunday School has increased steadily during the year. The only Chinese baby in Peterborough, George Sam, is a member of the Cradle Roll of this school. The Chinese department is under the direction of Mr. L. J. Pettit, B.A., and is doing splendid work.

The pastor of the church, who has just completed his seventh year, has made one thousand and four regular pastoral visits besides keeping many social engagements. This with the many calls outside of the church, and the pulpit and Sunday school ministry makes a very full year.

A resolutin moved by Mr. T. F. Matthews, and seconded by Mr. William Aldridge, expressing the confidence gratitude and affection of the church, was unanimously carried, amid applause and was tendered to Rev. Mr. Webb, by Dr. W. D. Scott. Mr. Webb replied in fitting terms.

The officers elected for the year 1914, are as follows:—

The retiring deacons, Messrs. W. D. Scott, M.D., V. Eastwood and Geo. Cochrane, were re-elected.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the retiring Financial Secretary, Mr. E. Brumwell, and also to the choir for the excellent service rendered during the year.

Insane Man Was Burned in Fire He Started.

Canadian Press Despatch

EDMONTON, Jan. 22.—An insane man named ~~MacKenzie~~ Bateson, for some time chef at the Alberta University, was remanded from police court yesterday and placed in a padded cell at the Mounted Police barracks.

PLANK NOT LOST YET

Mayor Buller Says Police Commissioners Have Not Given Their Decision

Mayor Buller smiled serenely last night when members of the Board of Works reminded him of the reported remarks of Rev. Jas. Rollins, in regard to the meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners.

His Worship was inclined to the opinion that the criticism was hardly fair, in view of the fact that the Police Commissioners had not yet made a decision. They have not decided that Peterboro should not have a police woman. He said he would have something to say when the Board met again.

SEWER SERVICE.

The City Engineer has submitted a report on a sewer service for the Dickson Company property. The Provincial Board of Health will be asked to recommend that the work be done.

ASK CITY COUNCIL TO PROVIDE $10,000 FOR SANITORIUM HERE

Deputation From Health Association Will Wait on Council — Want Anti-spitting By-law Enforced — The New Officers

At the adjourned annual meeting of the Peterborough Health Association, yesterday afternoon, in the Bank of Montreal chambers, it was resolved that the association petition the City Council to provide $10,000 for a sanitorium for Peterborough.

The association will provide $10,000. With the acquirement of the $20,000, the association would be entitled to the Government grant of one fifth of the cost, $4,000.

It has been suggested that the city property, known as the Hilliard farm, might be a suitable site.

The question of fumigation of houses was brought forward again, but it was felt that as the law provided for fumigation, the Board of Health had power to act.

It was decided to renew the efforts to have the anti-spitting by-law put in force and the signs erected.

The officers for the year are as follows:—

Hon. President—W. H. Moore, K.C.

President—E. A. Peck, M.L.A.

Vice-Presidents — Dr. Cameron, Rev. Father Phelan, Rev. T. J. Mansell.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, JAN. 22, 1914

LORD STRATHCONA.

JANUARY is a very trying month and seems to test the endurance of the older people. The Canadian news world is just now stricken with the reports of the dead or the dying. Senator Cox passed without any preliminary public warning. Sir James Whitney has been battling with death for over a week, and now the news comes from England that the Canadian veteran and patriarch, Lord Strathcona, has passed away.

His Lordship of course had long passed the allotted span of human life, and when it was reported that he was so low it was not anticipated that he would rise from his illness. It is certain that his recent bereavement had much if not everything to do with the breaking up of the old man. Lady Strathcona was his constant companion and was ever in attendance upon him, her death must have left a great blank in his life after they had spent so many years together.

Donald Alexander Smith came to Canada as a lad and entered into the service of the Hudson Bay Company at Labrador, this boy became Lord Strathcona. The story of his life is practically the story of the life of Canada for the last fifty years, and it will be one of the most interesting and inspiring biographies of Canada's great men when it comes to be fully written.

Notwithstanding his great age Lord Strathcona will be greatly missed in Canadian public life, for he was a very active figure. There was scarcely an occasion of any national importance from which he was absent. He took a lively and influential interest in everything connected with the Dominion and the Empire. He was continually on the move and was always on the look out for any opportunity to advance the interest of Canada at home and abroad. He has had a long life and has reaped the full reward of all his labors ; he has well earned his long rest.

SKIMMED MILK AND ROLLED OATS.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING will not down. Everybody is talking about it, and there is a commission sitting, somewhere between Halifax and Vancouver, to try and solve the question as to why the cost of living is so high. This commission, as we say, is sitting, or should be sitting ; no one has heard anything about its deliberations as yet, but we have not the slightest doubt that the commission is sitting. It is very quiet, but that does not mean that it is not sitting. A hen sits, or sets, on a nest of eggs for three weeks and says very little in that time, but it is brooding and the eggs are slowly being transformed into chickens. It may therefore be that the Government COMMISSION HEN is sitting upon the forth-cents a dozen egg in the hope of hatching something out of it—if there is anything in it, and one of these fine mornings in the spring we shall hear quite a flutter and a lot of clucking in the Ottawa coop, and the Hen will present us with a brood of chickens that will—make very interesting "dope" for quite a number of editorials !

A local society had a debate the other evening upon this subject of the high cost of living, and being quite an unofficial and irresponsible council on the matter, many things were said that were irrevelant and thrown in to fill out a very poor argument. At the same time there was much wisdom as well as wit in some of the things that were said. Most of the speakers agreed that the reason the cost of living was so high was that our living is too high and costly. That there was a great deal of extravagance in the way we live. We go in for more luxuries and unnecessary things in these days than was the case with our grandfathers. As one speaker very wittily put it, "Every home has a phonograph in its front room or in the ash-barrel."

The fact is that food is as cheap in Canada as in any other up-to-date country, and in proportion to the wages received by the average workman, food is very much cheaper in Canada than in either England, France or the United States. The extravagance enters into the clothing and housing account. The average Canadian is far better dressed than the average Englishman and his housing conditions are much more expensive. The problem of heating for the winter calls for a great deal more expenditure during one half the year in Canada than in Great Britain, coal is as necessary as food. To provide for these extras the householder finds that he has to forego many pet unessentials and then he cries out against the high cost of living.

There are various ways of living and in most of these ways the cost is high. One way to cut down the cost of food is to eat plain food. A well-known merchant in the city expressed it as his opinion that people should eat plenty of skimmed milk and rolled oats. This he contended would solve the problem of the high cost of living. It certainly would. Oats, as a food, is very much underestimated, except in the stable. Any farmer or livery man will tell you that the only thing that will give "life" to a horse is oats. The anatomy of a horse has been compared by scientists with that of man as being very similar, and if whole, or "hull" oats will give life to a horse, skimmed milk and rolled oats ought to give life to a man, and as these two things are cheap the high cost of "life" ought to be considerably reduced if people would only adopt this diet.

There are those who will object to this advice on the ground that a man is not a horse and has a less delicate constitution. But there is the example of the Scots to prove that oatmeal makes strong, hardy and brainy men. Dr. Samuel Johnson on one occasion derided Scotsmen by saying that they lived upon what the Englishman fed to his horses. Boswell, who was a Scotsman, replied : "Yes, Sir, and that is why England produces the best horses and Scotland the best men !" Remember the recipe—"Skimmed milk and rolled oats."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A MAN WAS ARRESTED in Germany for sneezing. The charge was one of "disturbing the public peace," etc. It is doubtful if the man could have stopped the sneeze to save his life.

HANS SCHMIDT, the priest who is up on a charge of murder, and at whose first trial the jury disagreed, is to be tried a second time. It would appear that they don't like parting with their murderers over the line.

A SUFFRAGETTE hurled a bag of flower (a paper bag of course) at Mr. Thomas MacKinnon Wood, while he was addressing a meeting in Edinburgh. The paper bag struck him full in the face, and bursting, the flour spread all over his clothing. The rest of his speech is not recorded.

THE KAISER has issued an order in regard to the conduct of army officers taking the arms of their wives. He objects to the practice, it seems, because the men ought to have their arms free. We wonder what they think of this at the Armories ?

THERE IS MUCH SHUFFLING of Newspapers going on just now in Montreal. The Telegraph, which was said to have acquired the services of the Hon. Fielding as Editor-in-Chief, is about to dissolve. The Phoenix which arose from the ashes of The Witness was only smoke after all.

THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER tries very hard, at times, to be really funny. Other people accomplish their humor more easily and often unconsciously. Our advertisement department passed a "lost ad." the other day which read: "Lost, a brown dog answering to the name of Gyp on Hunter Street." It may be of course that this dog is fastidious. We wonder what name he would respond to on George Street ?

PREMIER BORDEN said some very straight and sensible things in the House on Monday. Speaking of the remedying of existing conditions, he said the government intended to make every possible effort to keep the people upon the land. He would give the farmers good roads. Those who have lived in the country, and have had to drive over some of our country roads in the spring and fall, do not greatly wonder why the young people come to the city where they can walk and drive decently.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Why We Eat Meat.

Westminster Gazette.

Most of us like to back up our preferences or prejudices by scientific authority, and the meat eater and the vegetarian both rely on doctors and scientists to support them. The Germans take particular delight in the battle of arguments on the question, and are more interested in questions of diet than we are. The meat eaters, therefore, have hailed with great pleasure an article by Professor Rubner, a well-known scientist, in the Umschau. The Professor is on their side as far as cold and temperate climates are concerned. For a tremendous increase in bodily heat is produced by albuminous food, and no non-nitrogenous food, such as the vegetarian diet, approximates to this.

Professor Rubner declares that such an increase of heat in the meat-eater enables him to be comfortable in a temperature lower by 18 deg. Fahr. than the person fed on carbohydrates can stand. Another point of interest noted is that the meat-eater commonly eats a larger proportion of meat in one of his three daily meals and more corbohydrates in the other two, whereas a vegetable diet has the nitrogen and carbohydrates better balanced in all three meals. Hence, in the first case a specific outburst of energy after the meat meal may be noted, which is not seen in the case of the vegetarian. So whatever ills meat-eaters may be subject to, it might be gathered from Dr. Rubner's statements that they at least get more comfort and pleasure from eating than do the vegetarians.

On the other hand heavy meat-eating in the Tropics and in a temperate climate is not desirable. For the time being, however, while the cold spell lasts, the man who eats meat twice or three times a day need not feel that he is overdoing it.

Strathcona.

The Globe.

Laments, laments in dark Glencoe !
O toll the bells of old St. Giles !
The dog-teams speed across the snow
And flash the news to farthest isles !

A grand old Scot goes to his rest.
A staunch, brave heart has ceased to beat.
Canada shrined within his breast ;
True Empire's friend at Empire's seat.

Sleep on ! Sleep on ! thy work is done.
The Westland, girt with ribs of steel,
Strong in her youth, her race to run,
Shall honor thee who sought her weal.

Thy Spey-side lad has died a Peer ;
And clear and true the clan-rally
Rang ever through his great career :
"Stand fast, stand fast, Craigellachie."

THE RURAL MAIL

By Walt Mason

A fierce and bitter storm's abroad, it is a bleak midwinter day, and slowly o'er the frozen sod the postman's pony picks its way. The postman and his horse are cold, but fearlessly they face the gale ; though storms increase a hundredfold, the farmer folk must have their mail. The hours drag on, the lonely road grows rougher with each mile that's past, the weary pony feels its load, and staggers in the shrieking blast. But man and horse strive on the more ; they never learned such word as fail ; though tempests beat and torrents pour, the farmer folk must have their mail. At night the pony, to its shed, drags on its cold, exhausted frame ; and after supper, to his bed the wearied postman does the same. Tomorrow brings the same old round, the same exhausting, thankless grind ; the journey over frozen ground, the facing of the bitter wind. The postman does a hero's stunt to earn his scanty roll of kale ; of all the storms he bears the brunt—the farmer folk must have their mail !

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

UNJUST, MR. ROLLINS.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Why is Rev. James Rollins so unjust as he is reported in your paper on Monday. Mayor Buller is for a woman policeman, but what can he do alone? I heard the Mayor say yesterday that he was in favor of a woman policeman, but he is not like Mr. Rollins I suppose, the whole show and can do what he likes and nobody to call him down for being unjust.

Yours truly,
Reader.

DEFENDS HIS CALLING

To the Editor of The Review.

Dear Sir, My attention was drawn yesterday to the double column report of a debate in your issue of Tuesday 20th, in which the reading says in big black letters that "Land speculation is worse than gambling at cards." In reading the report it developed that a few young people from St. Paul's Presbyterian and George St. Methodist Churches had a debate on Monday night, on the subject: "Resolved, that it was worse to make money speculating in land than by gambling at cards," and that the Presbyterians who advocated gambling at cards, as being not so bad as land speculation, had won out. I shall not for today enter into the arguments set forth in the debate, but will say that the man that proposed this subject for debate wanted to do either one of two things, either to advocate gambling at cards, or to cash a reflection on all the Real Estate men in this city, and all their customers who are buying either vacant or improved land.

The man who first proposed this subject for debate wanted to use the organizations of the Church to say for him what he was afraid to say for himself, and you will be doing the general public a favor if you will publish the name of the man who goes behind the church organizations to get a slap at the Real Estate business. The Real Estate men in Peterboro are here and are ready to defend their honor every time a coward attacks it.

Yours very truly,
W. C. AUSTIN

A READER BURSTS INTO POETRY

A Questionable Paraphrase Upon the "Psalm of Life."

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—

I am no poet, but "the occasion makes a poet," they say, and in a moment of "inspiration" I have committed the following rhyme. I may say that there is nothing sarcastic in the lines.

A PSALM OF LIFE

(With apologies to Longfellow and compliments to Shortfellow).

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.
In an age when a commission
Is somewhat like to Caesar's wife,
For if not beyond suspicion,
Don't approach them on your life.
When to buy a pail of candies
And hand out a little fudge,
Is to serve the humble people
As Commissioner and Judge.
In an age when little shifty,
Gets as mad as mad can be,
When we dare to have opinions
Independent, new and free.
In an age when by our ballots,
We elect a pledged Mayor,
Who, when sought for with our finger,
Like the flea, is never there!
In a day when men of money
Pay their forty for a crime,
While the man who steals a grey nag
Will go down for fifty-nine.
In a day when in a nimbus
Of pure light officials hide,
From the judgments of the public
And some creditors beside.
Yea, we'er living and we'er dwelling
In a day that's rather rank,
That is why St. Andrew's pastor
Crys out for the missing plank.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

THURSDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-SECOND

Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, who reaches his fifty-second birthday to-day, has the reputation of being the best known Canadian among the people of the United States. This is on account of his frequent appearance on the public platform in the leading American cities as an apostle of the Gospel of Peace. Originally a preacher, he is undeniably one of the foremost orators of the day, though it is said he breaks all the canons of good oratory every time he rises to speak. He goes through an astonishing number of contortions. Sometimes he paces to and fro like a caged lion. Again he doubles up like a jack-knife or crouches like a leopard. Then he thrusts both hands in his pockets and throws back his head. In a moment he has his hands clasped behind his back. Now he is viciously stabbing the air or waving his arms like a windmill. Again he frenzedly rumples his hair or clutches it by handfuls. But in spite of his amazing gesticulations, he holds his audience with the force of his utterances.

THE JOLLY BOYS' CLUB.

Quaint Social Organisation Has Some Outspoken Rules.

Palmer's Green, in the North of London, boasts a club the rules and records of which are as remarkable as the convivial and unconventional spirit which pervades its meetings. It is known as the Royal Bowes Park Whist and Horticultural Club and Tobacco Exchange, Limited, and was started nineteen years ago by four gentlemen, three of whom, the president, treasurer, and secretary, have taken part regularly in its meetings every year since.

The members meet every Thursday for card-playing from the end of September to April, and an accurate record is kept by the secretary of hands played, points scored, and games and rubbers won. Taking an average, it would appear that 21,600 hands have been played by each member, 6,300 games (short whist), and 2,300 rubbers.

At the end of each season the one who has scored the highest number of rubbers gets a highly ornamental cake, while he who has the lowest score receives a spoon, or other suitable token. "We do not play for money," says the secretary, "and each season sees us all anxious to recommence."

The candor of some of the rules is very amusing. They read: "Members must not sneak the hostess' matches, spit on the carpet, leave later than 1 a.m., sneak one another's pouches, offer each other cigars that they cannot smoke themselves, go home intoxicated, swear, or do anything unbecoming a member of this honorable club."

Any member found guilty of breaking any of these rules is fined the sum of $50 after the first offence. The subscription is $26 per annum, or less, and the qualifications for membership "No 'side,' regular attendance, ability to supply good whisky (pure malt), charming wife, smoker, good whist player.

"Sandwiches, coffee, ale, or whisky, and matches only are provided. Cigars are welcome if funds run to it, but are not expected. In order to give each member a chance, only two sandwiches are to be taken at a time. When any member is nearly filled to repletion he need only take one at a time till quite so."

Must Banish Rice.

To stop growing rice in certain districts of Colombo, is said to be the only means of abolishing the malarial scourge. Reports by Dr. Bahr, who with Sir Patrick Manson and Major James have conducted important experiments in the notoriously malarial town of Kurunegalle, have been published by the Government. It was found that mosquitoes breed extensively in paddy fields, and that rice cultivation is practically inseparable from malaria. The only remedy that can hope to be effective is the abandonment of cultivation altogether. In lakes and pools, it has been found feasible to stop the breeding of the malarial mosquito entirely by the introduction of larvivarous fish, but this is ineffective in paddy fields.

He Ran Away to Sea

A Story of a Fire on the Ocean

By LILLIAN WATERMAN

In the olden time, before steam took the romance out of sailing on salt water, there were frequent cases of boys who had been reading stories of life on the ocean running away from home and going to sea. These lads were sometimes the sons of refined parents. Usually such boys came back in a few months or a year or two, but occasionally one, too proud to do so or having nothing to return to, would spend his life in the career in which he had started.

Ben Laraway at sixteen was as hard to keep down in a proper gait as the cover of a boiling pot. He was effervescing with a number of sensations. Two of these seemed to be incompatible. He was in love, and he wished to go to sea. Winifred Carlisle, aged fifteen, was the object of Ben's affection, and, to make matters worse, she considered herself very much in love with Ben. To tell the truth, Ben was especially attractive to the girl. His face was one that artists would love to paint. He had no sense of fear and was the leader of all the mischief practiced in the town where he lived.

Anything serious between a boy of sixteen and a girl of fifteen, except among barbarous nations, being out of the question, Ben's love for Winifred was overtopped by his love for the sea—that is, for the time being. He had the sense to know that marriage was a part of love in all civilized communities and if he wished to possess Winifred he must make a career for himself. He was acquainted with the captain of a vessel, who had a family, and argued that if he went to sea he might also in due time become a captain.

Ben was known to have such strong predilections for a sailor's life that his parents had some fear he might follow the example of certain boys of the time by running away to become a sailor. His father therefore laid his plans for taking him into his business with him.

The idea of a commercial life was especially repulsive to Ben. The evening before he was to enter his father's counting room he had a meeting with Winifred, in which the two went through all those emotions, pledges of undying affection and hopes and fears of lovers old enough seriously to think about such things. However, theirs was a case of real love and one destined to last with both of them, for neither ever loved any other. Ben told Winifred that he was going to run away and go to sea; that he had heard that in a few years a good sailor might become a mate and after awhile captain. Then he would come home and take her as his wife on a long trip.

The morning after this interview, when Ben's mother went to his room to waken him that he might be prompt on the first day of his going to business, she found it empty. The blow had fallen—Ben had decamped. There was a stormy time in the house for awhile; then the family settled down to the belief that the boy had "run away to sea," and his father was not sure but that it would be of service to him. When he had suffered the hard knocks of a cabin boy for awhile he would write home for money on which to return, and, after having the nonsense beaten out of him, he would be satisfied to live an ordinary life.

But Ben Laraway was not that kind of boy at all. He was not fitted for a humdrum life and had a natural predisposition for roving. He loved the immensity of the ocean, the rising and falling of the ship, the pure air uncontaminated with smoke and smells. He took the hard knocks cheerfully till one of the sailors went too far; then Ben fought a battle that excited the admiration of his shipmates. It was not either his strength or his skill that was noticeable, but that throughout the encounter, from start to finish, Ben maintained wonderful coolness. It was a drawn battle, but furnished a warning to others that Ben would not prove a good person to tamper with.

More than this, sailors early recognize the quality which in a commander is more valuable than any other and without which he cannot successfully command. That was Ben's wonderful self control. All saw that when the boy became a man during those crises at sea when a crew looks instinctively for a leader Ben would step to the front.

Laraway served two years "before the mast," then was made third mate of a vessel sailing between New York and China. As an officer he was in his element. When he gave an order, except when in great haste, he spoke as quietly as at other times. He sympathized with the men under him and would do their work when they were unable to do it themselves. Consequently he had great influence with them.

Ben did not write home till he had been at sea long enough to feel sure that he had chosen permanently a sailor's life; then he wrote to his father a letter explaining that he could not under the circumstances have bettered the manner of his leaving home. Had he intimated what he was about to do it would have resulted in a family commotion that would have been unpleasant to all concerned without altering the result. He had chosen a sailor's vocation and would spend his life on the water.

Ben also refrained from writing his little sweetheart till he had made up his mind that he would carry out his intentions in going to sea. This was when he had been afloat a year, and the letter he received in reply gave him the most delicious sensation he had experienced since leaving home.

When Ben had been at sea five years he found himself, at the age of twenty one, first mate of the ship Northern Star, Hollingsworth master, bringing a load of cotton and a large number of passengers from Bombay westward. The captain had contracted a fever while in Bombay and was unable to leave his cabin. Consequently Laraway was in command. One morning the third mate came to him with the news that the cotton was smoldering. The first officer did not turn pale, but he had received the shock of his life. He dare not even report the threatened calamity to the captain. The ship was 500 or 600 miles from any port. Should the knowledge that the cargo was on fire reach the passengers a panic would ensue. Here was a problem calculated to shake the strongest nerve, and one who had but just reached the age of manhood was called upon to meet it.

Laraway went at once to inspect the fire and made up his mind that water poured on it would only produce smoke and steam without having any other effect. The ship was doomed, and that at no distant time. Directing that the hatches be as closely secured as possible that smoke might not escape, the young commander returned to the deck. The morning was sunny and the ocean comparatively calm. A number of the passengers were playing that game peculiarly adapted to a ship's deck, shuffleboard. Laraway sauntered up to the party and stood looking at the game. It was known that he was in command of the vessel—the commander of a ship is always an object of interest to the passengers—and Laraway's overlooking a game of shuffleboard was considered a condescension, especially as he never before had been known to leave his post while on duty. When the game was finished he said:

"I should think you people would get tired of shuffleboard."

"Tired of it!" replied a lady. "Suppose we are; we've nothing else to do."

"How would you like to take a hand at one of our ship's drills?"

"What drill?"

"Well, we might try taking to the boats, in case of collision or any other accident, from a sinking ship."

"I'm in for that," said one, and he was followed by others.

"There's a great advantage in it," said Laraway. "You see, in case of emergency the main difficulty is with the passengers, and by going through the drill, in case anything should happen, you would be prepared for it."

"Good idea!" exclaimed one.

"Splendid!" said another.

"Anything to break the monotony!" remarked a third.

Laraway stood among them explaining just how they were to proceed. He would first give orders for the collection of provisions. They would be ready in half an hour. Meanwhile to carry out the idea properly let each passenger get together such articles from his baggage as would be needed in case he must live for several days in an open boat. This in itself was a very important matter. When all were ready let them come on deck, and he would tell them off into parties to fill the boats.

All went below except a few ladies, who did not seem inclined to join in the drill. Laraway did not urge them to do so, though he told them that it was a practice for the common good. Soon passengers began to come up the companionway carrying various articles, some of them joking each other on what they had selected. A thin film of smoke began to issue from a forward hatch. One of the ladies asked the captain what it meant, and he told her that the men were drying their clothes.

When the boats were well stocked with provisions and water and the crew, who had been coached by the junior officers to keep cool and say nothing, had swung them on their davits, Laraway filled them with passengers one after another. When all were filled he ordered the boats lowered.

"Good gracious, captain!" cried a lady. "You're not going to let us down into the water, are you? Let me get out."

"Stay where you are, madam. The ship is on fire and will soon be ablaze."

Scarcely any one of the passengers believed Laraway to be in earnest. Some tried to get back on to the deck, but were prevented by the crew. One after another the boats were lowered and pushed off. Then all invalids, including the captain and those belonging to the ship, were put in a boat; then the crew and, lastly, Laraway stepped in and joined the fleet below.

An hour after they had taken to the boats there was an explosion, and the vessel burst into flames.

Two days later the refugees were picked up by a passing ship and taken safely into port.

One morning Ben Laraway appeared at his old home. The fame of his exploit had preceded him, and the whole town turned out to do him honor. Winifred Carlisle had grown to be a fine young woman, and the lovers' romantic pledges made on the night before Ben ran away to sea were all kept, even to his taking her as his wife on his first voyage as captain of a ship.

Only One Toast.

In a well-known town in Staffordshire, Eng., it is customary for the principals of the firm to give their oldest hands an annual dinner, and afterwards encourage a little harmony among the company.

It was on one of these occasions that an old chap was pressed hard by his mates for a song.

"Can't sing," was his reply.

Nothing daunted, the party would not pass him over like this, but begged him to propose a toast.

"Give us a toast, then," several urged.

"Ony know one, an' I'd rather I dain't say it now!"

This was enough; for after admitting to the company he knew something, uproarious enthusiasm, etc., prevailed on every side, and the poor Black-countryite, feeling there was no escape out of it, rather reluctantly held up his glass and blurted out:—

The big bee flies up 'igh in the air,
The little bee gathers the 'oney,
The workin' man works 'ard all the week,
And the guv'nor collars the money.

A Metaphor With a History.

To "know a hawk from a hernshaw" is a metaphor with a curious history. It is a comparison drawn from falconry. "Hernshaw" is a corruption of "heronshaw," or, young heron, a bird which was a common prey of the falcons. To know a hawk from a hernshaw is therefore to be able to distinguish the falcon from its prey. A further colloquial corruption crept into the phrase—"to know a hawk from a handsaw," a form used by Hamlet in one place. Possibly the distinction between a hawk and a hernshaw was found not to be strong enough for the purposes of the proverb.—Manchester Guardian.

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN TORE HER CLOTHES

Testifies She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Malone, N. Y.,—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has certainly done me a lot of good. I first heard of it when I was a girl and I always said that if I ever had female trouble I would take it.

"I suffered from organic inflammation and would have spells when I would be in such pain that I would tear my clothes. One day my husband got the neighbors in to see what the matter was but they could not help me. My first thought was for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I sent my husband out for it and took it until I was entirely cured. I am a woman of perfect health and my health and happiness came from Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine. You may rest assured that I do all I can to recommend your wonderful medicine to my friends."—MRS. FRED STONE, Route No. 3, Malone, N. Y.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

ELIZABETH ISLAND.

Its Curious Little Colony of Zoological Total Abstainers.

Recent investigations on the little known and rarely visited Henderson or Elizabeth island have led to the discovery of a complete and curious little colony of zoological total abstainers.

The island, which is uninhabited, is situated about 120 miles northeast of Pitcairn island—itself sufficiently out of the way, but famous as the home of the descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty.

There is no water on it, not even a swamp, and it is only six miles long, yet it harbors quite a menagerie—a kind of rat, a lizard, described as very abundant, and no fewer than four kinds of birds, all peculiar to the island. These are a fruit pigeon, a lorikeet or honey eating parrakeet, a little rail or crake and a reed warbler.

The strange thing about the inmates of this curious little natural aviary of coral rock, surrounded by waves instead of wires, is that two of its inmates are birds, one especially associated with fresh water—the rail and the warbler. These, like the rest, must do without drinking unless the dew can slake their thirst or they have acquired toleration for sea water as a beverage.—Argonaut.

Flight of a Great Nebula.

One of the most striking spectacles revealed by telescopes is that of the great nebula in Orion. In the complexity of its glowing streams, spirals and strangely shaped masses, intercepted by yawning black gaps and sprinkled over with stars arranged in suggestive groups and lines, it has few rivals in the heavens. The impression of astonishment made by the sight of this nebula is heightened by knowledge of its enormous size. The entire solar system would appear as a tiny speck beside it. Yet this tremendous aggregation of nebulous clouds and starry swarms has been proved by the researches of the astronomers to be flying away from the earth and the sun at the rate of eleven miles in every second. But so vast is its distance that 100 years reveal no visual effects of the great nebula's swift retreat.

Not Really Lost.

Bertie's sister, who is five years older than Bertie, is trying to teach him to take care of his books. The other day she could not find "Robinson Crusoe" on the nursery bookshelf.

"Where is it?" she asked. "I haven't seen it for several days. What have you done with it?"

"I know where it is," said Bertie, trying to speak with assurance.

"Well, where?"

"Why, it's only lost a little," he faltered; "kinder in the barn, or round outdoors, some'eres; p'r'aps up garret, or behind the woodpile, I guess!"—Youth's Companion.

A Faulty Statue.

Perhaps the worst equestrian statue in the world is that erected in front of Trinity college, Dublin, to the memory of King William III. Among other faults one of the forelegs of the horse is straight, and the other curved considerably, yet both hoofs meet side by side on the pedestal.—London Spare Moments.

Such Is Life.

A Successful Hiding Place

By JOHN L. LARNED

Talking about hiding things in places no one would suspect, the way to do it is to put them in such plain view that the seeker can look right at them. A good way is to give them to him.

I never felt so much doubt as to my being fitted for detective work as once when I was fooled by an old woman crook whom I knew to be guilty of what I was trying to prove on her. My chief told me one day that a number of banknotes had been stolen from a cashier's drawer, and he wanted me to get on to the thief. I interviewed the cashier, who told me that a certain man had been in the store when he placed the bills in the drawer and saw him do it. The cashier was called to the rear for a few minutes, leaving the man where he was outside the counter. When he returned the man was gone and so were the notes.

Fortunately the cashier could give a pretty accurate description of the bills. They were all fives, all new and all on the same bank. The suspected man was arrested, but nothing was found on him but a little silver change. It was evident that he had got rid of the bills. I nosed around among his haunts for awhile, hoping to learn something. At several stores in the neighborhood I left a description of the bills and asked the proprietors to let me know if any of their customers presented one of them.

Happening in at one of these stores later on I was shown a bill answering a description of those stolen. It had been paid for groceries by an old woman who lived near, she receiving $2 or $3 in change. I gave the grocer another bill for it and took it to the cashier from whom the money had been stolen. He identified it as one of the lost notes.

Investigation showed me that the old woman and the man suspected of stealing the money were known to be cronies. She was a notorious receiver of stolen goods, and there could be no doubt that she was spending the stolen money. Doubtless she had the whole or what was left of it in her possession, for the man who had been arrested for stealing it would not dare carry or pass any of it himself and would not be likely to have more than one confederate in the matter. Added to this, I was told by one of her neighbors that she knew the old woman had the money in her possession.

I preferred not to take the chances of making a slip by getting out a search warrant, so I suddenly appeared at the woman's house, locked the door on the inside and went to work. Beginning in the garret, I found it pretty dark and called on the occupant for a light. She gave me a candle, making no comment on my proceedings whatever, taking the trouble to light it herself. Having finished the garret, ripping up loose boards in the floor and tearing away plastering, I descended to the second story, where I ransacked every nook and cranny. Being an old hand at the business, I looked especially in shoes, in crockery, in stoves—indeed, in any receptacle where one would ordinarily not expect a hiding place because it was in such plain view. I stretched an arm up a chimney and pulled a lot of soot down on me, but no bills. Coming on down to the main floor, I looked in closets, under carpets, in everything hollow. Having finished this floor, I went through the cellar, extending my candle between the joists where they rested on the brick walls and turning over everything it contained. From the peak of the roof to the cellar floor nothing was found.

Going to the main floor, I found the old woman peeling potatoes as unconcernedly as if she were not under the slightest suspicion. Placing the candle on the table, I sat down on a chair to rest and think over what I had better do. I did not think to blow out the candle, which had burned low. Indeed, it had reached some folded paper that had been wrapped around its bottom to keep it steady in the socket, which was too large for it.

"Are you through with the light?" asked the old woman.

"Yes. I confess you've beaten me. I know there are some stolen banknotes in your possession, but I can't find them."

She blew out the candle and resumed her work of peeling potatoes.

"Tell me where the stuff is, mother," I added after some thought, "and I'll get you off."

"Oh, you'd better go over the house again. You might find it next time, and you may do enough damage to make it pay me to collect from you."

She gave me a knowing look when she said this. I knew it meant something, but I was a trifle slow in interpreting it.

"Oh, yes," I said presently. "You should be paid for the damage I've done. How would one of the bills suit you?"

"It's worth two of 'em."

"All right. Tell me where you've got the bills hidden and I'll give you $10 for the damage and no prosecution."

"No questions asked?"

I knew the loser of the money wished to get all of it that remained unspent, so I agreed that she needn't tell from whom she received the swag, whereupon she pointed to the candle she had given me and said:

"They're there."

They were wrapped around it.

CHAIN LETTERS.

Their Awful Possibilities From a Mathematical Standpoint.

About a score of years ago, a man named Griffin, mayor of a small town in New South Wales, Australia, started a chain letter in the name of his daughter, with the idea of endowing a hospital with the proceeds. The plan was to construct a 180 link chain by Miss Griffin writing to three of her friends and asking them to send her ten used postage stamps, and also asking them each to write to three of their friends to do the same.

The idea was eventually to sell the canceled stamps received to a stamp dealer for resale to collectors and to use the money thus gained for the hospital. The first three recipients numbered their letters No. 1, the second nine numbered theirs No. 2, the third twenty-seven numbered theirs No. 3 and so on. With the one hundred and eightieth multiple the chain was automatically to cease.

But the originator evidently went into the matter without wholly considering the results of this arithmetical progression. As the scheme went into effect it gradually came to the notice of people all over the world. In 1905 an article in The London Spectator, by some one who had figured up the possibilities, claimed to show that there would not be enough writing paper in the world to supply the letters by the time the one hundred and eightieth series was reached. It figured that up to the twentieth link the number of letters would amount to over 5,000,000,000 and that there would not be enough stamps in the world to complete the thirtieth link.

However, the Griffins received over 2,000,000 letters. Until 1902, the letters were opened by Miss Griffin, her father and his employes, and the contents sold to dealers and the proceeds turned over to the St. George's Cottage hospital, near Sydney, New South Wales. At last the letters became too numerous for them to handle. The postoffice was overburdened, in spite of many additional clerks just to handle this mail. Sixty-five mail bags full of letters had to be stored in a basement unopened, although the postoffice department was crippled for want of mail bags. This lot was sold just as it came, unopened, to a stamp dealer for about $275, and later sold by him in quantities of 100 and 1,000 letters to collectors in Australia and the United States.

VITALITY REGAINED KIDNEYS CURED

Health Restored By "Fruit-a-tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th. 1913.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My kidneys and liver were not doing their work, and I became all run-down. I felt the need of some good remedy, and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them.

Their effect, I found more than satisfactory. Their action was mild and the results all that could have been expected.

My liver and kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old time vitality. To-day, I am as well as ever, the best health I have ever enjoyed, and I unhesitatingly give you this testimonial for publication if you wish"

B. A. KELLY.

In hundreds of letters received by the Fruit-a-tives Company, the same expression is used "Fruit-a-tives is the best kidney remedy in the world". At any rate, these tablets have proved the best to the hundreds of men and women who have been cured by taking them. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. THE DRESS OF A BUSINESS LETTER.

To judge quickly, to discriminate at a glance between good things, and bad, is what most men who receive business letters have been trained to do. It is not an exaggeration to claim that the success of many business letters often depends on the paper.—By HARRISON COURTNEY in "System."

QUESTION OF NEW BUILDINGS

but he had not done so. He went to see him previous to the exhibition but Mr. Conway refused to act in any capacity whatsoever. When the day of the exhibition arrived they found it necessary to engage Mr. F. Brownscombe at a salary of $25 to collect the money. This closed the discussion for the time being, the financial statement being accepted.

A motion was carried to the effect that the auditor's report and statement be published in the local press.

Field Crop.

The question of dispensing with the stallion and bull show again this year was then raised and after considerable discussion, all going to show that it was not to any advantage financially, it was decided not to hold it. It was, however, resolved that a field crop competition be held, oats to be the only exhibit.

As in former years the Board will ask the Department of Agriculture to supply the judges for the 1914 fall fair. Suggestions were offered for the re-arrangement of the prize list and they will be acted upon at the next meeting.

Mr. R. M. Glover brought up the question of grounds and erecting a new main building. Mr. Neil spoke a few words, emphasizing the fact that something should be done and that quickly. He wished to see a committee appointed to go into the matter in every detail arriving at the total cost and amount of work accomplished and then bring the matter before the City Council. "Something must be done," Mr. Neil remarked, "for Peterborough is going to be the best city east of Toronto." Mr. Gillespie heartily endorsed the ideas of Mr. Neil and thought that the City Council should be asked to submit a by-law to the people for the purchasing of the grounds and then new and suitable buildings could be erected. Some time ago the council started to work on this question but it fell through. Something along this line will be done immediately by the new executive.

The Officers.

The meeting then went to the election of officers. Mr. J. H. Garbutt was unanimously elected president again. Mr. Garbutt spoke a few words thanking the members for the honor and also for the good will with which he was treated by the members of the Board. The unison with which they worked during the past three years, he greatly appreciated.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie was elected vice-president and Mr. R. Denne second vice-president. The election of the Board of Directors gave rise to considerable discussion. Mr. W. A. Conway stated that he wished to resign and when asked by one of the members why this step was taken he replied stating that things had not ran very smoothly among the committees and he did not think he had been given a fair deal. Mr. Turner, Mr. Glover and himself were on the ground committee and because Mr. Turner resigned another committee was formed and he was left off. This he did not think was treating one another like gentlemen. He hoped to see the committee work in harmony this year and that the exhibition would be better and bigger than ever.

Mr. J. J. Turner who resigned some time ago rose to state the reason why he did so. He was on the grounds committee and one day went down to the exhibition grounds and found horses practising there for which he had not been paid. He immediately took steps to have this stopped unless they paid $10.00. This the directors did not think right and they encroached upon his work and he resigned. He would not stand having men do his work when he was quite able to do it himself.

Board of Directors.

Mr. Conway again spoke stating that he wished all the old trouble be buried and harmony prevail. The meeting then decided to adopt his plan and after raising the number of directors from 16 to 18 persuaded Messrs. Turner and Conway to become members. The following is the complete list:

Messrs. Thomas Brown, T. O. Gibbs, J. A. Storey, T. Cruikshanks, R. M. Glover, T. E. Moore, S. Millburn, R. Neil, E. Duffus, J. O. Ball, J. Baptie, W. J. Cox, F. Wise, T. H. Hooper, W. A. Conway, J. J. Turner, H. Kitney and W. J. Oke.

Mr. S. Deyell was made an honorary member of the Board. Messrs. E. M. Elliott and R. Fair were appointed auditors and T. Moore and Wm. Collins as delegates to the annual convention of Fairs.

The next question was that of appointing the Secretary-Treasurer. Several of the members wished to see this office divided and one man act in the capacity of secretary and the other as treasurer. After much discussion during which President Garbutt had to call the meeting to order several times it was put to a vote and the result was that the one man will serve in both capacities. Mr. F. J. A. Hall was unanimously re-elected.

The Gun Club.

Mr. T. Brown asked the Board not to rent the grounds to the Gun Club this year because they were a nuisance especially in time of sickness. The Board requested that Mr. Brown have a petition signed by residents of that district before any action be taken.

Ploughmen's Club.

The last item which President Garbutt brought before the meeting was the forming of a local branch of the Ontario Ploughmen's Association. The matter was left over till the next meeting. The object of the Ploughmen's Association is to advance the interests of Agriculture:

(a) By encouraging its members to give greater attention to the cultivation of the soil.

(b) By establishing branch Associations throughout the Province.

(c) By disseminating useful information with regard to the fertilization and cultivation of the soil.

(d) By interesting farmer's sons to become first-class plowmen thereby largely increasing the yield and quality of the field crops of Ontario.

(e) By encouraging annual Provincial, County and Township matches.

(f) By awarding premiums at such competitions.

(g) By all such other means as may be desirable.

Any person may become a member of the Association by the payment of one dollar in advance and a single payment of ten dollars shall constitute a member for life.

MEAFORD GOES DRY

Hon. W. J. Hanna Issues Order Closing Bars

TORONTO, Jan. 22.—By an order of Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, the sale of liquor in the three hotels in Meaford, Ont., must be discontinued from now until April 30 next, when the license year ends and local option will be in force.

This situation has arisen out of the local option contest in Meaford in 1913, when the bylaw was defeated by a fraction of one vote. An appeal was taken before Mr. Justice Kelly, who set the whole matter aside in a consent judgment under which the licenses should continue to be in force, and a reference taken to the ratepayers at the municipal elections this year. The vote was held two weeks ago, and resulted 484 to 316 against local option.

THE WORLD'S OLDEST MASON

Archibald Cooper, of Dunnville, a Member for 76 Years.

DUNNVILLE, Jan. 22.—Archibald Couper, known as the oldest brother in Masonry in the world, is dead here in his 93rd year.

Mr. Couper was initiated in Royal Arch Lodge No. 153 in Pollockshaws, Renfrewshire, Scotland, in 1838, having thus been a member of the order for 76 years. At the time of his death he was an honorary member of that lodge.

In a letter to Mr. Couper from Mr. John A. Sinclair, of Glasgow, dated July 12, 1911, the statement was made that investigation showed that there was no doubt that Mr. Couper was the oldest Mason in the world.

Since coming to Canada Mr. Couper has been a member of Amity Lodge No. 32.

BOOKIES GOT IT ALL.

Young Man Goes To Prison for Embezzling $50,000.

TORONTO, Jan. 22.—Five years in Kingston Penitentiary was the sentence meted out by Judge Winchester in the County Criminal Court to Robert A. McKay, who had pleaded guilty to stealing $50,000 from the Cowan Confectionery Co., by whom he had been employed as secretary-treasurer. McKay had been a constant patron of bookmakers about town and had been fooled by them to the tune of $50,000.

In asking that the mercy of the court be shown to the prisoner, his lawyer, H. H. Dewart, K.C., said that every cent of the money had gone to bookmakers in Toronto and Detroit. When he was unable to pick the winners he had to pay, but when fortune smiled on him, in some cases the bookie left town without paying up.

The prisoner had been the dupe of the bookmakers. He had not one cent of the $50,000, and, while the lawyer would not minimize the offence, he would ask that all possible consideration be shown.

Rescued From Drowning.

BRANTFORD, Jan. 22.—Only the heroism of Kenneth Uttrich, 13 years old, residing on Waterloo street, saved Alpha Johnston, 17, from drowning in the Grand river while they were skating. The ice was weak and broke under Johnston's weight. Uttrich lay on the ice, and, extending his hockey stick to Johnston, started to pull him out. He had succeeded in getting him to the top of the ice ice when it again broke. Kenneth then lay flat on the ice, and, by working carefully, finally landed his companion safely.

Lord Strathcona.

LEADERS PAY TRIBUTE TO LORD STRATHCONA

Premier Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Moving and Seconding Motion to Adjourn Express Country's Sorrow at Loss.

OTTAWA, Jan. 22.—The House of Commons was in session yesterday afternoon only long enough to bear the formal announcement of Lord Strathcona's death and to listen to the eloquent panegyrics upon the great Canadian, delivered by the Prime Minister and Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. Borden spoke in part as follows:

"It is fitting, I am sure all the members of both sides in this House will agree, that we should pay a tribute to the memory of the great Canadian who passed away yesterday. I speak of Lord Strathcona as a Canadian, because, although born across the sea, his life work was almost altogether carried on in this country. I do not know of any man who was inspired by a higher conception of duty than was Lord Strathcona.

"I consider that it would be a fitting tribute that this House should stand adjourned until to-morrow, and I shall move, seconded by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that the House do so, standing adjourned.

"But before doing so I should like to read to the House a message which has been received by His Royal Highness, the Governor-General, from the Secretary of State for the Colonies (Rt. Hon. Lewis Harcourt). It states: 'I desire on the part of His Majesty's Government to convey through Your Royal Highness to the Government and the people of Canada, an expression of deep sympathy in the loss the Dominion has sustained by the death of Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner for Canada in London for the past 17 years, a sympathy shared by his many friends in the United Kingdom and throughout the Empire. His name has been for many years a household word among us, embodying to all the thought of Canada and her marvelous progress as well as of his own notable career, distinguished by large public usefulness and magnificent liberality, and his memory is assured of an honored and abiding place in the annals of the Dominion to which he devoted his faithful services to the end.'

"In conclusion I am sure that I may, on behalf of Canada, and all members of the House and the people of this country, convey to his daughter and to all the members of his family, the assurance of our deepest sympathy."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in seconding the motion to adjourn, said in part:

"Since Sir John Macdonald's time I do not know that there has been any Canadian, who, on departing this life, has left behind him such a trail of sorrow as Lord Strathcona. He is mourned by His Majesty, whose personal friend he was, by the authorities of commerce and of finance in the commercial and financial metropolis of the world, by the poor of London, by the people of Scotland, the land of his birth, with whom he never completely severed his connection, and in Canada, by all classes of the community. This universal sorrow is a tribute only bestowed upon men of strong personality and to this class he undoubtedly belonged."

"He came to Canada when he was only 18 years of age, more than 75 years ago. At that time all his possessions were the sound, practical education of a Scottish lad, and more than the full share of the characteristics of his race, keen business courage, caution and firmness never loud and assertive, never failing to stand as strong as adamant against all reverses, and never spoiled even by the most phenomenal success. He came as a simple junior clerk to the Hudson Bay Company, and from that station he rose step by step until he became, after the death of Sir George Simpson, in 1860, at first in fact, and afterwards both in fact and name, the governor of that historic company, a position which he held to the last day of his life."

A WIZARD IN MEMORY.

Scott Could Retain In His Mind Anything He Heard Once.

To his rare good fellowship and his powers of endurance Scott added one other quality, without which his vigorous search for literary material might have been of little use—namely, a most extraordinary memory, which enabled him to retain what he heard and use it many years afterward. James Hogg, the eccentric Ettrick Shepherd, gives a fine instance of this power. One night Scott, with his friends Hogg and Skene, was out on a fishing expedition.

"While we three sat down on the brink of a river," says Hogg, "Scott desired me to sing them my ballad of 'Gilman's Clough.' Now be it remembered that this ballad had never been printed. I had merely composed it by rote and on finishing it three years before had sung it over once to Sir Walter. I began it at his request, but at the eighth or ninth stanza I stuck in it and could not get on with another verse, on which he began it again and recited it every word from beginning to end.

"It being a very long ballad, consisting of eighty-eight stanzas. I testified my astonishment, knowing that he had never heard it but once and even then did not appear to be paying particular attention. He said he had been out with a pleasure party as far as the opening of the Firth of Forth and to amuse the company he had recited that ballad and one of Southey's ('The Abbot of Aberbrothok'), both of which ballads he had heard only once from their respective authors, and he believed he recited them both without misplacing a word."—From Charles S. Olcott's "The Country of Sir Walter Scott."

IS IMPRESSED WITH WINNIPEG

But Life There is Too Speedy For Relief Officer Miller.

Immigration Agent Finch Miller returned this morning from Winnipeg where he has been for the past few weeks in connection with the claim for damages for the death of his son who was electrocuted a few months ago. Mr. Miller arranged through his counsel, Mr. R. M. Denistoun, formerly of this city, to have the case heard on the 9th of next month.

"What is your impression of Winnipeg?" Mr. Miller was asked.

"Well, it is a fine city, but too fast for me," said Mr. Miller.

He remarked that he had met scores of old local boys who were all doing well. Mr. M. McWilliams, formerly of Peterboro, is making rapid headway and in a few years will be one of the leading counsels of the city. In speaking of Mr. Denistoun, Mr. Miller is of the opinion according to conversation in Winnipeg, that he has one of the largest practices in the city. The firm employ over forty stenographers.

Mr. Ernie Brownscombe, another local boy, is also doing remarkably well. Mr. Miller expressed considerable admiration for the new C. N. R. station which is noted for its grandeur and accommodations.

"Say, you talk about excitement, why they had extras out on the street every hour in the day," responded Mr. Miller to the reporter's enquiry in regard to the escape of John Krafchenkoe, the murderer has been a senation throughout the Dominion.

Mr. Miller expressed himself as being rather surprised at the weather which was such as to warrant him doing without a heavy coat. It was only 23 below, the coldest they have had this year. Very little snow is in evidence until one gets below Muskoka.

On the whole, Mr. Miller was most favorably impressed with Winnipeg and the great rush and bustle there. He also spoke of the great number of the unemployed walking the streets.

Mr. Miller expressed great pleasure in the manner in which the Relief work was carried on during his absence by Adjutant McElheney.

PIDGIN ENGLISH.

Language Used in Shops and Homes in Chinese Ports.

In Shanghai in all shops one finds Chinese familiar with English, but often using much pidgin English. "Pidgin" is supposed to be derived from several changes on the word "business," which was first shortened to "busin," then through the form of "pisbin" and finally became "pidgin." Pidgin English is the language used in trade and households in the ports of China, where the Chinese and foreigners deal with one another. It is similar in its origin to the mixture of languages known as Lingua-Franca in the Levant and in other parts of the Mediterranean. It is a direct translation of Chinese into English and strictly idiomatic. For instance, they say, "That book, pay my," instead of "Give me the book."

The Chinese tailors speak fluently in this odd English. An American lady went to a Chinese tailor in Shanghai to see him regarding putting feather interlining in a muff. The tailor seemed a trifle dazed as to what she wanted and said, "B'long allo same chicken fur?" He wanted to prove his intention of treating his customer right and told her, "My b'long allo same you, you b'long allo same my—b'long my velly good fiend," and later, wishing to ask after one of the lady's daughters, remarked, "Miss A., have catchee master?" When this one said China had not come out for woman's suffrage.—Amy W. Hotchkiss in National Magazine.

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy No. 69879, for $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

PARTICIPATING RESULTS.		NON-PAR RESULTS.
$2637.75	Total cash 1st Dec. last	$2000.00
1895.00	Total prems. paid	1725.00

Almost 40 p.c.	Percentage returned over prem paid	almost 16 p.c.

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. If so, call at or 'phone the Sun Life Office, 402 Water Street.

We would further assure him that we desire to work in harmony with him to secure its completion on the site bought for it as early a date as possible. We further desire to bring to his attention the fact that it will be an absolute necessity in the near future that Lakefield shall obtain power from some source for the industries she already has, and for the operation of her electric lighting plant as well as for further development and although it is our wish to develop such power through the agency of the Hydro Electric Commission. We also feel assured that the naturally the cheapest and most advantageous source from whence Lakefield may obtain power would be by development of the dam in the centre of our village, on the power site now nominally held under lease by the Dickson Co., from the Dominion Government. And as we realize that a new dam must soon be built at this point for the operation and safety of the Trent Canal. We desire to obtain his cooperation to bring to this matter to the attention of the Dominion Government with a view to having such government expropriate the Dickson Co.'s interest in this site, so that power may be developed here for the benefit of the people at as early a date as possible, and that this resolution be signed by Reeve and Clerk and forwarded to Mr. Sexsmith, M.P.—Carried.

MARY BAKER EDDY

Christian Science Monitor.

Progress was the keynote of the address of Gov. Samuel D. Felker of New Hampshire at the dinner and guest night of the Daughters of New Hampshire Club at the Hotel Vendome, Boston, last night.

Speaking especially of the famous New Hampshire women, he said that no state had boasted women of higher intelligence, greater womanliness, or more genius. He said that as Daniel Webster was the man of New Hampshire, so Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, was first among the women of the Granite state.

"She has left the impress of her work not only on New England but on the entire world," he said, "and we are proud of her."

China, Japan and Canada are said to be the only civilized countries having no bankruptcy.

REID GIVES STATEMENT ON KRAFCHENKO ESCAPE

He Says He Gave the Rope, Key and Revolver to Krafchenko While Constable Flower's Back Was Turned—Plans for Delivery Were All Made In Lawyer Hagel's Office He Declares

WINNIPEG, Jan. 22. — Constable Reid, formerly of Hamilton, who was arrested a few days ago in connection with the escape of John Krafchenko, the Plum Coulee bank robber, appeared before the royal commission at his own request and made his statement voluntarily.

At yesterday morning's session of the commission, Constable Flower told a straightforward story of his actions at the time of the escape. Failure of Reid to back him up was his justification in not making a fight.

Reid's story was interpolated into Flower's evidence, the older constable having requested a hearing. Reid had formerly withstood a seven-hour grueiling before the commission, which seemingly had justified him, but yesterday he completely reversed his sworn statements. He was assured beforehand that his new statement would not be used in evidence against him.

In the witness box, Reid told how he personally had given the rope, key and revolver to Krafchenko two days before the escape while Flower's back was turned. The loosened bars in the window he said had been tampered with while Ryan, the day guard, was asleep in the cell.

The constable stated further that all arrangements for the escape were made in the office of Percy Hagel, Krafchenko's counsel, where Krafchenko sent him to see Hagel. He said he did not know what had induced him (Reid) to help Krafchenko.

Constable Buxton had given the gun to Reid in Hagel's office and the number had been filed off in Hagel's presence. Hagel had told him that Westlake, who was to hide Krafchenko after his escape, could be trusted to do so without squealing. Hagel, he said, had gone to Plum Coulee to get $400 to handle the case. He did not know whether he got it or not.

LOSS IN ANIMALS OF ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND

Rigid Investigation to be Made Into Disaster at Ottawa

OTTAWA, Jan. 22.—Three persons were killed, half a dozen seriously injured and property loss on the building and prize live stock to the amount of about $100,000 caused by an explosion of the heating plant at Howick Pavilion yesterday morning, where the Eastern Ontario Live Stock Show is being held.

The dead are:—

Nap St. Denis, of Hull, aged 40, employed as hog killer at the Fat Stock Show. Leaves wife and family.

Jos. Gosgrove, of Buckingham, aged 42, driver for Dr. Lauren of that town.

John W. Macdonald, 109 Kent street, Ottawa, a butcher.

The injured are:—

Stewart Ross, 103 Catherine street, Ottawa, injured in head and back.

J. A. James, Arlington avenue, Ottawa, internal injuries.

A. G. McCallum, Clarey avenue, Ottawa, badly shaken up.

J. Pouts, Bank street, Ottawa, severely bruised and shaken up.

Howick Pavilion proper is a huge structure of cement and steel, with an addition about 150 feet square at its eastern end, partly of wooden construction. It was in this addition that the fat stock show was being held, and here the explosion occurred.

This part of the structure is completely demolished at one corner, and the whole interior is a mass of wreckage. Flames which broke out shortly after the explosion were quickly subdued.

Examination of the wrecked boiled by experts leads to the belief that it was empty and practically red hot when the explosion was caused by an inrush of cold water. The engineers in charge deny that such was the case, claiming the boiler was half full of water, and carried only 20 pounds of steam. A rigid investigation has been ordered.

Fortunately, the disaster happened before the forenoon crowds began to flock to the show, else the loss of life would have been fearful. Live stock attendants were the only persons in the building at the time.

About twenty-five horses, valued at approximately $65,000, were killed, and many others injured. They ranged in value from $300 to $5,000. The heaviest loser was George Pepper of Toronto, who lost eight horses, valued at about $30,000. These were all well-known show animals, including Sarah Moore, winner of the international contest for saddle horses in New York last year; Calgary Lass, who took second prize in the high jumping events Tuesday; Outpost, Creighton, Lord Minto, and Billie.

Other losers were: T. W. Rodden of Montreal, five horses, valued at about $17,000, including Blue Mouse, winner of the first prize in the champion saddle class at the New York Live Stock Show a few weeks ago.

Col. Allison, of Morrisburg, loses a hackney stallion, valued at $5,000; R. Ness & Son, of Howick, Que., four stallions, valued at about $10,000; D. J. Greig, of Brysonville, Que., two horses, valued at $400 each; William Nessey, of Howick, Que., stallion, valued at $500; McDougall Bros., Armstown, Que., one Clydesdale filly, worth $200.

C. McLean, of Pointe Claire, Que., a well-known breeder, had eight horses, valued at $20,000, in the building, but they escaped without a scratch. L. J. C. Bull, of Brampton, was another exhibitor. He had four horses, valued at about $10,000, but all escaped.

So powerful was the force of the explosion that two of Mr. Pepper's horse were driven out through the roof and one other right into the main body of Howick Pavilion. In the basement and boiler room were housed the pigs and sheep, and many of these were crushed or suffocated to sudden death.

The experiences of Stephen Giles, of Brampton, employed by L. J. C. Bull, a horse exhibitor, was perhaps the most remarkable of all. He was sleeping in a horse pen right over the boiler house when the explosion happened, and he was hurled with a pile of steel and timbers into the basement, yet he was dragged out by the firemen half an hour later without being hurt in the slightest degree.

The third victim of the disaster has been identified as John W. MacDonald, 109 Kent street, Ottawa, a butcher.

Building Supt. Devitt and Engineers Corbett and Angel, who were in charge of the boilers, were taken into custody by the police yesterday afternoon, and will be held pending the result of the investigation.

Charged With Fox Stealing.

GODERICH, Jan. 22. — George Rose and William Herima of the Township of Grey, were sent up for trial yesterday by Magistrate Treky of Brussels. They were charged with stealing three foxes from the fox farm operated by Geo. McDonald of the same township.

PREMIER STILL RESTLESS.

Yesterday's Bulletin Reported Fair Condition However.

TORONTO, Jan. 22.—Sir James Whitney's condition yesterday showed a continuation of the restlessness that has been with him since he returned to Toronto.

The bulletin issued at 10 o'clock last night at the General Hospital read as follows:

"Sir James Whitney was restless during the afternoon, but he is asleep now. His general condition is fair.

(Signed) "Alexander McPhedran,
"R. R. Pyne."

Following an examination by Dr. McPhedran and Dr. C. K. Clarke, at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, Dr. McPhedran stated that although the Prime Minister had put in a very restless night, be believed he was much better than he has been since he was brought home from New York.

Practically all the time the patient is delirious, not altogether unconscious, but given to more or less wandering. Dr. McPhedran does not think Sir James appreciates the fact that he is back in Toronto.

DETROIT HAS RECORD.

DETROIT, Jan. 22.—The district of the United States court of which Detroit is headquarters has had more cases and more convictions under the Mann or so-called White Slave Act than any other district in the country, according to a report received from the Department of Justice yesterday. Since the passing of the act June 25, 1910, up to Oct. 1, 1913, sixty white slave cases were tried in Detroit, and in each a conviction was obtained by the Government.

FUNERAL ON MONDAY.

Arrangements Completed For Interment of Lord Strathcona.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—The late Lord Strathcona's funeral will be at Highgate on Monday. The suggestion of interment in St. Paul's Cathedral has been unofficially brought to the notice of the family. It is understood that their wishes are that in deference to the known desires of Lord Strathcona to be buried with his wife in Highgate Cemetery the suggestion of interment elsewhere may not be pressed.

Austen Chamberlain, speaking at Southampton, referred to the loss which every son of Empire will feel in the death of Lord Strathcona. He was a splendid illustration of the opportunities which the British Empire offers her sons.

Killed by Falling Derrick.

COBALT, Jan. 22.—W. E. James, 40, was instantly killed here by a falling derrick striking him on the head. James was the foreman employed by the Cobalt Lake Mining Co. to superintend the work of deepening the rock cut, through which the water from the lake is to flow when the draining is commenced. The accident was caused by one of the guy ropes giving away. Death was instantaneous. James was a native of Newfoundland. He leaves a wife, who is at present on a visit to Nova Scotia.

Seventeen of the heroes lost their lives, and to the dependents of thirteen of these pensions aggregating $7,680 were granted, and to the dependents of the other four who sacrificed themselves, sums totalling $3,000, to be applied, subject to the approval of the commission, to the liquidation of indebtedness or to meet other expenses.

AGED COUPLE ASPHYXIATED

Gas Made Escape From Leaky Tube.

TORONTO, Jan. 22.—Forcing an entrance to a room at 10 Manning avenue, at the request of the landlord, John Stephens, Constable Jones and acting Detective Holmes last evening found an aged couple, Mr. and Mrs. John Richards, dead from the effects of illuminating gas.

The officers found Richards sitting by the side of a table with an unfinished cup of tea at his elbow and his wife lying on the bed with her arms crossed. Both were fully dressed. The room was filled with gas which was escaping from a leaky tube.

The couple, both of whom were nearly seventy years of age, have occupied a room on the second floor of the house since November, and their habits were so quiet that the other families in the house learned very little of their past. Mr. Richards and his wife left their room during the morning for a short walk and were last seen yesterday when they returned from their usual stroll.

To End Cheese Frauds.

OTTAWA, Jan. 22.—An important bill to eliminate the possibility of fraud in connection with the weighing of cheese and butter at the port of Montreal will be introduced shortly by Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture.

For many years there have been loud complaints by farmers, who charge that they have not received fair weight. According to the terms of the proposed bill, a Government inspector will be appointed, whose duty will be to adjudicate cases in dispute. Remedies will be applied to other unsatisfactory conditions of the cheese exchange in Montreal.

Surrendered to Reporters.

MAYVILLE, N.Y., Jan. 22. — Edward Beardsley, Chautauqua County outlaw, who for over a week defied the efforts of Sheriff Anderson to arrest him, gave himself up to a party of newspapermen early yesterday, accompanied them to an hotel in this village and was later locked up in jail. Sheriff Anderson and his posse maintained their guard five hours after the capture.

Stirring Tribute To Strathcona.

OTTAWA, Jan. 22.—The Duke of Connaught has sent the following cable to Lady Strathcona, Lord Strathcona's daughter:

"Please accept expressions of very deep sympathy from the Duchess of Connaught and myself. Lord Strathcona's lofty ideals and splendid patriotism, as well as his distinguished services as High Commissioner, have long been a source of pride and stimulus in his native country. Among Lord Strathcona's many good qualities, his truly magnificent generosity was probably the most outstanding, and his memory will ever be kept green in the Dominion as the generous man of Canada."

JUDGE HOKE SITS.

Sandy Bend Arbiter Expounds Points of Law.

SAM WHITE IN TROUBLE.

And All Because His Wife Was Stolen by "One Legged Pete"—Lawyers in Difficulties For Taking Up Court's Time Uselessly.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

"THIS yere court bein' a court of law and now open fur bizness," said Judge Hoke of Sandy Bend, as he looked around on the crowd. "I will purceed to cut matters short and save the county of Devil's Elbow $50 in cash by statin' the case. Over thar on my right sits that blamed kyote known as Sam White. He's the complainant in this case, and he's tryin' his durndest to look like an abused man. Over thar on my left sits One Legged Pete, who's half greaser and half American, and one of the meanest critters to be found fur a hundred miles around. Neither one of 'em is wuth plantin' over six inches deep, and arter the trial this court hopes to see the pair run outer town on gineral principles.

"This yere court, as is known to most of ye, owns the Red Dog saloon across the creek. It ar' needless to add that drinks, poker and various other things ar' dispensed over thar fur cash, and the reputashun of Red Dog ar' second to none in this woolly west. Last night was a busy time at the Red Dog. This court had to help wait on the bar, chuck three men out of doors and pour another, and when midnight come he went to bed tired out. He had just got to sleep when a critter gallops up on a bronco and pounds on the door and yells that he wants jestice.

THE WOMAN WENT AWAY WILLINGLY.

"'Who is it?' sez I.

"'Sam White,' sez he.

"'What's the hullabaloo?'

"'One Legged Pete has stole my wife.'

"'Waal, go'n steal some other critter's wife.'

"'But I want jestice.'

He Wanted Justice.

"Yes, durn his hide, he wanted jestice, and he wouldn't be satisfied till I got up and agreed to hev One Legged Pete arrested. He was arrested this mornin', and thar be is. I've talked with him, and I've talked with the woman, and I've also had my nose in the statoots fur an hour or more. Now, then, fustly, as the woman went away willin'ly with the prisoner he didn't steal her; secondly, under the statoots of this territory a woman hain't property and can't be stole; thirdly, any critter hevin' sich a humly wife as she ar' orter be willin' to pay $50 to hev her stole; fourth, Sam White was right thar when his wife jumped on the hoss behind Pete and rode away. He had a rifle beside him, and he's a good shot. He could hev plunked the both of 'em and the hoss to boot, but did he do it? No, siree. He sot right thar and seen 'em go, and then he mounts his knockkneed ole broncho and rides 'leven miles to pound on the back door of the Red Dog saloon and yell fur jestice!"

"Your honor," said Sam's lawyer, "my client ar' a peaceful, lawabidin'"—

"Shet up!" thundered the judge. "We know Sam White from top to toe, and the court don't want any of yer gab in this case! Has the prisoner's lawyer got any words to shoot off?"

"We have nuthin' to say," replied the counsel.

"Which ar' jest as well for you, Tom Thatcher!" growled the judge. "If you'd said ten words in favor of the prisoner I'd of sentenced him to be hung. Pete, ye blamed ole reptile, what made ye steal that woman?"

"She wanted to be stole."

Why He Held Back.

"Waal, ye've got her and now keep her and never do it ag'in. Sam White, why didn't ye shoot the smoke colored cuss when he come fur yer wife?"

"I left him to the law."

"Oh, ye did! Well, mebbe it's jest as well, as the law is big 'nuff and broad 'nuff to take keer of both of ye. When I was elected jestice of the peace in and fur the county of Devil's Elbow it was ginerally understood that everybody could hev law and jestice by the shovelful. Ye had the right to pop at Pete, but no right to wake this court up. Ye ar' therefore fined $25 and costs, which will be about as much more. Ye holle red fur jestice and hev got it, and if the boys wasn't goin' to run you outer town I'd double the fine. Pete, how much money ye got?"

"About $50."

"Then I'll gin ye a dose o' jestice at the same time. The verdict is that ye pay a fine of $15 fur bein' the cause of this yere row, and as court adjourns we'll go over to my saloon and ye kin spend $10 or $15 more treatin' the crowd. Somebody hit that Chinaman asleep agin the wall fur contempt of court in not keepin' awake, and court will then adjourn and rush bizness across the creek.

The Next Case Called.

"This other case before us kin be disposed of without a joory and without any pertickler fussin' around. Joe Taylor rides into Hill City on a hoss. He gits off and goes into a saloon without hitchin' that hoss, bein' in a powerful hurry to git outside of a drink of whisky. He sez he hitched the hoss to a post in front of the saloon, but as thar is no post thar it kin be taken fur granted that Joe Taylor is a liar."

"Your honor," said Joe's lawyer as he arose, "I must protest against sich talk as comin' from"—

"Sot down, Jim Davis, or I'll fine ye $100!" shouted the judge, and when the protester had dropped out of sight he resumed:

"That hoss, bein' onhitched, wanders away and finally brings up at the Lame Dog saloon and puts his head in at a winder. Hank Harper ar' in the saloon, mo' or less drunk, and mo' or less expectin' to be shot at from that very winder. When he sees that hoss' head he takes it fur the face of Pete Williams and pops away, and though he ain't much of a shot, as we all know, he kills the hoss. Now comes Joe Taylor and demands $75 fur his critter, which would hev bin dear at $40, and as Hank won't pay, not bevin' intended to kill the hoss, Joe brings suit fur value. That ar's the case, and what ar' we goin' to do about it?"

Interruption by Counsel.

"Your honor, I wish to say"— began both lawyers in chorus, but his honor rapped on the table and shouted:

"Shet up! This court takes no back talk from lawyers. What's the use of palaverin' over a plain case? The idea hain't to grind out bushels o' law, but quarts o' jestice. The verdict of this court ar' to the effeck that Joe Taylor has no case agin Hank Harper.

"Joe Taylor hain't to blame fur ridin' into town on a hoss, nor fur wantin' a drink so plumb bad that he leaves that hoss to take keer of hisself. The hoss ain't to blame fur wanderin' around. Hank Harper ain't to blame fur bein' half drunk and 'spectin' to be shot at.

"It was all right all around, 'ceptin' that these two pesky lawyers got up a case and took up the valuable time o' this court, and in consequence each o' 'em ar' fined $10 and costs, and if they patronize any other saloon but mine doorin' the rest o' the week I'll hev them throwd over the bar and hustled out o' town."

Beauty and The Beast

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

A scientist has made the statement that, while beauty in women is highly prized by men, beauty in men is not prized by women. Whether or no this is true, the fact remains that a great many very pretty women have married painfully ugly men. It does seem to be the case that women are captured by men in an entirely different way from what men are captured by women. Perhaps if the subject were followed out scientifically it would be found in the fact that the man is snared by weakness, while the woman is snared by strength.

Rosalind Thurber was a very pretty country girl at the age (eighteen) when most girls are at their prettiest and was a great favorite with the young farmer boys, who were her natural associates. She was about to please her father and mother by accepting Gus Walker, the son of one of the most prominent farmers in the neighborhood and commonly considered rich. Young Walker was as handsome as Rosa was pretty. Indeed, he was considered the best looking young fellow in all that region.

Farmer Gordon, about that time having crops to get in, hired a hand, Joe Green, a man about thirty years old, who was a sight to behold. He had a birthmark on his neck and when a baby had fallen into a fire which had scarred his whole face. Added to this, he was freckled, and his hair was a sort of red sorrel. One night at a barn dance this scarecrow was present. The girls would not dance with him. He invited Rosa among the first, and she turned her back on him without even deigning him an answer. That ended his invitations for partners. One of the young men asked him why he didn't go through the whole list, and he replied that since Rosa Thurber would not dance with him he would never dance with any other girl. Of course this was repeated to Miss Thurber, who said that she was pleased to save the other girls the pain of being invited to dance by such a scarecrow.

The next thing that Rosa heard about Joe Green was that when twitted about finding, or rather not finding, a girl to marry him he had said that the only girl in the world he would care to marry was Rosalind Thurber. On hearing it she said that he had as much chance of marrying her as he had of marrying the empress of Germany.

One day when Rosa was walking on the road she met Joe. Her only notice of his presence was to make a face at him. He lifted his hat politely.

Joe used to hang around the Thurber farm in hopes of getting a sight of Rosa. All the family noticed this and used to twit her about it. One day when Joe had been sitting on a fence for an hour, looking up at the house where she lived, she astonished all present by going out on the porch and throwing some feed to the chickens.

Even then no one suspected that the girl had been touched by Joe's devotion and had gone out to reward him with a sight of her. But under Joe's homeliness was a keen insight into a woman's nature, and with great satisfaction he got down from the fence and went away.

The next time she met Green was in the evening when he was taking the horses to water.

"When are you going to stop making a guy of yourself about me?" she asked.

"I'm not making a fool of myself," he replied. "Of all the men hereabouts I'm the only one that appreciates you. You can't stop me from loving you, no matter what you do."

"What do you love me for?"

"'Cause you're the only girl in the world worth loving."

"How long have you loved me?"

"Since the first night I ever saw you at the barn dance."

"How long are you going to love me?"

"Till the day of judgment."

There being no more information on the subject to be derived, Rosa passed on, leaving Joe to attend to the rest of his chores.

After awhile Joe Green and Rosa Thurber were seen occasionally walking together. Then they began to be spoken of as beauty and the beast. Gus Walker, who had been expecting soon to be engaged to her, met her one evening on the road with Joe. Joe attempted to smile and made such a horrible face of it that Gus forgot to bow to Rosa. The next time Gus and Rosa met he asked her where was her scarecrow lover and received a reply that some persons were scarecrows on the outside and some persons were scarecrows on the inside. Then she turned on her heel, and that was the last there was of courtship between the two.

One day it became reported that the pretty Rosa Thurber was going to marry that homely Joe Green. No one would believe it at first, but after several of Rosa's friends had asked her about it and she had admitted it it was accepted as a fact. They were married, and the most astonishing part of the matter followed in a crop of beautiful children. Most of them resembled the mother, with her raven tresses and rosy complexion, and the "red headed ones," as those who inherited from the father were called, fortunately did not fall in the fire as he had done and were therefore without his blemish in this respect and without his birthmark.

THE MYSTERIOUS EEL.

Less Known About It Than About Any Other Fish.

The eel is a much more interesting being than any other fish, because less is known about it than the others. For example nobody has yet found out where the eel deposits its eggs and nobody ever saw an eel that had laid an egg, as you might say.

The eel is peculiar from start to finish. Spawned somewhere in the sea at a depth of 3,000 feet the spawn comes to the surface and develops slowly. A mother eel will deposit from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 eggs, a larger quantity than any other vertebrate, and the young eels in their earlier stages are not eel shaped, but flat as a postal card and about three inch long. In about a year they round out, so to speak, and are less in length.

They are not good swimmers and the sea currents drift them ashore, but during the year they are drifting they take absolutely no food. When they get to the shore they make at once for fresh water streams, though why they should, having been born and bred in the salt sea, nobody knows.

They ascend the rivers, all along our coasts, getting darker in color in the fresh water, and when they come to obstructions in their passage they have been known to take to the land or to trees along shore in order to reach smooth water beyond. The females are always larger than the males and more numerous, and an eel 16 inches long is invariably a female. The males very rarely ascend streams beyond the tide reach and are thus deserted by the female members of the family. Nobody knows why this is, either.

When spawning time comes the eels come down the streams, always by night, even moonlight being sufficient to delay them, and they go far out to sea and deep down in it. There they spawn and are seen no more, no record being known of any fisherman ever having seen a spent eel. The principal spawning ground is supposed to be somewhere in the neighborhood of the Sargasso sea, as eels are very sensitive to cold, and usually hibernate in mud banks in winter, piling up a heap to keep as warm as possible.

The eel's food value is great and in some countries it is staple. The English consume millions, but the Scotch would quite as soon eat snakes. So in the ancient times, while the Romans consumed large quantities, the Egyptians would not touch them.

Denmark is one of the greatest eel growing countries, producing far more than all of the United States. Fresh water eels are small, but the marine variety, the conger, grows big and sometimes will reach 10 feet in length and weigh 100 pounds. Eels have been known to attain the age of 30 years, but they are not female eels, or if they are, they are spinsters.

The Big Sleep.

A middle aged couple were preparing to leave for a week end with a daughter in the city, and their last instructions to their grownup son, who was a heavy sleeper, were to be sure to wind his alarm clock, so that he would be in time for his work the next morning.

Monday noon they got back to the house and were surprised to find the blinds closed exactly as they had been left the Friday previous on their departure. As they let themselves into the house they heard their son's voice coming sleepily from his bedroom:

"What's the matter? Did you miss your train?"

Hard Workers.

Only one in 10,000 can be a genius, but any one can be a hard worker, which pays better. The biggest business men are nothing more than the best workmen who have been promoted. The world is full of three-quarters men. They are three-quarters industrious and cannot get all the way. A man should know his job thoroughly and fill it with enthusiasm. His work is his backer, his source of credit, his hope of prosperity and distinction. Be as careful of your job as you are of you. note in a bank.

Businesslike Father.

"Father always spoils everything," said Miss Gladys Cumrox tearfully. "I'll never again tell him when anybody proposes to me."

"What has he done?"

"When Baron Fucash asked for my hand I told him to ask father. And when he called father looked through a card index and said: 'There are three ahead of you, but I don't think any of them will suit. Come around next Thursday'."

Inquisitive.

"I asked her if her husband smoked," said the woman with an inquiring mind, "and what do you think! She said she didn't know!"

"I don't see what difference it makes to you."

"Oh, I don't care whether he smokes. I wanted to find out if he kisses her."

His Importance.

"Dobbleday seems to think himself very important. Why, he can't even stand on a corner and wait for a trolley car without putting on as many airs as if he were laying a cornerstone."

Heavy and Light.

"I see that a French scientist is using electricity to make men fat," said the Old Fogy.

"Huh," commented the Wise Guy, "I thought electricity was used to make things lighter."

Supreme Self Confidence.

"Nothing ever seems to disturb his self satisfaction."

"I know it. He could wear a silk hat in the presence of his boss and be perfectly at his ease."

In London many women earn only $1.44 a week.

NOMENCLATURE.

For centuries fair woman reigned,
And o'er her subject man maintained
A firm and gentle sway.
Enthroned securely in his heart,
Crowned with his love, she had the art
To rule and to obey.

Obey? Yes, in its primal sense.
Just turn and search the Latin, whence
Our English words contrived,
You find the root means but "to bear"—
The prefix opposition—there!
You see where we've arrived.

Yet everybody was content,
For lovely woman had her bent.
So he believed, did man.
Alas, that age of gold is past!
It doubtless was too good to last.
Fate had another plan.

Shakespeare was very much to blame
For asking us, "What's in a name?"
A name! That's just the rub!
Man yielded woman her demands
While she'd "a scepter" in her hands.
But how about a club?

—New York Tribune.

"So you called on Miss Millions last evening. How did her father strike you?"

"He didn't. I saw him coming."—Pittsburgh Press.

A Common Quest.

"I'm derned glad to hear it," replied the farmer. "Ef ye happen to find it, stranger, send me a tellygram, will ye?"—Judge.

An Improving Influence.

"You have a new cook."

"Yes," replied Mr. Crossiots.

"Is she doing good work?"

"Yes. She can't cook very much, but she served notice that she wouldn't stay if my daughter didn't quit playing ragtime on the piano."—Washington Star.

Family Affair.

"I called on Mrs. X. for a contribution to our charity fund and got $10. Then I went to her husband's office."

The Worry Fiend.

"He's always finding something new to worry about."

"What's his latest?"

"He's afraid that if beef goes to $1 a pound his doctor will prescribe it three times a day."—Atlanta Constitution.

Good Advice.

"I am out of employment," said the boob. "I have only $100 saved up, and I would like to make it go a long way."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

A Milk Diet.

Eggs are very nutritious, especially when raw or lightly boiled or poached. Milk is a perfect and complete food for the very young and for old and feeble people, but for the average adult it is not sufficient alone. It certainly contains both food and drink, but the food is limited in quantity and not sufficient to make good the tissue waste incurred by the active life of a full grown man or woman in vigorous health.

A strict milk diet has, however, been proved to be efficacious in such opposite cases as extreme emaciation and excessive stoutness. In the latter case the cream is first removed, and in both cases the milk cure is combined with rest in bed and massage.

It's sometimes easier to discharge an obligation than a cook.

"GIN PILLS ARE WONDERS"

Says Prominent Winnipeg Newspaper Man. "Before I Used The Second Box, The Pain Had Left"

"Manitoba Free Press"
Winnipeg, Jan. 15th. 1913

"I think it only right that I should tell you about the benefits I received the last couple of weeks by using GIN PILLS. I was troubled for over three weeks with a pain in my back, and tried a number of remedies without any benefit. One of the reporters had also been troubled the same way and he said to me, "Why don't you use GIN PILLS? I used a box and a half and the pain left". He said "You take this other half of the box and get another box, and you will be all right". I am glad to inform you that before I used all of the second box, I felt myself all right again and the pain had left. I certainly think GIN PILLS are wonders".

A TROLLEY IN THE DESERT.

Sand Fights the Wires From Cairo to the Pyramids.

Extending from Cairo to the pyramids of Gizeh is an electric trolley line which is used chiefly by tourists. The trunks of huge palm trees serve as trolley poles to support the overhead conductor, and the contrast between the modern hurrying motorcars and the peaceful centuries old tombs of the pharaohs holds the interest of many a contemplative traveler.

At one side of the trolley conductor on bell shaped insulators are run the feeders, which, like the trolley wire, are of bright, hard drawn copper.

After these wires had been installed it was soon found that they invariably broke and fell within six or seven months, the cross section being much reduced at the point of fracture.

Investigation showed that the desert winds which sweep across the right of way whip sand particles against the wires, causing a filing action which cuts away the copper much like an artificial sand blast. The glass globes of arc lamps installed along the road have exhibited the same destructive action.

A similar effect is observed with the incandescent units used to light the way to the sphinx. These strings of lamps, besides having to be moved at frequent intervals to accommodate the varying level of the shifting sands, are rapidly eaten away by the etching action of the desert winds. Thus far no remedy has been discovered for this destruction except frequent renewals. —Electrical World.

NOISELESS NOISE.

Ring a Bell In a Vacuum and You Cannot Hear the Sound.

The value of air as a noise and sound medium can readily be ascertained by suspending a bell from a silk strand through the neck of a large bottle from which the air has been pumped. By pulling on the silk the tongue can be seen to strike the sides of the bell, but no sound is heard. A bell suspended by a metal rod and rung would be audible, the sound waves being carried to the outside of the bottle by the metal rod. An experiment of this kind, using an iron vessel as a substitute for the glass bottle, would be found not nearly so satisfactory, though the bell be suspended from silk as in the former instance, owing almost entirely to the fact that iron is more porous than glass, consequently containing some air, which would convey an almost imperceptible sound to the outside.

There is said to exist in Scotland a stone so opaque as to render inaudible even the firing of a cannon, if one crouches on the opposite side. All liquids and gases are excellent sound conductors; especially is water on the surface, and certain kinds of wood.

If it was possible for two men to live a sufficient length of time in a glass box hermetically sealed and containing no air they would be unable to converse, though using the greatest powers at their command.—Chicago Record Herald.

Nature and the Barnacle.

In the barnacle we have a unique and wonderful case of a creature that can afford as age comes on to dispense with the eyesight that was so useful in youth. For the young and old barnacle are as different one from the other as fishes from seaweed. In the heyday of life the barnacle swims about the sea, seeking its food with the aid of its eyes and generally leading a roaming existence. Later in life, however, it grows tired of this aimless wandering and settles down to worry ships' captains by attaching itself to the keels of their craft and defying the much advertised powers of various preventive paints. Once, then, the barnacle has become a fixture, whether on ships or sharks, its eyesight is of no more use. It cannot seek its food, and it cannot shun its foes, for it never more will move. Therefore its eyes become superfluous and, according to nature's invariable rule in such cases, disappear.

Simple English.

"Yes," said the earnest professor, "what we want in literature is direct and simple English."

The listeners gravely nodded.

"Direct and simple," they echoed.

"Those conglomerated effusions of vapid intellects," the professor went on, "which pose in lamentable attitudes as the emotional and intellectual ingredients of fictional realism fall far short of the obvious requirements of contemporary demands and violate the traditional models of the transcendent minds of the Elizabethan era of glorious memory. Plain and simple English is the demand of the hour."

Whereupon everybody applauded and went home.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Money Lending Scandals.

There seems every possibility that Lord Newton's bill to amend the Money Lenders' Act in Britain will become law very soon. "My bill," said his lordship, "will stop circulars being sent to anybody, unless a money-lender has a written request for one received within the preceding seven days. It would also prevent money-lenders from surreptitiously trading under an alias as they often do," and he proceeded to describe a very prevalent practice which the bill will stop. A money-lender gets a client heavily into debt, and then the client when he does not know where to turn receives a circular from what is apparently another money-lender, but really from the same man under an alias. The client gets advances from him, and thus gets hopelessly into the money-lender's clutches. Everybody recognizes that such a bill is absolutely necessary in order to prevent the money-lending scandals which have been so frequent of late. As a West-end solicitor explained to the writer the other day, young men of good family live beyond their income, receive quietly through the post tempting circulars, offering a loan on no apparent security, and think it is easy to borrow $1,000 or $1,500, unknown to their relatives, only to find they are in hopeless difficulties at the end of twelve months or so.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

PETES HAD EASY WIN OVER BOWMANVILLE

Locals Did Not Have To Exert Themselves, As They Took a Big Lead

The Local Intermediates found very little trouble in defeating the Bowmanville outfit the score being 12-5. The half time figures were [illegible]-1. The ice was in the best possible condition and the most outstanding feature of the game was the fact that Peterboro availed themselves of the opportunity of having a good work out. The fact that Peterboro defeated the vititors on their own ice had its effect on the fans and very few were on hand. At that it was nothing to miss.

The work of the visitors' goal minder, Spry, was the only item that kept the fans in excitement. Time after time he kicked them out and when he came out in the last half and blocked Park after he had passed the defence he received a great ovation. Had it not been for his stellar performance the score would easily have run up into the twenties. Higginbotham, their right wing man, was about the pick of their crew with Cryderman a good second. Neither showed much speed in the first half but after the resting period they were there all the time. The former's end to end rushes and the nifty way he passed the local defence won the crowd. He has a tendency to rove too much but that is caused no doubt by the inability of the rest of his men to keep up with him.

Although none of the locals tore off anything unusual they all played a 50-50 game.

Denison contributed a few fast rushes and on one occasion took the puck up, circled the net and returned half way down the ice again. Bradshaw was out for goals and the way the big boy bored them at Spry was something terrible yet the kid was always on the job and "Brad" had to be satisfied with four. "Skid" Janes had a very quiet night and did not have to show any of his real class.

"Pete" Spratt handled the game and although he was new on the job he handled it well. There was only one penalty and Dennie drew that for holding a stick. It was one of the cleanest games of hockey played here in some time.

The teams:

Bowmanville—5		Peterboro—12
Spry	goal	Janes
Robinson	r. def.	Bond
Christie	def.	Denison
Jones	rover	Giroux
Cryderman	centre	Park
Hooper	l. wing	Kelly
Higginbotham	r. wing	Bradshaw

The Play

The play had just begun when it was easily seen that it would be a one-sided affair. The play centred around the visitor's goal and Spry handled a few hot ones. Kelly finally lifted the rubber in from the front of the net. Time 2 minutes. Bowmanville—0, Peterboro—1.

Denison and Park made an end-to-end rush but Spry came out and met them and a goal was saved. Percy Bond made a nice rush but no tally was forthcoming. Higginbotham tore off a few brilliant rushes but on the whole the locals had all the play. After eight minutes of play Park scored on a long shot. Bowmanville—0, Peterboro—2.

The homesters' forward line started a little combination which resulted in Giroux slamming in the rubber on a pass from Kelly. Time 1 min. Bowmanville—0, Peterboro—3.

Just one minute afterward Bradshaw tore up the side and made it four.

Peterboro let up for a change and Janes stopped a few. Kelly relieved him and after caryiug the puck up the wing, passed to "Brad" who scored. Time 2 minutes. Bowmanville—0, Peterboro—5.

Captain Giroux again broke into the scoring column after a combined rush with Park. Time 45 seconds. Bowmanville—0, Peterboro—6.

While Peterboro stopped for breath Cryderman come down on a lone rush and scored. In doing so he fell against the net and injured him arm which forced his retirement. Bond was dropped to even up. Time 1 minute. Bowmanville—1, Peterboro—6.

The play lagged for a few minutes and Cryderman and Bond were on again before any scoring was done. After five minutes of play Park made an end-to-end rush which resulted in another. Bowmanville—1, Peterboro—7.

Thirty seconds afterwards "Brad" slammed the eighth one in.

For a few minutes Janes was given an opportunity to work and he handled several hard ones without a miscue. Kelly and Park combined on a nice rush and the latter scored from close in. Time 3 minutes. Bowmanville—1, Peterboro—9.

That ended the scoring for the half time.

Second Half

When the resting spell was over the game grew a trifle faster and the locals couldn't find Spry's weak spot anywhere. Jones and Cryderman combined on a nice rush and the latter tallied. Time 5 minutes. Bowmanville—2, Peterboro—9.

Giroux's brigade appeared to be taking things very easy and as a result Higginbotham went through on a lone rush and scored. Time 7 minutes. Bowmanville—3, Peterboro—9.

Three minutes afterwards he repeated the performance, beating Janes from close in. Bowmanville—4, Peterboro—9.

Giroux thought it near time to add another to the nine and he did so, after a long rush. Time 1 minute. Bowmanville—4, Peterboro—10.

One minute later Bradshaw rushed down the boards and passed across in front of the nets. The puck hit Jones' stick and glanced in. Bowmanville—4, Peterboro—11.

Cryderman took the puck from the face-off and after getting away from the forward line, lifted from outside the defence. Janes never saw it. Time 40 seconds. Bowmanville—5, Peterboro—11.

Bond and Bradshaw united on a nice rush and the latter scored. Time 1 minute. Bowmanville—5, Peterboro—12.

The scoring:

	—First Half—
1	Peterboro	Kelly	2 min
2	Peterboro	Park	8 min.
3	Peterboro	Giroux	1 min
4	Peterboro	Bradshaw	1 min.
5	Peterboro	Bradshaw	2 min.
6	Peterboro	Giroux	40 secs.
7	Bowmanville	Cryderman	1 min.
8	Peterboro	Park	5 min.
9	Peterboro	Bradshaw	30 secs.
10	Peterboro	Park	3 min.
	—Second Half—
11	Bowmanville	Cryderman	5 min.
12	Bowmanville	Higginbotham	7 min.
13	Bowmanville	Higginbotham	3 min.
14	Peterboro	Giroux	4 min.
15	Peterboro	Jones	1 min.
16	Bowmanville	Cryderman	40 secs.
17	Peterboro	Bradshaw	1 min.

Penalties—Denison.

AN ATTEMPT TO BOOM LACROSSE

TORONTO, Jan. 22.—During the next eight weeks Secretary Frank Doyle of the Ontario Amateur Lacrosse Association will be busy in the interests of the association and the national game. His principal mission will be the organization of public school lacrosse. It is hoped to revive the game in fifty or sixty towns and cities where it was formerly played. An effort will be made to have more than one hundred teams in the O. A. L. A., in which there are now fifty-four.

While Mr. Doyle is covering Ontario, the territory from Vancouver to Quebec will be organized by Mr. Jos Lally, the Cornwall enthusiast. Mr. Lally will appoint a dealer in each town to handle lacrosse sticks at cost. The Cornwall man will ship the sticks, charges prepaid, and they will be on sale at about half of the usual cost.

In addition to this Mr. Lally has ordered no less than fifty dozen solid gold medals. Sets of twelve will be awarded the winners of the championship in districts of eight teams each. It is hoped to have the organization of these school leagues perfected before the annual convention of the O. A. L. A., on Good Friday. The medals will cost Mr. Lally upwards of $1,500, and that is only a part of the cash outlay which the hustling Cornwall enthusiast has undertaken. Such enterprise is worthy of the warmest support of the fans and general public wherever the game is played in Canada.

CHURCH LEAGUE FOR THE JUNIORS

Trophy Has Been Donated by Mr. J. I. Allin.

A junior church hockey league is being organized with the age limit of players at sixteen years and under. A meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A. last night with the following churches represented: — St. Paul's, Charlotte street, St. Andrew's and All Saints'.

Another meeting is called for Monday night at 7.15, when other churches wishing to enter a team, are asked to send representatives.

The officers are:—

Hon. President—J. I. Allin.

President—J. J. Thompson.

Sec.-Treas.—Hugh Austin.

Mr. J. I. Allin, local manager of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., has donated a trophy.

MERCANTILE BILL FOR TO-NIGHT

There will be all kinds of speed and class in the Mercantile League games tonight at Brock Street Rink and as there is no O. H. A. game here till next Tuesday, there should be a large turnout to see the working men in action. The most interest, centres around the game between the Tool Room and Test which will be played between 9 and 10. The Examiner clash with the De Laval from 8 to 9, and Plumbers and Bankers from 10 to 11.

Mr. Len Dobson will referee.

ATHLETICS

Apparently Peterborough has worthy representatives in all lines of sport. Harold Hill, a well known local boy who has a fine athletic record in this city and who made good at Queen's in the rugby season, is destined for higher honors in the sporting world. Hill made his debut in the intercollegiate basketball recently and was responsible for more than a few of the counters.

WALTER MILLER HAS PNEUMONIA

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—Walter Miller, of Peterborough, whom Ottawa secured from the Wanderers, is down with pneumonia. Miller will hardly be able to play hockey again this season. Ottawa were arranging to send him to the Maritime league. He is still the property of the Wanderers, as Ottawa just had him under an optional agreement for this year.

Ottawa College will meet Harvard in Boston on February 17th. Hobey Baker's Princeton seven was to have come to Ottawa for an exhibition game, but they sent word this afternoon that they would not be able to make the trip this year.

Father Stanton is endeavoring to arrange home-and-home games with St. Michael's. He is willing to meet them in Ottawa on any date suitable to them.

CONTRACTS SENT OUT TO RESERVED WHITE CAPS

Candidate for Manager, "Curly" Blount, of Youngstown, Will Be In Town To-morrow

"Curley" Blount, of Youngstown, who is a possibility for the leadership of the 1914 White Caps, will be in the city to-morrow to talk over the situation to-morrow with the directors.

Blount is highly recommended. He is an outfielder and has had a large experience in organized baseball. He was a team-mate of Frank Shaughnessy, when the present Senators' leader, captured two championships for For. Wayne.

Contracts to eight players were sent out to-day to those players, held on the reserve list by the local club. The players are chapdelaine, Byrne, Swartz, Fox, Sterling, Cresswell, Belting and Tracey.

BAKU, THE BLACK CITY.

Chief Center of the Petroleum Industry In Russia.

Baku, on the Caspian sea, is the chief center of the petroleum industry in Russia. Baku, in surroundings destitute of vegetation, finds employment in the production of naphtha for 200,000 persons. This mixed population of Russians, Tartars and Persians is wholly dependent on the industry.

One of the most important groups of oil wells operated in the district constitutes what is known as the Black City. Here, encircled by bare hills, lie the naphtha beds, and rising from the slackened surface are a number of grim towers that indicate the position of the wells. The usual process of extraction is by a windlass that works a hollow spindle whereby the clammy mixture is drawn up. It is then conveyed to the refineries. To sink each well costs between $80,000 and $100,000, according to the nature of the soil and its depth. Fire, of course, is a big risk in the business.

Last year the daily output per well in Baku was sixty-four barrels of forty-two gallons each. This year the field has shrunk to fifty-eight barrels. During the first six months of the present year the quantity of naphtha produced in Baku amounted to 24,504,000 barrels against 25,788,000 in 1911. This shows a decrease of 4.98 per cent. although the number of wells in operation was augmented. While, therefore, there is no immediate fear of a naphtha famine, prices are not likely to go down.—Harper's Weekly.

LONDON "PEA SOUP."

Mists and Fogs So Thick That They Turn Day Into Night.

London and Londoners have been the butt of many a good joke, but perhaps the eldest subject of the humorist is the London fog. The mist, which is commonly called "pea soup," dates back to the seventeenth century. There are records as far back as that which indicate that the city suffered even in those days from mists as intense as any of those of today.

In November, 1699, John Evelyn made a note in his diary to the effect that there was "so thick a mist and fog that people lost their way in the streets, it being so intense that no light of candle or torches yielded any direction. Robberies are committed between the very lights which are fixed between London and Kensington on both sides and while coaches and passengers were passing. It began about 4 in the afternoon and was gone by night. At the Thames they beat drums to direct the watermen to make the shore."

Visitors to London in those days were in the habit of making fun of the fog just as the visitors of today. Condomara, Spanish ambassador in Queen Elizabeth's time, said to a friend who was returning to Spain, "My compliments to the sun, whom I have not seen since I came to England."

In Elizabeth's time the burning of coal was prohibited while parliament was in session. So dense were the fogs during the years of 1813 and 1814 that when the prince regent tried to make his way to Hatfield, the home of Lord Salisbury, he could not find his way and was compelled to forego the trip and return to Carlton House, which he reached after a succession of accidents.—New York Sun.

"Between her anxiety to get a new spring skirt before they go out of style, and her desire to finish wearing out her winter clothes, these are troublous times for the economical girl."

AND THE ARTISTS WON THE GAME

A Remarkable Battle at Brock Street Rink.

Yes, the Barbers won. It was one of those grand struggles such as the Brock street rink had never witnessed before, and will probably not witness again. This occasion was the game of hockey for supremacy, between the Tonsorial Artists of the Oriental, better known as the "Luizers," against the redoubtable Tommie McDonough's fast aggregation from the Oriental hotel.

At half-time the score stood 3—2 in favor of the Orientals, but the artists, after a careful massage and clover leaf refreshments, came back with the required pep and energy as a result, they were entertained by Manager McDonough to a royal oyster supper at the Oriental after the game, when the participants had sufficiently revived. The work of "Manager Some Come Back" Jim Lewis, was the feature. He easily outskated any of his opponents with the ease and dexterity of a pro.

His genius in scoring for the "Knights of the Scissors and Razors" was most remarkable, he being able to find all the weak spots of his rivals. "Baldy" Throop was right there with the goods. "Campbellford Shaker" Shook lived up to his record and as a result these two one hundred and eighty pounders took advantage, when the referee's back was turned, to butt the end of of the rink. Fortunately they missed by inches and with a smash like the fall of Rome they skated full tilt into each other. The result was most disastrous.

This formula was repeated several times by these players with favorable results. "Flashlight" Pidgeon was away off color owing to a slight nervous depression and as shown by his gyratical evolutions, he failed to germinate until a few minutes before the gong rang.

On the whole the renowned "Camp -Bell Ford" Shaker Shook was not of the best, for when he once got his legs, he was sure going. "Baldy" Throop was the only man with the required ballast to warrant the speed demon being stopped.

"Fanned Out" English, the diminutive rover of the Orientals, was there with the pep and handed out more than a few to the winners. "La Diva" Arnott worried too much about the oysters instead of thinking about the calamity that befell his team.

"Heavyweight" Robinson attired in a rugby suit, was incapacitated considerably, but acquitted himself with fair results.

"Clipper" Donahue, for the Artists, became better known as "Hook" before the evening closed. His brilliant hook work being incomparable. "Razor Blade" Rylie made a big impress on the large gathering, and the players, his treatment being so injudicious as to hold him in the coop for a space of a half a minute.

"Vezina" Lewis in goal during the first half, was good. He was replaced the next half by the manager, who stopped scores of wicked shots.

The teams:

Barbers — "Vezina" Lewis, goal; "Some Come Back" Lewis, r. defence; "Baldy" Throop, lt. defence; "Razor Blade" Rylie, rover; "Clipper" Donahue, centre.

Orientals—"Heavyweight" Robinson, goal; "Camp Bell Ford" Shaker Shook, rt. defence; "Flashlight Gaby" Pidgeon, lt. defence; "La Diva" Arnott, rover; "Fanned Out" English, centre.

Referee, Mr. Black, Toronto.

Thanks to the efficient culinary services of Don Shook, the entire party spent a delightful social half hour after the game. Mr. Lewis presided. During the evening Mr. Black received a telegram from Manager Murphy, of the Torontos, requesting him to sign up Jim Lewis. One of the strict injunctions in the telegram was that he was not to let the price stand in his way.

Mr. Lewis will probably leave on Saturday for the Queen City,—and return.

A return game will probably be played owing to the defeated aggregation not being satisfied with the time allotted to them to play.

DR. MARSH AT HOLSTEIN SUCCESSFUL GATHERINGS

Ex-pastor of Springville Draws Large Crowds to Special Services and Barbecue

(From The Durham Review).

A new standard of anniversary services has been attained by the Presbyterian church in Holstein. The services on Sunday will also doubtless be the inception of a new era in church life in the village, for never has the spirit of christian fellowship and abiding love between man and man, church and church, pastor and people, been better demonstrated than on this occasion. Summing up the many issues emanating from three successful gatherings, it might be truly said that the Sabbath not only needed a new era of anniversaries, but there is a strong indication that it has also interpreted a fuller view of the Christian life to many.

The outstanding figure was the pastor, Rev. Dr. Marsh, F.R.A.S. His magnetic personality, his friendly welcome, his forethought in every matter and above all, his sincerity in all the great spiritual messages he presented, are the tokens that are making him the beloved shepherd of his flock.

In his morning discourse to a large congregation, Dr. Marsh chose for his text the portion of the verse Amos 6: 1, which says, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion." The pastor, in giving application to the text, presented a strong plea for greater activities in spiritual work during the year 1914. He pointed out that the year 1913 was now numbered with its predecessors and he wanted all the members to embrace the coming twelve months by commencing a wider field of service in all departments of the church life and having a closer communion with God himself.

Following a fifteen minute song service on Sunday evening, the church was darkened and an impressive service was largely conducted by means of some splendid lantern slides. The hymns, nearly all old favorites, were shown on the screen in verse form, accompanied by suitable pictures. Never have hymns been more heartily sung. The numbers by the choir, whether in choral, quartette, duet or solo, were similarly treated and excellently rendered by the members of that organization. Passages of scripture and the subjects of Dr. Marsh's various messages were also placed on the canvas and throughout a fine spiritual flavor permeated the assembly. Rev. Mr. James assisted in the evening.

The bond of prospective union between the Presbyterian and Methodist congregations has been strengthened as a result of the services. The Methodist kindly sacrificed their evening service and with their pastor, went to the sister church and enjoyed the service there. In a few words Rev. Mr. James mooted the suggestion that it would be a wise move if one service only was held in the village on Sunday evenings, and it is known that many here would be favorable to such a course being taken.

Despite the fact that the stormiest kind of weather prevailed on Monday, a crowd estimated to be over the 200 mark turned out and enjoyed a most pleasant evening. From 6.30 to 8 o'clock supper was served piping hot to the guests as they entered from the frosty outside world and following the barbeque all adjourned to the assembly of the church where by the aid of 72 colored limelight views and an interesting address by Dr. Marsh, the audience journeyed to Bermuda Islands. The views are part of Dr. Marsh's own work, taken when he was on an extended trip to these tropical islands a few years ago, and are a most interesting and instructive work.

Assisting materially in the entertainment were the choir and in particular, Messrs. Hunter and Marsh and Miss Brown, who sang illustrated Southern songs. Miss D. Reid's work as organist was also highly spoken of.

JUDGMENT IN INSURANCE CASE

Widow's Claim for Life Paid-up Policy is Allowed.

"At Montreal recently judgment was given against an insurance Co., in favor of the plaintiff, a widow. The case is reported as follows:

The right of a widow to ask for and secure a paid-up life insurance policy of the great West Life Assurance Co., was upheld. Plaintiff had a policy for $1,000. After paying premiums for four years, she wished to avail herself of certain privileges which were stipulated in the policy as accruing after two years. Plaintiff claimed that under these stipulations she had a right to a paid-up policy of $300, as she had paid premiums for four consecutive years.

The company, putting another interpretation on the stipulation embodying these privileges, claimed plaintiff had right to a paid-up policy for only $160, and it tendered a policy for this amount. The company claimed that the paid-up policy was not exigible until the expiry of four years. Plaintiff contended that it was due after the fourth consecutive premium had been paid. She had taken out the policy September 1st, 1906, and in accordance with conditions, had paid her premiums in advance on the first of September of 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909. On August 28th, 1909, she put in her application for the paid-up policy, offering at the same time, to relinquish her policy for $1,000.

The clause in the policy was as follows: "After this policy will have been in force two complete years, the privileges above mentioned will be guaranteed, "pourvu que la prime ait ete payee jusqu'a l'anniversaire de l'assurance suivant la date a laquelle demande est faite de tels privileges."

Then followed a table setting forth that "at the expiry of four years" a policy holder of plaintiff's age was entitled to a paid-up policy of $200. The court in summing up, ruled that the insurance year contemplated by the policy issued by the company to plaintiff began on the first day of September in each year of the existence of the policy, and that on the 28th of August, 1910, plaintiff had paid in advance four annual premiums, thereby keeping the policy in force up till the fifth anniversary, viz., the first of September, 1910. The fourth year expired with the termination of the 31st of August, 1910. After the expiration of four years of insurance, plaintiff's demand for a paid-up policy was in the hands of the company. She was thus entitled to such paid-up policy under the clause which read "after the expiration of four years." Judgment accordingly.

PERSONAL

The many friends of Mr. W. H. Moore K.C., who fell and fractured a bone in his foot, some time ago, will be pleased to learn that he is progressing most favorably.

The Misses Hill of Bethune St., gave an At Home yesterday afternoon in honor of their guest, Miss Irene Drummond of Montreal, which was attended by about seventy young ladies. Those in the tea room were: Mrs. W. H. Hill, who poured tea, Miss Rannie, the coffee, while the Misses Houston, Ruth Robertson, Phillipa Dela Fosse and Dorothy Hill assisted.

Miss Gladman's social dancing class will be held to-night at the Conservatory of Music.

No Help Wanted.

Scene, a courtroom. A big, burly artisan is brought in by the bailiff and placed in the dock. He is a regular Hercules in point of stature and is brought up on a charge of assault. It is evidently his first appearance in court.

When he enters the magistrate is busy with his papers, but presently looks up hurriedly and, turning to the prisoner, exclaims:

"Have you engaged any one to defend you?"

"What's that?" asks the prisoner; then, collecting himself, he adds: "I don't want anybody. Come on, any half dozen of you!"—London Answers.

HANDSOME GAVEL PRESENTED TO AGENT

At a meeting of the Niagara Frontier Summer Rate Committee, which is now in convention at Buffalo, N.Y., the retiring chairman, Mr. W. S. Cookson, Assistant General Passenger Agent of the Grank Trunk Railway System, was presented by the committee with a handsome gavel.

The gavel is made from a piece of quartered oak taken from the wood used in the Chateau Laurier, the first of the magnificent chain of hotels which are being erected across the contingent by the Grand Trunk Railway System. The silver used for the ornamentation of the gavel was secured from Cobalt, the Eldorado of Northern Ontario and the richest silver camp in the world. Embedded in the head of the mallet is a section of "U" rail, taken from what is probably the last piece of rail in existence that was laid on the Grand Trunk Railway in 1854. This rail was of iron of remarkably good quality and was made by the Ebbo Vale Company in Wales, England. The joints were known as "chair joints" as there were no fish plates in use at that time. The rail was laid for over 1,000 miles, between the years 1854 and 1857, and the quality of the metal was so good that these rails wore away very evenly, some lasting for eighteen years. The railway at that time was known as the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad. The case in which the gavel is placed is made out of a piece of oak from the handsome Grand Trunk Railway Central Station at Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion.

Atlanta, Ga., has a public safety league, of which more than one thousand street railway employes are members.

FORTY-EIGHT NEW MEMBERS FOR ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH

Committee is Nominated to Investigate Matter of Accommodation

The adjourned annual meeting of the St. Andrew's Church was held in the lecture room last night, being the 81st annual meeting of this congregation. After devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Mr. Rollins, he was voted into the chair. The first item of business was the nomination of a committee to investigate the matter of better Sunday School accommodation resulting as follows:

Mr. Richard Lees, Mrs. W. S. Campbell, Mrs. G. W. Gilman, Mr. A. McFarlane, Mrs. W. A. Richardson, Mr. George A. Gillespie, Mr. G. Walter Green, Mr. E. Bruce Fowler, Mr. R. M. Waddell, Mr. Geo. Edmison, Mr. G. E. Kerr, Mr. J. I. Allen, Mr. W. J. Chisholm, Mr. W. G. Read, Mr. Henry.

48 New Members

The session reported a present membership of 581, with 48 new members received during the year, and referred to th "Every Member Canvas," the installation of the organ and to the splendid work being done in the Sunday School, and other church organizations, and conveyed sympathy to those who had suffered bereavement during the year.

Mr. W. A. Richardson, secretary treasurer of the organ committee reported the total cost of organ and necessary changes in choir loft etc., to amount to $7,968.02 all of which had been paid except $1,895.37 to be provided for.

The committee were continued and enthusiastically instructed to take the necessary steps to remove all indebtedness on the organ during 1914. The Board of Managers reported through Mr. Andrew McFarlane, chairman, that they had taken the necessary steps to secure legislation to bring real estate owned by the congregation under the general law by which the property of the Presbyterian Church in Canada is held. This will enable the congregation to dispose of property with the consent of Presbytery.

The report congratulated the organ committee on the results of their work, thanked Mr. Treasurer and the choir for the marked improvement in the service of praise. The report further suggests that the question of increased seating accommodation in the church be referred to the committee appointed to investigate re improved Sunday School facilities, and ends as follows: "Your Board feel that St. Andrew's congregation should look forward to the future with confidence and expresses the hope that any recommendation made by the special committee in connetcion with improved accommodation will be given your sympathetic consideration."

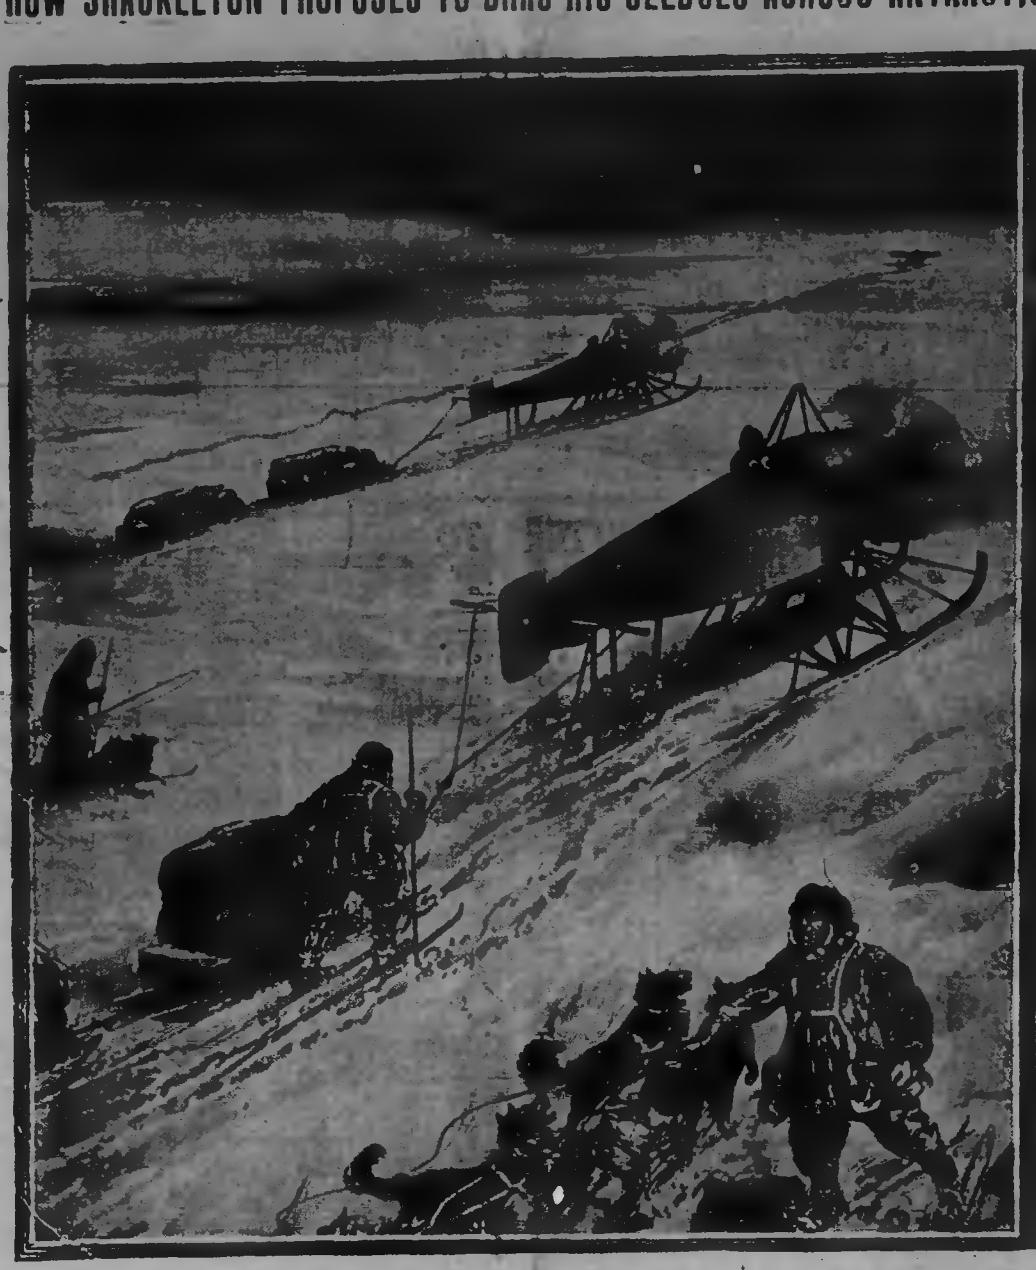
READY FOR THE ICE HARVEST

The ice harvesting season commences on Monday. This year only ice for cooling purposes can be taken from the Little Lake, while ice for other purposes can be taken from the canal, which is pretty free from infection. As in former years a number of the residents will fill their private ice houses from Chemong Lake. This however, is rather expensive.

HOW SHACKLETON PROPOSES TO DRAG HIS SLEDGES ACROSS ANTARCTIC



Sir Ernest Shackleton's plans for his new expedition to the Antarctic are arousing the keenest interest in exploratory circles and among the public in general. The above drawing shows the new ideas of Antarctic traction, which are now engaging the leader's attention. The heavily loaded sledges are to be drawn across the ice, if the experiments prove successful, by means of air propelled sleighs, taking the form of wingless aeroplanes. Ahead of the main party will go the taxi-aeroplane with clipped wings, which will bear its own load of food.

SIR JAMES' CONDITION

The Premier Recognized Family for First Time Since Arrival

TORONTO, Jan. 23.—More hopful news was contained in the bulletin issued shortly before ten o'clock last night from the General Hospital by Premier Whitney's physicians:

"Sir James Whitney has had a much quieter day, with considerable sleep; condition seems improved.

(Signed) "Alex. McPhedran
"C. K. Clarke,
"A. A. Pyne."

For the first time since he was brought home from New York, Premier Whitney was able to recognize members of his family yesterday. He called his wife, Lady Whitney, and his son, Garnet, by name.

While the condition of Sir James is much improved, the doctors say that too much optimism should not be aroused, as the Prime Minister still is seriously ill.

Canadian Press Despatch

This morning's bulletin posted at the General Hospital says Sir James passed a fairly good night, and is in fair condition.

Y.M.C.A. PHYSICAL DIRECTOR RESIGNS

Appointed Travelling Secretary for the State of Maine.

Physical Director J. J. Thompson of the Y.M.C.A., has been appointed by the American Council of the Association, as travelling secretary for the State of Maine. Mr. Thompson will leave in May to take up his new position which is a most lucrative one.

During Mr. Thompson's regime of some five years in this city he has met with unqualified success and has certainly done more than considerable to promote good, clean sport in the city.

Therefore it is with deep regret that members and city at large learn of his departure from the city.

As a physical director Mr. Thompson is unequalled, having had considerable experience in active athletic life.

HANGMAN ELLIS FINED FOR DISPLAYING REVOLVER

He Will Spring the Trap for Execution of the Negro Murder To-morrow

Canadian Press Despatch

MONTREAL, Jan. 23.—Arthur Ellis, public executioner, was fined $5 in police court this morning for displaying a revolver at the Orpheum Theatre last night.

A charge of drunkenness allowed to stand.

After paying his fine Ellis had only eighty cents left and Sheriff Lemieux was compelled to look after him until he is paid for hanging the negro, Wm. Campbell, tomorrow.

Ellis is the man who hanged Robert Henderson at the county jail yard, several years ago.

REV. T. W. JOLIFFE IN THE HOSPITAL

His many friends in Bowmanville and surrounding country will be sincerely sorry to learn that Rev. T. W. Joliffe who went to Toronto on business and whose illness we reported last week is much worse, with very slight hopes of recovery. Rev. H. B. Kenny has received word that he has been removed to the hospital and is now in a semi-conscious condition. It seems that the trouble was caused by a corn and gangerene set in, causing the illness.—Bowmanville Statesman.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN SERIOUS ACCIDENT

Mishap to C.P.R. Express at Myrtle From Unusual Cause.

Passengers on the C. P. R. train from Montreal did not know how near they were to death on Wednesday morning while passing Myrtle. There the train was nearly lifted from the tracks by wedged planks. When the train arrived at the Union station, Toronto, and the passengers learned of the danger they had been in, one elderly woman said, "Well, I am very hungry, and want a cup of tea, but before I take it I am going back in that car and down on my knees to thank God for sparing me to once more see my boys and girls."

"The train," said a trainman in speaking of the peculiar accident, "had just commenced to make fair speed. When crossing over one of the plank crossings two of the heavy planks sprang up and got wedged in the brake cylinder under one of the sleepers. The entire train seemed about to be lifted from the rails, and if it had many homes would be mourning the loss of some dear one by this time. Prompt action on the part of the engineer, however, saved the situation. The moment he felt the drag on his train, he stopped and the wonder is that we did not go over into the ditch. It took us just one hour to cut the planks loose, so firm were they imbedded in the cylinder under the coach."

When asked how they accounted for the planks lifting out of their position they said, it was the frost.

SEWER SERVICE FOR DICKSON PROPERTY

In a communication to the Board of Works Wednesday night, the City Engineer reported on the matter of a sewer service for the property of the Dickson Co.

The Company has been asking for a system for some time. They were prevented from improving the property by building.

It was decided to write the Provincial Board of Health, for the purpose of having them recommend the work. The City Engineer wrote as follows:

I wish to call your attention to the fact that in the sewage system designed to drain the Dickson Company property, situated between Harvey and Waterford streets, the ends of the sewer at Waterford and Dublin streets will only be 2 1-2 to 3 feet below the ground level. This is measured from the top of the pipe to the surface of the ground.

It will be impossible to connect any sanitary conveniences or laundry tubs in the basement of houses near the end of these sewers to the services. It will be even a little difficult to get private drain connections in one or two places, low enough below the ground to keep from freezing.

I have estimated the cost of lowering the whole system, 1 1-2 feet lower than was originally estimated and extending the duplicate sewer down Water Street to Murray Street far enough to get a suitable outlet. This cost would be about $731. The estimate cost of the whole scheme is $3882, so that the total cost of the system, 1½ feet deeper than was originally figured on would be $4614.

The estimated cost of lowering the whole system three feet and running a new outline down London Street to Aylmer Street would be $5230, adding on the original cost $3883, brings the total cost of this system emptying into Aylmer Street, $9705.

The estimated cost of lowering the whole system, three feet and running a duplicate outlet down Water Street until it could be discharged into the present Water Street sewer would be $3084. The cost of the system as originally estimated was $3883 making a total cost of $6947.

CAMPBELLFORD HEARS RUMOR

That Seymour Power Co Had Sold Out to the Hydro.

For the past few days a persistent report has been widely circulated about town that the Seymour Power Company had sold their entire interests to the Hydro Commission. Yesterday morning The News received the following telegram from Mr. Colville, vice-president, and solicitor, from the company's offices in Toronto:

Tronto, Jan. 20th, 1914.
The Campbellford News,
Campbellford.

No truth in report that Seymour Power Company has sold its properties to the Hydro Electric Commission, or any one else.

A. B. Colville.

It was also rumored that the Seymour Power Co. had purchased the Pulp Mill to the south of the town, but this is denied by officials of that concern.

INDIAN SAVED FROM DEATH BY DROWNING WHEN WOLLEN MITTEN FROZE TO THE ICE

ORILLIA, Jan. 23.—James Johnson, a well-known Indian, was walking across the ice from the Indian Reserve on Georgina Island, Lake Simcoe, to Jackson's Point, about 11 o'clock at night, and he was about half way across the lake when he stepped into a large air hole and found himself over his depth in icy water. Johnson, who is a large, strong Indian, fought for all that was in him to regain the ice again, but try as he would, owing to the thin glare ice, he found he could not get himself out. He became exhausted and made up his mind he had to perish. While in this state he threw his arm as far over the ice as he could, and leaned against it to rest himself. When he again moved his arm he found his wet woollen mitten had frozen and stuck to the glare ice. This gave him a hold and enabled him to place his other hand a little farther out than the first. Gradually by this means he managed to pull himself out, hand over hand.

Johnson, when out, tried to make his way back to the island against a keen north wind, but said this seemed to cut him to the heart, and froze his clothes like iron, and he had to turn his back to the wind and head for the mainland. When he turned, a feeling of warmth came over him, and he walked three miles to his home, none the worse.

NEWSPAPERS.

THE MONTREAL TELEGRAPH is to become "consolidated" with the Montreal Herald. No one will be surprised at the failure of this paper, we often wondered how so many newspapers could exist in Montreal. Everyone knows that newspapers in these days are not kept up by the people who read them. Those who plead for the freedom of the press are often the last to pay a decent price for their newspaper in order to make it free. The Globe in an editorial upon this subject puts the case for the newspapers very clearly:

The public do not quite realize yet that the daily newspaper is obtained by the reader for less than cost, and that the advertiser has to make up the subscription deficit and pay whatever profits are reaped from the enterprise. The battle for circulation has been waged almost without regard to cost. There are important papers published in Canada and sold over wide areas for $1 and $1.50 yearly the white paper in which alone costs almost $2 a year without any allowance for the great expense involved in obtaining news, setting type, printing, and operating the subscription department. Were it not for the advertiser no Canadian metropolitan daily could live if sold for less than two cents a copy.

It is probable that the dollar and even the dollar and a half daily will not long survive. The struggle to make profits on such a subscription basis increases daily as the cost of labor and materials goes up. There must come a time soon when reason will resume its sway and when no publisher will accept a third of a cent for a copy of a twenty or twenty-four page paper.

As we have said, it was a matter of wonder how five English newspapers could exist in Montreal, where three-quarters of the people speak the French language. Canada is a land of newspapers; in proportion to the population there are more newspapers in Canada than in any other country. None of these newspapers are supported solely by their reader's subscriptions, but are dependent almost entirely upon the income from advertisements, and in some cases are subsidised by capitalists who have an axe to grind and who use the paper as a means of promoting their individual views or interests.

No newspaper today is absolutely free. Hardly a day passes but some "sore-head" in a city will try to brow-beat an editor or manager over something that has appeared, or that he is afraid will appear. Threats are used of boycott or reprisals which would not be possible in regard to any other business. Even readers who scarcely pay for the paper the news is printed upon will take offence at the slightest "indiscretion" on the part of the editor or a reporter and swear that they will not take the paper any more.

We agree with The Globe that the time is coming when cheap newspapers must go. A cheap newspaper means often cheap journalism. The number of papers must be reduced. There will now be four English papers in Montreal, it would tend to a still healthier state of things if there were only two, and many other cities might follow suit.

THE BLUE-RUINISTS.

THE FINANCIAL TIMES of London, publishes a very pessimistic article upon Canada's financial position. It says that speculators have lived in a paradise for the last ten or fifteen years. That there are signs of deflation and contraction in the volume of trade. Unemployment is increasing in the cities where almost wanton expenditure has led to concentration of population to a dangerous degree.

All this and much more is said by the English Financial Times, and one would think that the editor read nothing but Liberal newspapers, which have been doing their best for the past two years to paint the country blue. We know that times are not at the present too good, that trade is slack in some quarters and there is unemployment in the cities. But anyone who knows anything at all about cities, knows that every city in the British Isles suffers from periods of unemployment, and this to a far more serious extent than has ever happened in Canada. Let the Financial Times cast its mind back to a few years ago when the "Hunger Marchers" paraded the streets of London, when men walked from Liverpool to London, begging all the way for food, in order to present a petition to Parliament to find them work. All this and much more in a country which is the wealthiest in the world, and about which there never was, even at that time, a whisper of "financial crisis."

Unemployment is the price men pay for congregating in large cities. There is always a certain amount of casual employment and it is these casual workers who suffer when the slackness comes. How can it be otherwise? Canada is not going to the dogs because there are unemployed men in Toronto, any more than Great Britain was when the thousands of starving workers held their demonstrations in Trafalgar Square.

The Financial Times should be the last to point to the Toronto unemployed as a sign of decadence, for it must know that many of the unemployed in Canadian cities were originally the unemployed in England or some other country who have come to Canada, and instead of getting on to the land have crowded into the cities. Canada, no more than any other country, can promise all men unbroken prosperity if they will remain in the cities. Slackness will come, and the "rush" will come, and men must take the bad with the good.

No good can come of such articles as that written by this London editor, who probably knows nothing more of Canada than what can be learned from a map or a few whining newspapers along with the ex-Premier's speeches. If a few real estate men in the West have burst through being too much inflated, like the frog in the fairy tale, that is not going to kill Canada. It may kill the frog, but he is better dead and out of the way. Canada's prosperity is not based upon real estate, or imaginary estate. The booming speculator must go. We can now go on with legitimate business. There are vast resources untouched waiting for the miner, the engineer and the agriculturalist. Let Canadians show confidence in themselves and assure British capitalists of their unshaken loyalty to the Empire, that our territority is in the safe keeping of the best navy in the world and in that their investments are not left in charge of a couple of obsolete warships. If the Borden Naval Bill had passed through the Senate last year there would never have been all this cry of decadence and loss of confidence in British financial circles. If any one is to blame for the stringency which has prevailed during the past year it is the men who killed the confidence of British capital when they killed the Naval Aid Bill.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE MONTREAL MAIL calls attention to a freak in the vision of a New York paper:—

"The New York Evening Post calls it "the Conservative Toronto Globe." Here is a good example of how closely American journalists follow Canadian politics." Hush! Mr. Mail, The Globe has been improving lately.

"IS LAND SPECULATION worse than gambling at cards?" This is a question which a local gentleman thinks ought never to have been asked, much less debated upon. We would propose another question for debate: "Is the peril of editing a newspaper worse than that of refereeing a hockey match?"

FISHERMEN of Newfoundland are beginning to see the advantages of the use of motor-driven craft; probably 1,000 to 1,500 are now in use, and as there are over 50,000 men and 20,000 vessels engaged in the industry, a rapid increase may be expected, which in time should lead to a material increase in the catch. The year compares very favorably in this respect with 1912, the estimated value of the products of the sea being about $12,500,000.

AN ENGLISH PREACHER, Chaplain of a prison, has preached a wild sermon against people marrying whoever they liked. He seems to be a sort of eugenist. He says we are breeding fools and knaves. That we ought to use as much discretion in marriages as in the breeding of horses. He further said, "A spirited man often needs to raise a great swear," he had sworn often but did not consider himself profane. But the eugenic doctor might not think so, and what would he do then? He would be barred from getting married on the score that he might breed a race of swearers. Then of course he would swear all the more.

We regret that we cannot answer A's inquiry as to why the gentlemen who collect the garbage leave the lids of the cans on the ground. It may be of course, an act of thoughtful courtesy, the desire to save the owner the trouble of taking the lid off. Or it may be to give the owner some fun in searching for it in the snow. We don't know. "A" had better ask a policeman, or better still the garbage gentleman.

A Dream That Came True.
From the London Chronicle.

Probably the only recorded instance of a dream that came true, which was authenticated by the dreamer relating it at once to a number of persons, was that concerning the assassination of Spencer Perceval in 1812. Mr. J. Williams, living at Redruth, in Cornwall, on May 3, 1812, eight days before the occurrence, dreamt three times in the same night that he saw a Mr. Perceval shot in the lobby of the House of Commons by a man in a brown coat. The impression made was so deep that he consulted hos brother and other people as to the propriety of communicating with Perceval, but they dissuaded him. After the event he went up to the House of Commons and pointed out the exact spot where Bellingham stood when he fired.

Farewell.

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patient back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but, waking, no such matter.

—Shakespeare.

THE BUSTED MAN

By Walt Mason

The man who never has the price finds life a dismal fraud; the world presents a face of ice that simply can't be thawed.

When to the eating house he pokes to break his daily fast, the waiters wait on t'other folks, and leave him till the last. When he goes to the grocer's lair, or to the butcher's den, the clerks wake up to see who's there, then go to sleep again. There's not much honor or respect for any hopeless jay who's never able to collect enough to pay his way. Of course it's wrong; we shouldn't judge a man by what he owns; we shouldn't sneeringly say, "Fudge! He has no stack of bones!" The man whose pockets are a blank should get the cordial hand as well as one who to the bank takes coin to beat the band. But facts are facts—though they're not nice—and all the sunny smiles are for the man who has the price, the coin in forty styles. You may be long on sterling worth, but if you're short on kale, you'll find it lonesome here on earth, and protests won't avail. Your observation should suffice to teach you this is true; then always strive to have the price, and folks will play with you.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHY MENTION IT.

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—Why this interest in what everyone knows all about? If those persons at the meeting were ignorant and not responsible, who is? Have they taken proper interest in such secrecy observed in the municipal elections, and what is the Council for, if not to govern the city? "Arrest the prowlers," very ambiguous, and if undertaken it would be a surprise. As a man, I fail to see the good of government by deputations and societies if such methods are proper, and the introduction of the sex question is frequently a cloak for sabotage and crime. If women do not rule this city who does? Why mention it!

Yours, etc.,
2nd Reader.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

FRIDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-THIRD

The veteran Senator Robert Jaffray of Toronto who is eighty-two to-day, sends out these words of counsel as a birthday message to his fellow countrymen: "We have a great country, great undeveloped resources, and prospects ahead of us that may make any Canadian feel proud of the possibilities of his country. But the country's greatest need is that we should have men qualified with character and ability to develop these resources, and to raise our country to the position that it should occupy among the nations of the world. It therefore becomes Canadians to devote themselves unselfishly to the service of this country, believing that in this they will not only benefit themselves, but also their fellow countrymen and give them the satisfaction of seeing Canada take the position to which its geographical position, climate and resources entitle it."

HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 23. — The death occurred here Wednesday of Thomas Garvie. He was a native of County Kerry, Ireland, and when a lad came to Boston during the war of 1812. He settled on a farm in Antigonish county about 80 years ago. He never married and lived alone.

There are several reputable men in New Glasgow who are now at the four-score mark, who assert that when they were boys, they distinctly remember the late Mr. Garvie as a grown man close to thirty years of age. He was remarkably active for his age, and did not appear to be over 80 years.

CHAUFFEUR ARRESTED.

After Four Months Walter Reynolds Must Face Manslaughter Charge.

TORONTO, Jan. 23.—Walter Reynolds, driver of the ill-fated motor car which turned turtle on the Dundas road near Cooksville on the night of Sept. 24, causing the death of three men, was arrested by Detective Guthrie, at the former's residence on Bleeker street, yesterday. Reynolds is charged with manslaughter and criminal negligence, resulting in the deaths of Wm. McKay, Arthur Brook and James Thoms. Reynolds will be taken to Cooksville to-day for preliminary trial.

Owing to the fact that it is four months since the tragedy occurred and that two inquests—one of which was carried on to an exhaustive degree — have been held, which were followed by no further action on the part of the authorities, it is inferred that something of a startling nature has been unearthed by Constable Rutledge bearing upon the tragedy.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A RESOLUTION THAT CAUSED A YEAR OF WORRY AND AN ILLNESS

By F. A. MITCHELL

Miss Sophie Allerton awoke on New Year's morning, yawned, looked at the clock on the mantel and fell to thinking. New Year's day meant more to Miss Allerton than to most persons for it and her birthday fell together.

"Twenty-two years old!" she said. "Just think of it—twenty-two! Why, in three more years I'll be a quarter of a century old—and not married! Grandma was married at seventeen. That's five years younger than I. She has told me often that father was born when she was eighteen. And I, miserable spinster, am two decades and two years old and am not even engaged."

Miss Allerton's soliloquy having run itself out, so to speak, she ceased to think coherently, permitting herself to ramble about disconnectedly. Then her meditations took shape in the following resolution:

"On or before this day one year I solemnly resolve that I will be married, be the man I marry bright or dull, long or short, fat or lean, rich or poor."

If Miss Allerton had an intimate friend among men it was John Hardwick. John was twenty years her senior and not the kind of man that she would think of marrying, being a plain business man, who had gone to work when he was seventeen years old. Having never been to college, he knew nothing about mental or moral philosophy, philology, biology or any other ology. His main asset was horse sense. He was so old fashioned that he continued a former practice of making a New Year's call every year on the Allerton family, though it does not appear that he called elsewhere on that day.

During the afternoon of the day that Sophie made her New Year's resolution John Hardwick made his New Year's call as usual. Mrs. Allerton happened to be indisposed, and her daughter was obliged to do the honors alone.

"Another year rolled round," remarked Mr. Hardwick by way of opening the conversation, but as cheerily as if the announcement were one of congratulation instead of regret.

"Yes," replied Sophie, "and I'm one year nearer to being an old maid."

"An old maid! Why, you're nothing but a chit. It doesn't seem any time at all that I used to give you a doll every Christmas."

"Yes, and those same dolls now line the baseboard of my former playroom in the garret. But, speaking of old maids, I'm going to give you a confidence that I shall bestow upon no one else. I made a resolution this morning to be married within the year."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed John Hardwick, catching his breath. "Whom will you marry?"

"That's the problem."

"Have you any one in mind?"

"No one in particular. Besides, you must remember that it's not to be supposed that I can take my pick."

John Hardwick sat thinking for a few moments, then said, "You'd better recall that resolution."

"Why?"

"Because marriage is a matter of fate. You can't control it."

"I will control it," said Sophie, setting her lips resolutely.

"Can I help you?"

"In what way?"

"Well, you women know your own sex better than we men do, and we men know each other better than you women know us. I might warn you against tying yourself up with a bad man."

"And might suggest a good one."

"Oh, no; that would be going too far. Even in warning you against a bad one I would probably get myself disliked. But I would have the consolation of doing what I could to save you from harm."

There was a faint touch of sadness in this that set Miss Allerton to thinking in another direction.

"How selfish of me!" she said. "I have forgotten that you may desire a home and those you may love as well as I. Why have you never married, Mr. Hardwick?"

"Well," he replied, with a smile, "perhaps because it never occurred to me to fortify myself with a New Year's resolution."

January passed away, and Miss Allerton had made no further headway than to select several young men about her own age, some one of whom she might encourage to make love to her. February passed, and she had not concluded which one of them to encourage. March came in with a good deal of blustering faultfinding with herself for having done nothing. April brought a mild flirtation with a man two years younger than herself, but before the 1st of May she had concluded that there was nothing in him. When June came and the pages of the society journals were filled with announcements of forthcoming weddings and Miss Allerton remembered that she had not yet even made a beginning in the keeping of her resolution she began to worry. July and August she spent in the country, where she hoped she might meet her fate, but there is always a dearth of men at summer resorts except old fellows who have retired, husbands who spend week ends with their families, and boys.

This brought Miss Allerton to September.

John Hardwick dropped in one evening after her return to the city and asked casually how she was getting on in the matter of keeping her resolution.

"Nothing doing," was the reply. The lady seldom used slang, but this seemed quite appropriate to the situation.

"You have four months left," said John.

"But I've spent eight and haven't even made a beginning."

"Marriages have taken place within a few days after the first meeting of the contracting parties."

"Yes, and I'll warrant that 75 per cent of such marriages are followed by divorces."

Mr. Hardwick admitted that they were risky.

Miss Allerton's hopes fell thick with the October leaves, and November brought an actual misfortune. She fell ill, seriously ill. John Hardwick, realizing how his friend had set her heart on keeping her New Year's resolution and how her illness would stand in the way of her doing so, was very kind, very sympathetic. He sent her little gifts and with one of them a note stating that he had in view just the man to make her happy and as soon as she was able to receive company he would bring his friend around and introduce him. "There is still plenty of time," he added. "We shall have all of December."

Miss Allerton appreciated John Hardwick's kindly sympathy. Unfortunately she was in a low physical condition and easily worried. As has been stated, she was a resolute young woman, and with her New Year's resolution she had made a second that come what might she would keep the first. Her mother knew that something was troubling her and tried to find out what it was. But Sophie would have but the one confidant. In thanking John Hardwick for one of his attentions—some flowers—she showed her condition by a lamentation that she would not be able to go downstairs, so her doctor told her, before the middle of December, and even then if she met Mr. Hardwick's friend she would present a wretched appearance, and how could a marriage possibly come of it within two weeks? Such things were only possible in stories. The matter was hopeless.

When John Hardwick read this note he was troubled. There was evidence in it that the writer was retarding her recovery by brooding over an impossibility. Indeed, he had been informed by her doctor that some load was resting upon her mind and pulling her down. Her condition was serious. John wished he might do something to tide her over a few weeks until she should regain her strength and throw off the incubus. He pondered on the problem with the following result:

He wrote her a note in the name of one Arthur Clendenin, stating that his friend, John Hardwick, had spoken of her in such high terms that she must certainly be an estimable and attractive young woman. He (Clendenin) was tired of single life and desired a home with some one to love in it. He was sure, judging from what his friend had said of her and her picture, which had been shown him, that he should love her devotedly. "Now, get well, dear heart," he added, "so that we may be married at once."

This letter produced quite a revulsion of feeling in the invalid, which indirectly relieved the strain. It was the discovery that she did not wish to marry this man she had never seen. Now that she was at liberty to keep her resolution she felt easier about the matter. She still wished to keep it, but somehow this stranger was no more acceptable to her than a wooden man would be. She wrote John Hardwick that she was not yet so antiquated that she needed to take a dummy for a husband whom she had never seen, adding that Mr. Hardwick seemed to have conceived a strange and unaccountable desire to have her marry.

"I see," said John Hardwick, after puzzling over this inconsistent note, "you can never tell what an invalid is going to do. However, I have done all I can for her and must hope for the best."

At Christmas time it was reported to John Hardwick that Miss Allerton was much improved. The mental load seemed to have been lifted. On the last day of December she wrote him to come to see her that afternoon. Delighted at her better condition, he made the call. He was received somewhat coolly.

"Why did you take such an interest during my illness in marrying me to this Clendenin man?" she asked.

"There is no such person. I invented him to relieve your mind by making it appear possible for you to keep your resolution."

"Was it necessary to invent a man?"

"What else could I do?"

"I must be a very unattractive person, or if your friendship—for the family—were what you have always professed you would have offered to help me out in another"—

She sat with her eyes cast downward, John Hardwick looking at her, a great light breaking in on his brain.

"Are you as intent on keeping your resolution as when you made it?" he asked.

"I am."

"Will I do?"

"If you love me."

"Love you! I have always loved you."

The seeing the old year out and the new year in by the Allerton family was a supper which followed the wedding of John Hardwick and Sophie Allerton.

Precept and Practice.

The Rev. S. E. Keble tells a good "precept and practice" story. The successor to the living of Charles Kingsley told him that, although Kingsley went all over the country preaching sanitation, his own rectory was found to be in an uninhabitable condition, owing to the churchyard draining beneath the drawing room. The succeeding rector had therefore to build a new rectory and lost faith in social reformers.—Pall Mall Gazette.

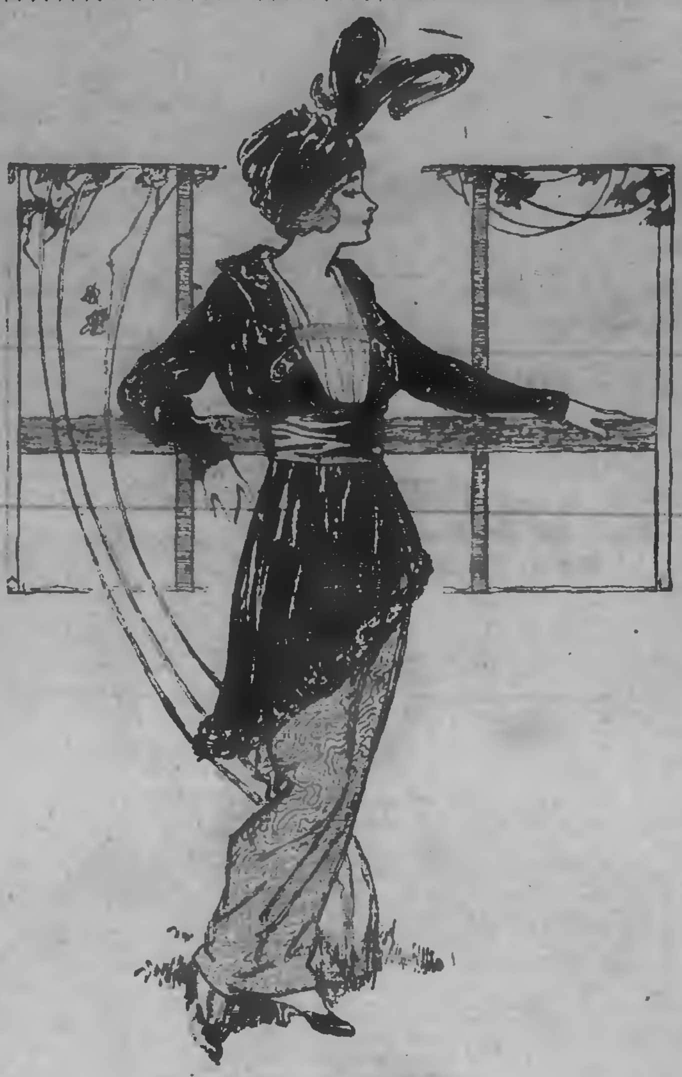
THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION



A FROCK A LA MINARET

In the tea rooms of the New York hotels, as well as in the ball rooms, and on the streets, one sees ever so many of the minaret fashions, numerous variations that are quite smart and attractive, and here is a very coquettish one with the lift at the side instead of the front. The frock shows, too, the tendency toward the combination of two materials in one garment, while the button boots and the Turkish head dress are entirely proper.

FLAME CHECKING DOORS.

Novel Device For Stopping Dust Explosion Fires In Mines.

Doors that will slam themselves shut when fire comes along and throw pans of water over the oncoming flames are the latest devices for stopping the terrible dust explosion fires in coal mines. The real marvel of the doors is that they do not wait until the fire gets to them, but promptly go into action while there is still time to shut off the flames.

The doors, placed at intervals along the mine passages are ordinarily kept swung back against the walls, and on them are balanced several pans filled with water. A dust explosion in a coal mine rushes rapidly through all the open passages, but the flames are preceded by a sudden draft or air pressure. This draft will shut the doors in time to head off the flames, and as the doors slam the water from the pans is thrown in the direction from which the fire is coming.

The same principle of utilizing the precursive air wave is the basis of most of the systems now rapidly being applied in coal mines to check the dust explosions.

One method that has had much attention of late is to keep all the passages well sprinkled with stone dust, with piles of it stored on shelves along the passageways. When the air wave comes along ahead of the fire this stone dust is stirred up into the air and acts something like a blanket in smothering the coal dust flames.—Saturday Evening Post.

Daylight at All Hours.

Dr. Herbert E. Ives of London has invented daylight, he says. Scientific men have worked for years trying to accomplish this task. Dr. Ives has been at work for at least a dozen, and he asserts he has finally produced a light which is in every way equal to sunshine. The scientist has designed a powerful incandescent lamp with a special mantle, which is so placed in a cabinet he has designed that its rays are immediately beneath a reflector. This is made of metal, and the light is forced downward through a series of delicately colored screens, so arranged that the average rays which are not found in the north light are eliminated, and the effect, it is said, is that of a perfect harmony of light similar in every way to the rays of the sun.

Some Superstitions.

Civilization occasionally hears the story that the natives far in the interior of Papua have tails. Similar beliefs have been held in many parts of the world and many ages, sometimes from impressions of apes, sometimes from more or less spiteful credulity about a people's neighbors. For centuries it was a common gibe on the continent that Englishmen had tails. It originated from the story that the people of Canterbury or Strood, having mocked at St. Thomas riding on a little ass and cut off his tail, were punished with the curse that henceforth all their boys should be born with tails. And the scoffs of other Englishmen at the "Kentish long-tails" rebounded on the whole nation, so that even in the time of Edward V. Englishmen abroad suffered from the taunt.

My First Detective Lesson

By ELLIOT MANSFIELD

"Want to learn the business, do you?" Closser said. "Well, the quickest way to learn anything is to do it. There's a gang of counterfeiters to be run down, and I'll put you on the job."

"Can't you give me something easier to begin on?" I asked.

"I give you this because it is easy," he replied. "A counterfeiter is handicapped with a workshop. He must have his contrivances to make his bills, and after he has made them he must get good money for them. Therefore he is in constant danger; he's the easiest rogue of all to get."

The job he gave me was very easy because it was already half done. A man in B., who lived alone in a house he had rented, that was big enough for a large family, was suspected, and I was sent to locate opposite him and get information as to what he was doing. I hired a room, from the windows of which I could look right down on to his house, and began my watch. Closser had told me that the surest way of getting him was through his mail. The postman often came when the suspect was out and would drop his letter in an outside box for that purpose. Seeing him do so one evening after dark, I went across the street, took the box to my room, opened it, took out the letters, steamed the gum by which the envelopes were fastened, read the mail, put the letters back in the envelope and replaced the box.

The letters were nearly all from business houses to which the man had applied for a position, nothing whatever incriminating in any of them. I wrote Closser that there must be some mistake, mentioning my capturing of the suspect's mail. My instructor replied that the letters had been purposely left in a box to throw a shadower off the track. I must look elsewhere for the real mail.

The next day a telegraph boy called at the fellow's house with a dispatch and couldn't get in. While he was ringing I went over and asked him whom he wanted. He handed me a dispatch, which I opened and read. "Can't you come home for the week end?" was all there was in it, and it was signed "Mother." Giving the boy a dime, I sent him away. The envelope had been loosely gummed, and I had no trouble in putting it together to look as if it had not been opened. I shoved it under the door and went to my room. I hadn't been there long before the suspect returned, opened the dispatch, read it and went into the house.

When I reported this to Closser he wrote me that the fellow had doubtless sent the dispatch to himself to mislead a shadower. I'd better look out for some means of communication not so public. Asking me if there were any deliveries of supplies made at the house, I told him that a baker's boy carried a loaf of bread there every morning. Closser wrote me to lie in wait for a loaf and take it in. I didn't see any sense in doing so, but obeyed. The next morning I was up early, and when the boy came along and left the bread I went circuitously across the street, took the loaf and broke it into small pieces. Finding nothing in it, I reported the fact to my chief, who replied that if I had been seen by the man opposite I had blocked my own game. One thing I noticed—no more bread was left at the house.

Closser wrote me that it might be a good idea to scrape an acquaintance with the suspect. I met him (purposely) just before he went into his house and asked him to tell me the way to the Union depot. He seemed as willing to talk as I was, and I soon learned that his uncle owned the house he was in and permitted him to room there while he looked for a position. This seemed to explain everything, and I wrote to Closser that he had sent me on a fool's errand. I was tired of it and was going home. He replied that I'd better remain one day longer, which I did.

The next day about noon I saw several men loitering around the suspect's house and presently saw the suspect led out with a pair of bracelets on his wrists. I was dumfounded. Not knowing any better way to find out the facts, I went home and straight to Closser.

"Who arrested that young man?"

"He was arrested by my order."

"But I've found out nothing against him."

"No, you haven't, but others have. You wanted to learn something, and I sent you where you could do so. I had the fellow nearly cornered and sent you to watch him in order to throw him off the track of the real detectives. I gave you one point, but you bungled it and put us back by your inexperience. The man received his mail baked in bread, but only on certain days, or, rather, when a mail was sent him. On the day you captured the loaf that contained nothing he was watching you and saw that his mail carrier was known. The telegram he sent himself purposely to fool you."

"But how did he know I was watching him?"

"Oh, you couldn't watch a man from an opposite window with state prison staring him in the face without his getting on to it sooner or later. But you were of great value to us."

Many a woman's nerves would not be worn to a frazzle if she would quit worrying about things she cannot help.

REMINISCENCES BY ONE WHO KNEW STRATHCONA

"I don't wonder at Lord Strathcona being active and full of business even when nearing the century mark," said an old Hudson Bay Company factor who worked with his lordship for years in Labrador. The chat was on the occasion of Lord Strathcona's ninety-third birthday.

"I remember that very frequently, when I was dining with him, he would excuse himself on the ground that he had something very pressing which must be done. He would then leave us. If you looked at his house at any hour of the night you would see his light shining, yet he was up so early in the morning that he had half a day's work done before others had commenced. We used to wonder if he got any sleep at all. I can truly say that he was the personification of energy. That was the secret of his success, and the reason of his long life and continued robust health."

From Labrador to Montreal.

"What about that tramp from Labrador to Montreal which young Mr. Smith undertook?"

"It was a great feat, yes, but, though I don't want to rob anybody of his laurels, I did the job myself once. You may say that at the time the Hudson Bay Company owned most of the country—Labrador, the Northwest Territories and what is now called New Ontario. They bad a contingent at their disposal. I do not know if I am right, but I think that Lord Strathcona was the last Governor under the old regime. Young Mr. Smith rose from the position of junior clerk to be land commissioner. That was the official who had to attend to all the details of the land sales of the company. He rose step by step, and deservedly, too, for he was, as I have said, the incarnation of energy. He was bound to succeed, although he could not have dreamed for himself any such future as he realized.

"Do you recall the first trouble with Riel? Lord Wolsely was sent up to quell it with an armed expedition. Mr. Smith was sent up to quell it by diplomacy. He succeeded, and if we have a peaceful West, instead of the blood-stained West of our neighbors, we may thank the efforts of Donald Smith for it. He it was, too, who negotiated with the people for the cession to the Dominion Government of the vast territory held by the Hudson Bay Company. The real estate in one ward in Winnipeg today would pay the price Canada gave for this magnificent heritage, this great territory, larger than several of the European kingdoms put together. He thoroughly understood the Indian and half-breed nature, and they had confidence in him, because he was ever just in all his dealings with the aborigines and their descendants.

"Ungava is far north, but I did not experience much cold when I lived there. The Esquimaux live in igloos during the winter and fish and hunt for an existence. When the snow becomes too dirty to live in they simply move into a new one. The Moravian church has missionaries who work among the Esquimaux of Northern Labrador, or Ungava, and they seem to produce results. Dr. Grenfell's work is rather among the white fishermen on the Newfoundland coast of Labrador, but both have their justification in results.

The Hudson Bay Company still have their station in Ungava, still trade with the Indians and Esquimaux; still obtain furs with which to deck the fashionables in London and elsewhere.

As a Young Man Here.

"I remember when Lord Strathcona was a young man and lived on Cote des Neiges Hill, Montreal. Sir George Simpson lived in Lachine, but I do net thing that Mr. Smith did. There is a common notion that he lived much of his life in the Northwest. This is contrary to the fact. Of course in his later years he became acquainted with the West, and indeed did much to open it, through his connection with the Hudson Bay Company and the C. P. R., but he spent most of his early life in Ungava. The house in which he lived, you see, is a substantial one, but elegance would have been out of place at Mingan, which was the trading post. Every young man who came out to the Hudson Bay Company at that time was indentured as an apprentice. He proceeded from grade to grade according to his merit.

"Lord Strathcona achieved great success and won high position, but he thoroughly deserved them. It might be said that the place in which he lived was not inviting, but that did not matter. The work had to be done, and he was bound to carry it forward. He was kind to all about him, but he was about his master's business in season and out of season.

Donald Smith's Early Days.

"Why did you come up without orders? Go back to your post, sir." The man who uttered these words was the lord, it might be said, of a continent—Sir George Simpson, the head of the old Hudson's Bay Company — imperius, strong to govern rough elements, unquestioned over-lord of the Indians, uncompromising master of the handful of whites who in the trackless wilds directed the red men how to make fortunes for the group of splendid adventurers, who taking their lives in their hands made themselves unthinkably rich. By the toil and daring of the natives were the adventurers enabled to keep their women folk in softness and deck them with jewels in far-off London.

Sir George could unbend and many a time he did at his headquarters in Montreal and Lachine, but he exercised an iron rule. He was to be obeyed.

"I left my post, sir, because my eyes were very bad, and I came to Montreal to have them examined."

"You should have waited for permission. Return to your duties."

That would mean today, perhaps, to take a street car at the furthest. When the command was uttered it meant a tramp over 2,000 miles on snow shoes.

How He Came to Canada.

The young man was Donald, Smith junior officer in the service of the Hudson Bay Co., at Labrador. He had come out from Scotland to make his way in the world. His parents were comfortably off, and the lad had a good education, but there were adventures in the New World. There was place and fortune to be made.

In dealing with the early life of Lord Strathcona, many said that he came out to this country as a steerage passenger, being unable to pay for better accommodation. His Lordship in a personal letter to the writer in 1899, said:

"I have never contributed anything, either verbally or in writing, with regard to my own doings, and necessarily from this cause references to me cannot be wholly free from error. One of the inaccuracies which one comes across now and then is that I am represented as having come to Canada as a steerage passenger. Although I should have no cause to, or idea of being ashamed of having done so, I really did come as a first class cabin passenger on one of the old liners, to Quebec just before the introduction of steamship navigation, to enter the service of the Hudson Bay Company as a junior officer."

On the Road to Fortune.

So in Labrador the youth went to work. There he put on his snow shoes. There he slept out at night, rain or shine, with the sky for a covering. There he laid in that stock of robust health, which carried him past four score and ten, strong and vigorous as the average man at fifty.

But the glare of the sun on the almost perpetual snow of the region told on his eyes. He told the writer that he suffered intolerably. Then one day he put on his snow shoes and set out on that march to Montreal having had his eyes attended to, he called on Sir George, who said to the young man, "Back to your post, sir."

"That was the turning point in my life," said Lord Strathcona in his chat with the reporter. "Had I disobeyed that order the whole course of my life would have been different."

But the sense of duty was strong in the youth. He returned to his work making the long and hazardous journey safely. For years he labored in the inhospitable wilds.

The Secret of His Health.

"With no dream of his commanding future, yet doing the duty nearest him, he was unconsciously gaining a robust constitution, which has enabled him to enjoy life to the great age that he reached."

"How does your Lordship account for such good health at such an advanced age?" he was delicately asked by newspaper representative when he had passed the fourscore and ten mark.

"By simple living," he replied. "I have only eaten two light meals a day for over forty years; by constant work; by not thinking of self; by doing that which was nearest steadily and regularly, without fuss or excitement. Possibly, too, I might quote as applicable to myself the lines from Shakespeare's 'As You Like It'—the lines addressed by the bold servant Adam to his master, Orlando, as a reason why he should take the old man with him in his wanderings:

"Though I look old, I am as strong lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood;
Nor did, with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility.
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter—
Frosty, but kindly.'"

HOPE FOR COMPROMISE

Senate Leader Would Like the Naval Question Settled by Consent

OTTAWA, Jan. 23.—The leaders of the Senate, Hon. Mr. Lougheed, the Government leader, and Sir George Ross, the Opposition leader, resumed the debate on the address yesterday.

On the financial situation he said he could not agree with either of those who held the skies cloudless, or that Canada was on the verge of serious financial depression. "To my mind," Sir George said, "Canada is midway between the two positions, and with care and prudence could shortly restore prosperous conditions and again march forward with giant strides."

After referring to the fact that the naval bill would not be introduced this year, Sir George said:

"Last year the Government introduced its bill with the amendment that there was an emergency, and that the safety of the Empire was imperilled. Everyone was alarmed at first, but as time went on and the discussion of the bill proceeded the emergency evaporated." In conclusion he urged that the parties compromise on the question.

Hon. Mr. Lougheed, the Government leader, referring to Sir George's allusions to financial conditions, said to remove the duty on food in Canada would only reduce the customs taxation of the people by $1.25 each.

In explaining the Government's attitude in not introducing the naval aid bill this session, Mr. Lougheed said he was glad to see Sir George and his party concurred as to defence. It was up to them to make the next move, and he hoped that before the session was over there would be an intimation that the Liberal party was willing to join in some practical plan for defence.

Senators Power, Casgrain and Daniel continued the debate, the latter adjourning it until to-day.

ANCIENT MEDICINES.

Curious Drugs Were Used by the Doctors of Laodicea.

The city of Laodicea was noted for its doctors and its drugs. An especial and noted school of medicine flourished in Laodicea. We are told that "this school of physicians followed the teachings of Herophilos, who flourished about 300 years before Christ and who, on the principle that compound diseases require compound medicines, began that strange system of heterogeneous mixtures, some of which have only lately been expelled from our own pharmacopoeia."

The fearful and wonderful combination of drugs given by some modern doctors would seem to indicate that they still belong to this school of Laodicea. One of the medicines for which Laodicea was famous was an ointment for "strengthening the ears," whatever that may mean, while another medicine of still more interest to the student of revelation was the phrygian powder, made in part from a peculiar kind of stone pressed into tabloids, afterward powdered and mixed with some unguent to be rubbed on the eye as a cure for the various diseases which afflict the optics in eastern countries. The world famous Galen speaks of both of these remedies in his pharmacopoeia.—Christian Herald.

ONTARIO DELEGATES ASK FOR REFORM LEGISLATION

City Officials, Laborites, City Beautifiers, Motorists and Others, Ask That Municipal Act Be Amended, Indian Reserves Better Organized

TORONTO, Jan. 23.—With a schedule calling for radical amendments to the Municipal Act, better organization of Indian reserves, the appointment of a commission to study city planning on a large scale and the creation of a municipal department of the Provincial Government, a deputation representing the Ontario Municipal Association, the Trades and Labor Council, the Civic Guild, the Toronto Board of Trade, Toronto Housing Co., Ontario Motor League and city councils from different cities, waited upon Hon. W. J. Hanna yesterday.

One thing asked was that individual debenture bylaws be made unnecessary, and that the Provincial Board of Health be relieved from the duty of passing upon the various branches of local waterworks systems. This worked in with the desire for a commission to advise upon town planning, housing, the laying out of streets, abolition of slums and kindred problems. The Municipal Act should be so amended to give the commission jurisdiction over all these matters.

Hon. Mr. Hanna, in reply, stated that such a movement had been under consideration for some time and that it was to the interest of all municipalities to learn of each others' failings. He asked for suggestions as to eligible commissioners and promised a Cabinet discussion.

President Richter, of London, argued for caution in amending the Assessment Act so far as it concerned judges and federal officials, because of an action now before the courts. This also applied to the rate of speed in motoring through cities. Both propositions were postponed for settlement.

The disadvantages of a large number of bylaws, were outlined by A. K. Bonell, of Brantford, and Samuel Kent, of Hamilton. They felt that 200 bylaws at present might be voted on in a general bill.

The suggestion that extensions to sewer service should not need the sanction of provincial officers, came from St. Thomas, but did not gain much sympathy from the Minister. He was afraid that carelessness would appear and abuses result.

Brantford complained that the Indian reserves in the vicinity of that city were causing heavy burdens to be borne. The Indians did not share in public improvements, and their treaty money was not shared with the city treasury, so that the latter footed their bills.

The slum proposition, which has been presented to the Government before, was revived by K. H. Dunston, of the Toronto Board of Trade, Col. Ponton, of Belleville, James Stevenson (appearing for labor), R. D. Fairbairn (for the C. M. A.), and Frank Beer. They urged that the present lack of city planning was multiplying the feeble-minded inmates of provincial institutions.

In addition to the spokesmen there were numerous civic delegates from all parts of Ontario.

SAM LUTTRELL LEFT WIDOW IN WINDSOR

WINDSOR, Jan. 23.—Announcement is made that the late Dr. Luttrell of Toronto, and Miss Bessie Margaret Drake, of this city, were secretly married.

The deceased conducted revival services here about three years ago and the acquaintanceship then formed ripened into love, culminating in a marriage which was kept quiet. Dr. Luttrell died some few days ago in Colorado. The first intimation the widow received was through the newspaper announcement here.

She is the daughter of J. W. Drake, a prominent furniture dealer, ex-Mayor, and the oldest merchant in Windsor. She has just returned from attending the funeral in Toronto.

PRESERVATION OF WILD LIFE IN THE PROVINCE

Abolish the Marketing of Wild Ducks and Other Game

A great many people entertain pessimistic views regarding the attitude of law-making bodies toward wild life.

If the facts of the situation as it is to-day could be realized by the compilers of the game laws and others inconnection, it would without doubt revolutionize the whole system governing a more productive routine for the people and sportsmen, as well as followers of this line of recreation.

Considering briefly the undisturbed natural element and conditions are paralleled factors in the prompting and fostering of species—it is only natural to feel that the government has no legitimate right to withhold legislation that would elevate and promote the growth of "Wild Life." The far-seeing and conserving people demand it and natural conditions would stimulate it, if it was not repelled by the unreasonable trend of disasters that parallel the life course of the bird creation.

It would be only natural to think they would rise to the minimum of countless thousands in years gone by.

The waning of this once great colony is due only to the merciless ravages of civilization and the biased prejudices of the compilers of the laws governing the conserving of that great luxury which has been given to us to trust.

The duty of the friends of wild life is to furnish the law makers with evidence that they can judge and in return for that respect have the experience and suggestions of the pioneer sportsman.

In any matter touching wild life which involves the making of an important law, every conscientious legislator desires to be shown the need of it, and this is necessarily right once the demonstration has been fully and satisfactorily made—favorable action is reasonably certain.

The prevailing feeling throughout the Province is in high evidence with the mass of the people for more stringent laws that not only partially hampers the retarding of recuperation but that it strikes the death blow at the vitals where lies the source of destruction.

The interests of a small aggressive and wealthy minority lie in the direction of its defeat. The temper of the present legislature is such that amends can be made at once with very little opposition.

The advantages in the abolition in the marketing of "wild ducks" and other game are legion and well known to every sane person, and several formulas with suggestions have been offered. In view of this and the coming issue would involve a code of stringent laws to barely sustain the present minimum for a short term of years. Here apparently is a trio necessity in order named:

1—The abolition of the market.

2—The open season bag limit of 100 ducks per man.

3—Shooting license and badge with nominal fee. In addition to this may follow the day's bag limit as well.

Market shooters readily announce their consent to desist from their extremes in killing—providing the law was such that it would justify them with others in a reasonable bag limit for the season and totally abolish the marketing with restrictions that place all on the same basis, but as it has been heretofore permitted of unlimited slaughter to the climax of not only hundreds—but in some cases thousands—in the open season.

The market gunner as a consequence strives to outstride his competitors in the race so be may clutch the object of his pursuit throughout the period of the flight as long as the campaign of the open season lasts.

The majority of the large slaughter grounds in Ontario are heavily fed with grain in the open season that drain the ducks from the smaller marshes and tributary feeding localities to the greater area where wholesale system of grain distribution is mechanically arranged in the majority by the market shooter, stimulated by the game dealers, whose thirst for the annihilation of the birds is never quenched. These are reverse agencies that oppose a reasonable distribution that would reach those who return from a day's recreation amply handed.

For the benefit of those who are not acquainted with the facts of the situation, is given here the approximate estimate made by careful audit of the season's report made at the several killing grounds in a part of the Province, as well as heretofore in the main points of the Unites States by market shoters. These figures do not include the fringe of the toll taken by the rational plain sportsman on either side of the border.

Long Point, Ont., year 1913, 63,000; Rond Eau, 25,000; Mitchell's Bay, 17,000; Detroit River marshes, 22,000; Rice Lake Vicinity, 20,000. Total, 147,000 ducks.

In the United States there are three great killing grounds, as follows:—Great South Bay, Barnegat Bay and Carrituck Sound.

Sixteen species of water fowl winter here off the coasts of Virginia and North Carolina. Of the latter, a safe estimate is made of 200,000 ducks killed annually for the markets, hotels and restaurants. These figures do not include 2,000 wild geese which were shipped from Carrituck Sound in March 1911. The ducks alone shipped from Norfolk, Va., in above year were 350,000.

This wil demonstrate the tremendous toll from the water fowl in these waters. It is only a question of a very short time when the ducks will be exterminated, unless we can stop the slaughter.

Some persons may take exception to the annual toll taken in the south by market gunners to offset the closer restrictions in Ontario, and throughout Canada, in this the policy of playing grab either one way or the other, is not to be considered in the issue of what is becoming to our deportment as standard types of the modern sportsman and consumers of wild life. Twenty-one years ago Ontario abolished spring shooting, a tribute to her loyalty. Since the advent of this commemorate act many of the States have followed in the wake. Its the issue of what is OUR duty that others follow.

The U. S. have 18 States safely housed against the marketing, besides about 50 per cent. have the gun and badge license. Michigan has just cleaned house in 1913 and 8 more States are pending laws that are likely to take effect in 1914. So the reader may form his opinion as to the trend in the direction of wild life conservation of both countries. Federal laws, as well as international concessions, will avail a good deal along these lines.

The issue is simple. Preserve the remnant of this wild life which has been given to you in trust by firm and resolute measures, or see it vanish forever.

It is the sacred duty of every loyal sportsman and others to try and save the migratory birds of our country that has been given to us in trust. Consult your local representative and write to The Honorable The Minister of Public Works and the Hon. the Provincial Secretary, Parliament Buildings, Toronto. You will receive a courteous acknowledgement.

In this the press of our Province has a greater duty than a naturalist who never shoots birds, either for sport or food. "Come over into Macedonia and help us."

THEY WALK ARM IN ARM

Churchill and Lloyd George Evidently Made Peace

LONDON, Jan. 23.—Premier Asquith apparently provided a solution at yesterday's Cabinet meeting of Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd-George's difficulty in making both ends of the budget meet, for the Chancellor and Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, left the conference arm in arm as though there was never a vestige of a quarrel between them.

That Mr. Churchill will get the four capital ships he insists upon, is accepted in naval circles as an assured fact, while the other departments will have little expenditure.

In the meantime, according to the Unionists, Mr. Lloyd George's championship of the "Little Navy" faction has brought into line again a strong contingent of the nonconformist government supporters, who are showing restlessness at the forcing of Protestant Ulster under the rule of a Catholic majority.

The Cabinet postponed its final decision on the naval estimates until next week.

FEW LIVES LOST.

Report of Casualties In Volcano Disaster Greatly Exaggerated.

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—An official report giving the total of the casualties and damage caused by the eruption, earthquake and tidal wave of last week on the Japanese Island of Sakura and in the Town of Kagoshima has been received by the Japanese consul-general here. The report says:

"On Sakura nine villages, composed of 840 houses, were destroyed out of the total of 18 villages on the island. The deaths among the population were not so considerable as at first believed, and probably unexpectedly small.

"In Kagoshima estimates place the deaths at 18, the severely injured at 87 and the slightly hurt as 71.

In Kimotsu and Kira Counties the damage caused by falling ashes and pumice stone affected 20,000 people, who will need relief.

Did as He was Ordered.

A new boy had gone on board a West India ship, upon which a painter had also been employed to paint the ship's side. The painter was at work upon a staging suspended under the ship's stern.

The captain, who had just got into a boat alongside, called out to the new boy, who stood leaning over the rail, "Let go the painter!"

Everybody should know that a boat's painter is the rope which makes it fast, but this boy did not know it. He ran aft and let go the ropes by which the painter's staging was held. Meantime the captain was wearied with waiting to be cast off.

"You rascal!" he called. "Why don't you let go the painter?"

"He's gone, sir," said the boy briskly. "He's gone—pots, brushes and all!" —London Standard.

SHORT CHANGE GRAFT.

An "Honest" Industry That Does Big Business in New York.

"One form of honest graft a hotel keeper has to fight the hardest in this town is 'accidental short changing,'" said the manager of a very popular hotel near the Grand Central depot, famous for its oyster bar.

"The same sort of 'honest graft' obtains at almost every cash changing place in the city where there is a netting on the cashier's desk to protect the cash and a lower bar of wood to hold up the netting or glass screen. This bar of wood or metal runs across the hand hole for change The cashiers have figured out the angle of vision of all men, short and tall, and the distance they stand from the desk to receive their change.

"Say a dollar is changed to take out 30 cents. The 'accidental short change' artist will push forward the 70 cents in coin, but his hand will halt one dime that is hidden from the angle of vision of the man getting change by the line of the bar over the cash hand hole. If the man is in a hurry or absentminded he grabs the change he sees and rushes off without one dime. Always stop, stoop and look if in doubt.

"And you would be surprised to know how much money is left on cashiers' counters, box offices, subway ticket booths and other places. I'll wager $100,000 is short changed annually in New York. They never call you back." —New York World.

Seeking a Check.

"Show me something in the way of a small check," commanded Slopay.

"One minute," interposed the tailor. "Suppose you show me something of the same sort first."

Serene Confidence.

"What would you do if you were to hear that your husband was taking his stenographer to lunch?"

"I shouldn't believe it. My husband's stenographer is a man with a cork leg."

THE VOTE ON LAURIER'S AMENDMENT TO-MORROW

Maritime Members Occupy Most of the Time in Presenting Arguments For an Irreducible Minimum of Members.

OTTAWA, Jan. 23.—The debate upon the address was resumed in the House yesterday afternoon, and will continue until Tuesday, when there will be a division upon the Laurier amendment, censuring the Government for having taken no action to relieve the financial depression.

The discussion yesterday was carried on mainly by members from the Maritime Provinces, who complained of the reduction in Parliamentary representation which the provinces by the sea will suffer under redistribution. They include Clarence Jamieson, the Conservative member for Digby, N.S., Mr. Turgeon, of Gloucester, N.B.; Mr. Hughes, Liberal member for Kings, and Mr. Donald Nicholson, Conservative member for Queen's, P.E.I.

Upon the orders of the day being called, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux interpellated the Government respecting the mail service between Canada and Great Britain. He said there was much dissatisfaction with the service among the business people of Toronto and Montreal. Important letters for the English mail were held two or three days to await the next sailing from Halifax, instead of being despatched via New York.

Postmaster Pelletier pointed out in reply that the sender of a letter could route it to suit himself. If he endorsed on the envelope "via New York" the letter would be sent in that way. Mr. Pelletier admitted that the present service from Canada was not as good as had been anticipated. The Allan Line had not put on their big fast steamers, the Alsatian and the Calgarian, although the Calgarian would begin its sailings from Halifax next week. The existing arrangement was a temporary one, expiring May 1.

Hon. J. D. Hazen introduced a bill to amend the Shipping Act by some changes in the law respecting collisions at sea and salvage in accord with the recommendations of the international convention held at Brussels in 1910.

The debate upon the address was resumed by Mr. Jamieson (Digby, N.S.) He declared that the high cost of living had nothing to do with the tariff, and in any event the farmers of this country would not consent to the tariff protection they now enjoyed being taken away from them.

Present conditions were caused, he said, by under-production. The Laurier Government by an unwise policy of immigration had greatly increased the number of consumers of food without any corresponding increase in the number of producers. Better roads, intensive cultivation, parcels post and rural mail delivery were the best remedies, he said.

Mr. Hughes (King's, P.E.I.) followed. The Dominion Senate, he believed, had performed a great public service by throwing out the naval aid bill. The three dreadnoughts were unnecessary, as the Government tacitly admitted by not introducing the bill. The P. E. I. member sharply criticised the Minister of Militia, who, he said, had gone to Europe with twenty colonels and a retinue of servants and secretaries The junket had cost $100,000, which the Minister should pay out of his own pocket.

Mr. Schaffner (Souris) declared that the Borden Government had granted every demand of Western Canada. He commended the administration for having enlarged the boundaries of Manitoba, for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway and for its aid to agricultural education.

Mr. Turgeon (Gloucester, N.B.) urged the calling of an inter-provincial conference to consider the question of representation of the Maritime Provinces in the House of Commons.

He was followed by Mr. Nicholson (Queen's P.E.I.), who gave a lengthy and exhaustive review of the island's relations with the Federal Parliament since 1873 as regards representation. He claimed that Prince Edward Island was entitled to six members as an irreducible minimum.

Service for Lord Strathcona's Funeral to be Held at Westminster

LONDON, Jan. 23.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—The Colonial Office issued the following statement last night:—

"The Secretary of State for Colonies, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, after consultation with the Dean of Westminster, has suggested to the family that a service in connection with the funeral of Lord Strathcona should take place in Westminster Abbey as a mark of the public respect and esteem entertained for him in every part of His Majesty's dominions.

"Mrs. Bliss Howard and other members of the family, in view of the very general desire that the service should be in Westminster Abbey, have informed Hon. Lewis Harcourt of their acceptance of this suggestion. The service will take place at 11.30 a.m. and interment afterwards at Highgate Cemetery in accordance with the personal wishes of Lord Strathcona, with the full approval of his colleagues.

"The Dean of Westminster offered to the family the privilege of having Lord Strathcona's body interred in the Abbey, but the late peer's desire had been so definitely expressed that the offer was declined."

PUZZLES TO SCIENCE.

Badly Timed.

"It's a great pity," said the convicted burglar to his counsel, "that you couldn't have made that closing speech of yours at the opening of the case."

"I don't see how that would have improved matters," said the advocate.

"It would, though," explained his client. "Then the jury would have been asleep when the evidence came on, and I'd have stood some chance."

LAYING A BRITISH GHOST.

East India Natives Used an English Formula, So They Thought.

Lord Crewe, secretary of state for India, told a story of the jungle when bidding goodby to a number of officers newly appointed to government service in India at an informal reception at the India office.

"I remember hearing years ago in India a story of a young subaltern who went alone on a shooting expedition away into the wild country of the Malabar coast. The poor fellow was attacked by fever in the jungle, died and was buried, and the people where he died felt themselves in no little difficulty as to how his spirit might be pacified and not haunt them.

"It was necessary, therefore, to place upon his grave something distinctively British, which would keep the spirit quiet. They were a hundred miles from any cantonment, but I was told that a small party of these simple folk went down to this cantonment and purchased a bottle of whisky, two bottles of soda water and a paper of cheroots, which they placed on the grave, and I was told that, in spite of difficulties, every year a party of them trotted down for the same purpose.

"It seems a matter for regret that a concrete expression of England's national genius could not have found outlet in a different formula."—Pall Mall Gazette.

IN A FAMOUS CATHEDRAL.

Views From the Upper Regions of St. Paul's, in London.

The famous whispering gallery of St. Paul's cathedral, London, is reached by a flight of twenty steps from the library. This gallery, which is about 210 feet above the cathedral floor, is noted for a curious echo and is so named because a whisper uttered near the wall on one side of it is distinctly audible to a person standing on the other side, a distance of 108 feet in a straight line.

From this point a good view is obtained of the church interior, the tessellated pavement of which looks like a minute chessboard, but it is liable to cause giddiness to any one not used to heights. It also commands the best view of Thornhill's paintings and of the cathedral generally.

From the whispering gallery 118 steps lead up to the stone gallery, an outer gallery with a stone parapet running round the base of the dome. Here in the clear sky of early morning may often be obtained a wonderful view of London, a view which is still more extensive from the golden gallery above the dome.

From this point the lantern may be ascended by a spiral staircase to the golden ball, where six persons may stand at once.—Argonaut.

One's Own Company.

One of the tests of character is the ability of a man to find satisfaction—without egotism—in his own society. One who cannot be alone without a miserable restlessness must be the victim of a structural defect in his personality. The well stored mind provides company enough for an occasional interval of solitude. He who has read well and thought much and carefully observed has introduced himself to a society which will afford him entertainment when none, in the flesh, is present. If a man is afraid to be alone it must be because he is afraid of his own thoughts or because his thoughts are few and scattered and cannot fill the vacuity. Some of us cannot afford to think, when, as the poet puts it, "but to think is to be full of sorrow." At such a time we catch eagerly at any diversion that puts to rout the shadows.—Philadelphia Ledger.

How He Learned English.

Wing See some years ago came to New York from San Francisco to see the big city before returning to his native land, where he hoped to live on the money which he had saved. He wanted to learn a little English and rented a room on the east side over a store. He was a quiet man of good habits and soon made himself useful in the store, where he gave his time in exchange for the language experience. After six months he was ready to go to China, and after all arrangements for his trip had been made he went to Chinatown to show his English. He was surprised to find that his English speaking countrymen did not understand him and finally learned to his horror that he had lived in a German district and had learned German by mistake.—New York Tribune.

Not Dead.

The big red touring car struck a pedestrian, rolling him in the mud and maltreating him in general. The owner ran back, greatly excited, after stopping his car.

"Is he dead?" he asked anxiously of the medical man who was attending the victim.

"Oh, no!" replied the doctor cheerfully. "He's not dead. He's merely run down."—Chicago News.

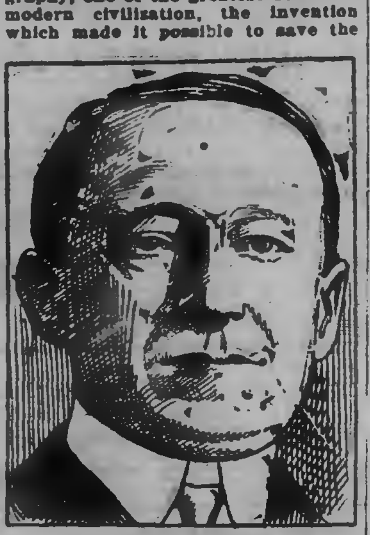
BELIEVED IN MARCONI

WAS ONE OF FEW WHO DID NOT DERIDE INVENTOR.

The Discoverer of Wireless Tells of a Chance Acquaintance Who Gave Him Good Cheer at a Time When Radio Messages Were a Bit of a Joke — Wireless Telephony Is Marconi's Present Quest.

What a difference just a few years make; When it was first hinted, not so very long ago that an Italian had invented a scheme for transmitting messages through space without the aid of wires, nearly everybody smiled. Now when a story is flashed over the wires to the effect that Guglielmo Marconi has actually talked across the Atlantic by wireless telephony almost everybody is willing to believe it, and is very much disappointed to learn that the modest wireless wizard has only succeeded in transmitting unintelligible sounds across the briny deep, and that wireless telephony has not been successful up to the present beyond a distance of two or three hundred miles. However, when he says that it is only a matter of a short time before the great feat is accomplished, and we will be able to stand on one Atlantic shore and converse with friends on the other, we accept his statement on faith, and look forward to the event. Far he has made good with his wireless telegraphy, one of the greatest booms of modern civilization, the invention which made it possible to save the passengers of the Republic, and hundreds of those on board the doomed Titanic and Volturno.



GUGLIELMO MARCONI.

Marconi says that the turning point in his career he dates "from the time I succeeded in establishing communication between Lavernock and Bream Downs, a distance of nine miles, and I think after that even the most sceptical were inclined to believe that there were at least possibilities of success in my system.

"Shortly after this I met a man at an hotel in Ireland, who was confident that there were possibilities in my system of accomplishing even bigger wonders by it than I hoped for. He did not know who I was. At dinner—we were dining by ourselves—he asked me what I thought of 'this Marconi fellow and his wireless experiments.'

"I expressed the modest opinion that I thought there might be something in them. 'Something in them,' he exclaimed; 'let me tell you that fellow is on the biggest thing of the century.' I smiled incredulously, though I shall not deny the man's enthusiasm pleased me. I had come across so few like him.

"'You need not smile, sir,' he continued, 'that man, Marconi, is going to do something that will startle creation.'

"He may indeed succeed in sending wireless messages across the Atlantic some day, I suggested, giving expression to my secret hopes.

"'Across the Atlantic?' repeated the man. 'Why, of course, he will, and a sight longer way than that; he will get a message to the stars if there is anyone there to receive them before you or I am ten years older.'

"I left the hotel the next day, and have not seen my friend since, but I fear, as I have not yet succeeded in doing all he predicted I would, that his enthusiasm may have somewhat evaporated.

"I am constantly asked to say something about the future of wireless telegraphy. Some people, like my hotel friend I have mentioned, seem to think that I shall sooner or later devise a system of establishing communication with some of the heavenly bodies. These sort of ideas do not come into my mind at all. I am a very practically-minded individual, and nothing that does not seem to me within the realms of practical politics has even appealed to me. I could not go deeply into this subject of the future of wireless telegraphy without becoming most appallingly technical in my language, so I shall merely confine myself to observing that wireless telegraphy is still young and has yet to grow considerably before it reaches its full development."

Women Don Trousers.

Women in London have begun to wear trousers and little smoking coats instead of the tea gown. Every kind of waistcoat is being worn out of doors, but the trousers and coat suit is only worn indoors, and generally in the afternoon. The pajama habit led the way and the smoking suit has followed. The suits resemble closely the jacket and trousers of the Chinese women.

No Butter For Britain.

OTTAWA, Jan. 23.—For the first time in sixty years, says the annual report of the Minister of Agriculture, Canada exported no butter to Great Britain. About half a million pounds was exported last year to the United States, while butter imported, almost entirely from New Zealand, amounted to over six and a half million pounds.

Fifteen Per Cent. Rotten.

LETHBRIDGE, Alta., Jan. 23.—Addressing the sixth annual meeting of the United Farmers of Alberta here, Prof. Foley, Provincial Government poultry expert, stated that 15 per cent. of all eggs marketed in Canada were rotten, owing to the carelessness of poultry raisers in marketing fertile eggs.

THE FEVERISH BEE.

Gets Hot and Worried and Literally Works Itself to Death.

Everyone who has been stung by a bee knows the burning sensation that accompanies the sting.

This is of course due to the acid that is injected by the little weapon in the bee's tail. But the experience has led to a number of sayings such as "the hot end of the bee," and so on.

It now appears, however, that the bee actually is hot. The fever with which it works sometimes develops into a temperature so great as to partly cook the honey in the hives, and to actually bake the insects themselves. Bee raisers have only recently found that this is the reason for the wiping out of many of their colonies instead of, as had been supposed, the presence of some unidentified bacilli.

We speak of people getting "into a fever" over their work or worry, and it is true that both things do raise the temperature of human beings. But no human being ever gets into such a fever over either as to cook himself to death. This the bee really do.

The dominant, all consuming desire of the worker bee is to work. It follows out this impulse until it dies. A bee will literally work itself to death. That, in fact, is how all of them die except those who are destroyed by disease or accident. The bees and the ants are the most highly specialized creatures in the world.

It appears now that this highly specialized breeding of individuals with a single dominant idea only is attended by dangers that carry their lesson to man.

The concentration of energy upon one task is so great that it keeps the bee busy every moment satisfying it. Suddenly there comes a time when the energy outpaces the work. Then up goes the temperature of the insect and it burns itself up. In the same way, if its tasks are impeded the bee worries. The unused work energy stores itself up more and more, hotter and hotter grows the bee until it dies of its own fever. The extremely curious thing is that one hot bee can apparently infect a whole hive with its temperature, and the community burns itself up.

Monks Like Cats.

Monasteries and convents seem naturally to befriend cats. When Sir Henry Layard was at Mount Athos in 1845 he noticed the number of "huge, fat cats" kept by the monks. One peculiarity struck him. The cats were almost as tailless as if they were Manx, but evidently by artificial means. "On asking for an explanation of it, I was informed by the monks that as their meals were served to them on trays placed, Turkish fashion, on low stools, round which squatted those who ate, the cats, which were constant guests at dinner and breakfast, were in the habit of sweeping off the viands and the wine glasses with their tails, which were consequently docked."

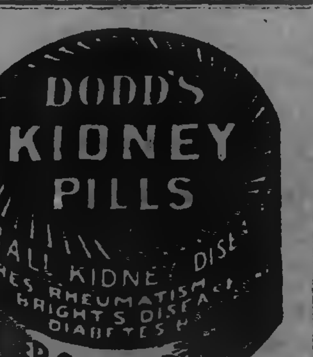
England's Finest View.

In Swinburne's opinion one of the finest views in England is to be found not far outside the four-mile radius. Churton Collins notes in his Diary on August 19, 1881, "a lunch with Swinburne at the Pines. In the afternoon we went for a walk over Putney Heath through Wimbledon. We stood for some time rapturously gazing at the scene from near the church down on to the valley beneath—a heavenly piece of English scenery. Swinburne thought it as fine as anything he knew in England. We talked incessantly about the influence of scenery on the emotions; he said it always calmed him and made him perfectly happy."

No Room For Samples.

The way of the drummer is not very easy in India. He is expected to carry around his own bedding for use on trains, soap, towels, food, and often a supply of water.

It is said that the time bar of the Greenwich observatory has never been wrong except one day in 1878, when it was a half second late.



RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

C.G.E. TEST AND TOOLROOM TIED IN LIVELY BATTLE IN MERCANTILE LEAGUE

One Man Defeated the Examiners — Bankers Won From Plumbers

DeLaval	5	Examiners	1
Test	1	Tool Room	1
Bankers	5	Plumbers	2

If the tango has anything on the movements as seen in the Mercantile Hockey League, we all want to see it done with the experts performing. They say a good laugh is as effective as a quart of medicine, and if so, the M.D.s will receive scant patronage from the two hundred fans who spent a dime and passed through the portals of the Brock Street Arena last night.

Any gymnastic stunt not contributed a la burlesque, cannot be shown in the world of amusement. Also any player who can display an entire and complete anatomy, is entitled to the honor of playing on the Examiner team and that mark of recognition is not to be despised, for the Grit septet have really and truly scored a goal. They did the trick in the first game, which saw them doing battle against the De Laval seven. And that one tally was all they did get. Swanston and Armstrong pulled the string in the first half, the former rushing the puck to the DeLaval defence, where he passed to Armstrong, who would have looked foolish had he done anything else than place the rubber behind the goal tender of the milk seperator representatives.

In the meantime the factory boys were also doing some scoring and at the end of the half the count read 3—1 in their favor. In the second half they added two more, making the final figures stand at 5—1.

It was real funny to see the Examiner forwards chase Pete Spratt around the ice, but it was funnier still to find them rushing to the nets when, in the second half, they decided that the chase was a hopeless one and one and all made for the netting in an endeavor to get there in time to assist in blocking the puck.

The teams:

DeLaval—goal, Dennie; defence, Spratt and Ryder; rover, Buyers; centre, Todd; wings, Hill and Patterson.

Examiners—goal, Cook; defence, Clancy and Swanston; rover, Lees; centre, Armstrong; wings, Manion and Heard.

C. G. E. Teams Tied

The Test and Tool Room had a lively melee in the second game, and as they say, the result was always in doubt. In the first half hockey sticks and hockey players flew in all directions and quite a number spent a term in the coop. Barrie scored for the Toolmakers in the initial period, and the nets were not bulged again until a few minutes from the final gong, when the Test evened up on a high corner shot that was coming too fast for Cassidy. With both teams on edge and looking for any old kind of an opening, the Toolmakers had a great chance to take the lead when Barrie got right in on Dwyer. He blocked in fine style. Then the play was returned to the Tool Room territory and Cassidy had a busy time. The gong sounded with the Tool Room on the defence.

Test—goal, Dwyer; defence, Breckenrid and McKennan; rover, McDougall; centre, Carter; wings, Munro and Boone.

Tool Room—goal, Cassidy; defence, McGrath and Kelly; rover, Hillier; centre, Robson; wings, Primeau and Barrie.

Bankers-5, Plumbers-2

The last game at 10 o'clock resulted in another win for the Bankers, this time the Plumbers being the victims. The game was fairly fast, and for a while it looked as though the Bankers would go down to defeat for the Plumbers led at the resting period by a score of 2—1. The money men rallied however, and rushes by Minorgan and Corkery resulted in goals and when the final gong rang the score stood 5—2 in their favor. Minorgan, Corkery and McCrimmon were the pick of the Bankers' aggregation, while Reynolds was the most effective for the Plumbers.

The teams:

Bankers—goal, McCrimmon; defence, Phelan and McCrostie; rover, Peyton; centre, Minorgan; wings, Brown and Corkery.

Plumbers—goal, Dunsford; defence, Reynolds and Mallett; rover, Dobson; centre, Helson; wings, Logan and Langre.

HOW DAVY JONES BROKE INTO THE BIG LEAGUES

The passing of Davy Jones, outfielder of the Detroit ball club in the major league, to the Toledo Club of the American Association, recalls the story of how Davy first broke into the big leagues.

Davy, who has been one of the star outfielders of the country for a number of years, is a native of Wisconsin, having been raised at Cambria, where he played amateur ball. He joined the semi-pros and soon broke into Three(III) League, playing at Rockford, Ill., under the famous old star, Hugh Nicol.

During the war between the National and American Leagues in 1900 Henry Killilea, then part owner of the Boston (American League) club, asked Tom Andrews of Milwaukee if he could land Jones and Pitcher Claude Elliott (but especially Davy), who were then with Rockford. "I undertook the task," says Andrews, "and looking over the schedule found that Rockford was scheduled at Decatur, Ill. Taking the night train out of Chicago I landed at Decatur the next morning at 6 o'clock.

"At the hotel I found the clerk half asleep, but not too much so to talk baseball. He gave me a history of most of the players and told me that four scouts were at the hotel trying to see Mr. Nicol about Jones and Elliott—Brooklyn, Cincinnati, Chicago and New York being the clubs seeking the players.

"It was evident that quick action was necessary, so at 6 a.m. I went to Jones' room, knocked lightly and received a quick 'Who's there?' The rest was easy. Davy was anxious to get into the big league and we agreed on terms within a few minutes. I had a contract ready and signed by 6.30 and at 7 a.m. we had Claude Elliott out of bed and gave him instructions to meet us in an office across the street immediately. Claude appeared at 7.30 and it took less time to get him to agree to terms than it did Davy. A young woman notary public was secured, who witnessed the signatures, and after arranging some advance money it was all over.

"The train for Chicago left at 8 o'clock and I had barely time to grab it for the gateway, having to go without breakfast, but it was better than waiting until evening.

"To say that the scouts were disappointed is putting it mildly, and Hugh Nicol was about as mad as a wet hen when he discovered that Jones had been signed, for Jim Hart of the Chicago club had offered him $2,000 for Davy's release.

"But, then, it was during war times in baseball, and the reserve rule cut no figure.

"Davy jumped into prominence and he had a successful career as a major league player, and he says he never regretted the time he signed up with Boston at 6.30 o'clock in the morning."

Yesterday afternoon at Brock St. Rink McIntyre and Soward's teams of the P. C. I., clashed in a very exciting game of hockey. The former won out by the close score of 6—5. Only six men were played on each team, with the result that some nifty individual rushes were contributed. The teams:

HOCKEY

Tomorrow night the Juniors play in Kingston, and the Intermediates in Belleville. If the Juniors can defeat the Frontenacs there will be a tie with them for the district honors, and since Dwyer has joined their ranks, their chances are much better. Captain Halpin's outfit are going down with all possible confidence, and expect to make up for their rather poor start.

The Intermediates should banish the homesters in the railroad city, but it is not always an easy task to sweep Belleville away on their own ice. The locals need the game and will be down there with that intention which will assure a good game.

The following Juniors will make the trip: Dwyer, Long, Richardson, Halpin, Rose, Barrie, Knapman, and Phelan.

The Intermediates will be: goal, Janes; right defence, Bond; left defence, Denison; rover, Giroux; centre Park; right wing, Bradshaw; left wing, Kelly.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

The Peterboro Business College challenge the Matthews-Laing hockey team to a game to be played next week at the Brock Street Rink.

The officials for tonight's games will be Dobson of Queen's, at Kingston, and Lawson Whitehead at Belleville.

The Bell Telephone System wish to challenge any hockey team in the city, to a game.

The All-Star aggregation of the Orientals and Barbers accept the challenge of The Times with the stipulation that first of all, the challengers obtain a reputation.

Architect J. W. Miller has returned to Toronto.

The Queen Alexandra School will play the King Edwards at Brock St. Rink, Saturday morning, from 10 to 11.

The ice surface of the Whitby rink is 200 by 75 feet. Lawson Whitehead says it is the finest rink, bar Kingston, in Ontario, east of Toronto.

An Extraordinary Will.

At an inquest held recently at Masterton (New Zealand) on the body of Mr. Robert J. Ewington, one of the most remarkable wills on record was produced. A witness stated that when he arrived at the spot where deceased was found Ewington asked him to get his field-glass case and rifle. The dying man said: "I have written on them," and asked witness to read the writing to him.

Deceased then asked witness to copy the writing and send it to his brother Charles at Masterton. The writing on the field-glass case, which had been scratched with a piece of wire or a nail, was as follows:

"Look after Maudie and the children. Look after things. Will H. appoint R. Dagg and Charley.—(Signed) Bob."

On the same case were scratched the words, "Hard luck!—Bob." On the butt of the rifle there were scratched these words:

"Dear Charley,—Give Will Harding every chance, and he will help Maude and my family. Put him on the right road.—(Signed) Bob."

There were also scratched on the rifle butt the words, "Don't forget Will Harding, and spare expense." Written on the bottom of the field-glass case were the following words in plain letters: "R. Dagg and Charley."

Power From Water Going Up.

Water power, as everybody knows, is obtained by the fall of water, whether it is the fall of water on an old-fashioned overshot waterwheel in a millstream or to the bottom of great steel pipes, as at Niagara Falls. An Australian community has now reversed the standard practice, and is lighting the village by power obtained from water that is not falling, but is going up. For water supply purposes a deep well was drilled at Thargomindah, in Western Queensland, and a spouter resulted. Water shot up with a rush, and still keeps a pressure of above two hundred pounds, flowing 670,000 gallons a day. The pressure is just as good to turn wheels as if it were caused by falling water; so turbines were installed and the power used to generate electricity.

Dried Grape Wine.

Among the extraordinary frauds which have been perpetrated was one put into operation by a company of schemers who told a confiding public that many fortunes were to be made by importing into England compressed dried grapes from Spain, Italy and elsewhere, then saturating them with good English water and making wine from them. It was stated in the prospectus that dried grapes could be imported at a much cheaper rate than wine and that it was possible to produce an equal quantity of wine as good as that made abroad. Thousands of pounds were subscribed by the British public, who firmly believed in the idea until the scheme collapsed.

WHAT DE THEBES SEES.

Famous Seeress Makes Her Predictions For 1914.

What will the new year 1914 bring?

This is the time of year when Parisians look with curiosity to the publication of the almanac of Mme. de Thebes. This seeress has been predicting coming events for several years, and the conspicuous thing about her predictions is that many of them have transpired. There have been failures, to be sure; but there have been many things that have come to pass just as she foretold.

It was she who predicted the fall of Khartoum and she it was who prophesied the assassination of Sadi Carnot, President of the French Republic, who was stabbed to death by Caserio while driving through the city of Lyons. Queen Victoria's death was also foretold by this remarkable woman one year before it occurred, while her most startling prediction was that of the death of President Felix Faure. It will be recalled that Faure passed away suddenly in the prime of life and while enjoying, apparently, the best of health.

Now what does she see in the future, what for 1914? These are some of the predictions:

War will continue to menace the world, as the planet Mars will predominate throughout the year.

A terrible catastrophe is predicted in London. The city will be threatened by floods as a result of inundations.

The monarchy will be restored in Portugal.

Profound changes amounting to a political upheaval will take place in Germany and the national life of that nation will be completely transformed.

The death of the Pope is predicted and this event will bring about a great change in Italy. The new pontiff will be more friendly to the Italian Government.

Riots will occur in Austria and there will be bloodshed in the streets of Vienna. The Austro-Hungary dynasty will be sorely tried and will be in grave peril.

Paris will have a favorable year, but the republic of France, taken as a whole, will be afflicted with scandals and riots.

American will have a prosperous year.

How many of these predictions will come true is a question impossible to answer, but a glance over the prophecies for 1913 made last year by the seeress is of special interest in this connection.

In her "almanac for 1912" Mme. de Thebes predicted a series of ominous events, all of which were entirely improbable, and some of the most unexpected have come true. She announced that 1913, taken as a whole, would be a bloody year; the second war in the Balkans and the Mexican revolution certainly justify that prediction.

Bulgaria, she said, would play a stupendous role in Europe. This recent events have proved to be strangely prophetic.

Another prediction included the forecast of the French seeress was that Italy would witness a great political upheaval during the year 1913. Here again have recent events confirmed Mme. de Thebes' words.

At the general elections held this month in the kingdom of Victor Emmanuel, at which men of all classes were for the first time permitted to vote, changes of vital importance to Italy and involving a complete transformation of the political map of that country took place. The Vatican, setting aside its old quarrel with the Quirinal, permitted Catholics for the first time to take part in the elections.

The Matter.

"I wonder what is the matter with me?" he said. "I have a feeling of depression, and I can't throw it off, no matter how I try."

"I know what is the matter," his wife replied. "You have an engagement with the dentist at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, you know."—Boston Transcript.

He Did Before.

"Why, Tommy," exclaimed the Sunday school teacher, "don't you say your prayers every night before you go to bed?"

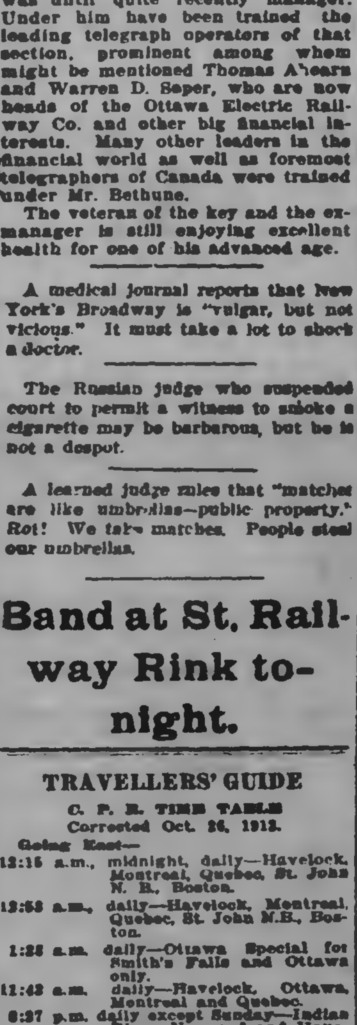
"Not any more," replied Tommy: "I uster when I slept in a foldin' bed, though."—Boston Globe.

VETERAN OF THE KEY

NORMAN W. BETHUNE IS OLDEST LIVING TELEGRAPHER.

Ottawa Man Who Celebrated His 85th Birthday Recently Is Widely Known All Over the Continent and His Recent Birthday Was the Occasion for Messages From the Ends of America.

Norman W. Bethune, who celebrated his 85th birthday recently in Ottawa, is the oldest Morse telegrapher in the world, and is perhaps one of the best known men among the veterans of the old Morse key. His friends from all parts of the continent wired congratulations to him as the oldest telegrapher in the world.



NORMAN W. BETHUNE.

Mr. Bethune was born in Montreal in 1828 and started his career as an operator in the employ of the old Montreal Telegraph Co., which was many years ago absorbed by the Great Northwestern Telegraph Co. He went to Ottawa first as manager of the Montreal Telegraph Co. and was until quite recently manager. Under him have been trained the leading telegraph operators of that section, prominent among whom might be mentioned Thomas Ahearn and Warren D. Soper, who are now heads of the Ottawa Electric Railway Co. and other big financial interests. Many other leaders in the financial world as well as foremost telegraphers of Canada were trained under Mr. Bethune.

The veteran of the key and the ex-manager is still enjoying excellent health for one of his advanced age.

Does Everything Backward.

A puzzling problem of abnormality in a girl who insisted on doing everything backward, among other things writing from right to left, has been solved by Birmingham physicians. An examination by the X-rays has revealed the fact that her heart is on the right side and some of her other organs, including the brain, are also displaced.

The case renewed interest in that of the boy who saw things upside down and wrote in that fashion. The latter came to light about two weeks ago.

The Daughters of the Empire held a bright instructive and well attended meeting in their room at the Armories, yesterday afternoon. As it was the anniversary of the late Queen Victoria's death, the members all wore bouquets of violets in memory of her. It was moved by Mrs. Sharpe, seconded by Mrs. Hall, that a resolution of sympathy be passed, assuring the council of women of the sympathy of the Daughters of the Empire in their efforts to secure the services of a police woman for our city, and this resolution was carried unanimously.

Four new members were proposed and accepted. Mrs. Clegg Regent then introduced Miss Constance Boulton of Toronto, who gave an inspiring address on many subjects of practical interest to the daughters, stating that the D. O. E. has been in existence for thirteen years and has for its object, the betterment and uplifting of all classes, giving help where it is needed, instilling into the minds of the young the great privilege of being a Canadian, why we should be patriotic, why we have been blessed under Providence with one hundred years of peace, through the protection of the British Navy, which will always be our bulwark, whether we contribute anything towards its support or not. The whole Empire desires peace, but the Hague tribunal has not prevented nations going to war.

Practical patriotism also preserves the beloved traditions of our beloved Empire. Symbolic patriotism such as the preserving of emblems, etc., should be encouraged. Intellectual patriotism and having a broad outlook catering to the best in others, especially foreigners, is to be highly commended. But the over exploitation of our country by the press which causes an over-plus of unemployed in our midst, was condemned.

In speaking of securing the services of a police woman, Miss Boulton stated that at New Westminster the president of the local council of women has been appointed police woman there, showing that it may be taken by the leading and brightest women in the country. It was moved by Mrs. Arthur Stevenson, seconded by Mrs. Hall, that a vote of thanks be tendered Miss Boulton for her most pleasant and instructive address. Dainty refreshments were then served and the meeting closed with prayer by the Regent.

Refreshments were served, and an informal program consisting of vocal solos, recitations and several short humorous speeches, which made the evening a very pleasant one.

SECRET OF GOOD BREAD.

Flour Should Be Aged in a Dry, Well Ventilated Place.

Here is a secret that many housewives do not know and even some professional bakers do not understand. Flour should be kept in a dry, well ventilated place. The temperature should be about 70.

To make good bread flour should be aged—that is, it should be kept dry and preferably where the air can reach it. Some persons warm a sack of flour and think that this will dry and age it, but such treatment does not reach the middle of the flour.

Experiments show that when flour is aged properly there is a slight loss of moisture, but the flour will absorb more water. In one test a freshly ground sack of flour after sixty days lost a little over one pound in weight, but it gained so much in absorption that it made a gain of several pounds in weight of dough over the original weight. The gluten, which is the life of the flour, also becomes more elastic, and the flour grows whiter.

There is no better way for the housekeeper than to keep a barrel or sack of flour where it will be dry and exposed to the air and also to keep a quantity of flour sifted and ready for use.—New York Sun.

Trivial Cause of a Bloody War.

In the year 1654 a Polish nobleman became obnoxious to the laws of his country by reason of his having committed a crime. He fled to Sweden, whereupon John Casimir, king of Poland, wrote to Charles Gustavus, king of Sweden, demanding the surrender of the criminal. The king of Sweden on reading the dispatch noticed that his own name and titles were followed by two "et ceteras," while the name of the king of Poland was followed by three. The missing "et cetera" so enraged the king of Sweden that he at once declared war against Poland. The war was carried on with great bitterness until 1660, when a peace was signed at Oliva, near Danzig. A contemporary writer (Kochowsky) poured out his lamentations on the war in these terms: "How dear has this 'et cetera' been to us! With how many lives have these two potentates paid for these missing eight letters! With what streams of blood has the failure of a few drops of ink been avenged!"

Oh, Wait Till He Returns!

"Why, my dear," exclaimed the good friend on finding Mrs. Newed in floods of tears, "what is the matter?"

The young wife wiped her eyes and tried to compose herself and be infumanly calm.

"Well," she began, with folded hands, "you know John is away for a week."

"Yes, dear," helped the lady friend.

"Well, he writes to me regularly, and in his—his last letter he tells me he gets my photo out and kisses it every day."

"But that is nothing for you to cry about!" exclaimed the good friend.

"Yes, it is," cried Mrs. Newed, bursting into tears afresh, "be-because I took my picture out of his ba-bag before he started ju-just for a jo-joke and put one of mo-mo-mother's in its place!"

EDITORS TO APPEAR BEFORE BAR OF QUEBEC HOUSE

President M. E. Nichols and Editor B. A. MacNab, of Montreal Daily Mail, Which Published Sensational Charges Against Quebec Legislators, Are Required To Explain—Probe Is Ordered

Special Wire to Review

OTTAWA, Jan. 23.—Feeling is profoundly aroused by charges against the Quebec Legislators. The outcome awaited here with much interest. It is felt to be not a party question, but that the whole life of the country is at stake, and that the life of Canadian people is getting low and commercialized.

QUEBEC, Jan. 23. — Before both the upper and lower Houses of the Quebec Legislature, meeting yesterday afternoon at the same time, Hon. A. Bergevin, Hon. L. P. Berard, and Mr. J. O. Mousseau, M.P.P. for Soulanges, asked their colleagues to form a Committee of Investigation as quickly as possible to consider the charges made by The Montreal Daily Mail that they had accepted bribes to pass a dummy bill, engineered through the House by a company made up mainly of detectives from the William J. Burns Detective Agency.

In the lower House, before the accused member had a chance to ask this for himself, and before most of the members had reached their places on the floor of the House, Mr. Armand Lavergne was on his feet with a long motion that included all the charges made by The Mail, and asked that Mr. M. E. Nicholls, president and managing director, and Mr. B. A. MacNab, vice-president and director of The Mail, should be brought before the bar of the House. Sir Lomer Gouin and Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Minister of Public Works, as well as Mr. Mousseau, spoke, and all insisted that a committee should be named at once to proceed with the inquiry, instead of waiting until next Wednesday as asked by Mr. Lavergne. As the Opposition insisted that this should be done the Premier said that he had no objection to having that done as well, and the motion passed that the two newspaper men should be brought before the bar on Tuesday afternoon next at four o'clock.

At the evening session the Premier moved that Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Hon. P. S. G. Mackenzie, Hon. J. M. Tellier (leader of the Opposition), Messrs. Tessier (Three Rivers), Gault Perron, Letourneau (Hochelaga), and Bernier should be a Committee of Inquiry to consider the charges made by The Montreal Daily Mail.

TWENTY ARRESTED.

Serious Strike Riot Occurs In Colorado Mining Town.

TRINIDAD, Col., Jan. 23.—Twenty or more persons, including eight women, are under arrest and at least five are known to be suffering from slight injuries as the result of a serious street riot which took place yesterday afternoon until the militia, under the personal direction of Gen. John Chase, broke up a mob of strikers and strike sympathisers, which was attempting to march to San Rafael Hospital, where "Mother" Jones is held under military arrest.

Stones, bottles and bricks were hurled at the militiamen by a crowd of angry women, who precipitated the outbreak, when they were ordered to turn back by the soldiers.

Several soldiers, including Major H. M. Randolph, were assaulted, and not until the cavalrymen with drawn swords had charged the crowd several times was the mob dispersed.

The riot came after a parade of wives and children of striking coal miners.

THERE IS EVERY REASON TO HOPE THAT WAR WILL COME TO AN END SAYS PROF. SKELTON

He Deals With the Cause of Wars in the Past, and With the Forces Working Against Warfare in the Present Day

A very fair crowd of people were gathered together in the Collegiate Assembly Hall last night to hear Prof. O. D. Skelton lecture on the subject "Can War Be Ended?" While the crowd was numerically respectable, it would be no compliment to this city of 21,000 people to say that it was a representative audience of those interested in a subject above the hum-drum details of life, but which, at the same time, is of vital importance to every rational citizen. Some day those persons in Peterboro who are of some education, will realize that they have a responsibility in regard to such things, if for no other reason than that of example. Be that as it may, those who were assembled to hear Doctor Skelton, one of Canada's foremost educationists, were not disappointed by his discourse, which required an hour and a quarter to deliver, and which was so attentively followed by the audience that the time consumed seemed much shorter than it was. The clear, terse style of the speaker, the logical marshalling of his subject matter, and his interesting use of peculiar phrases, easily carried his hearers to the conclusion of a subject, somewhat dry perhaps to those not particularly interested in political science, but presented in a very attractive manner for a general audience.

Dr. M. A. Morrison acted as chairman, and in introducing the speaker, highly praised the Lady Teachers' Guild in securing Prof. Skelton.

The Address

In opening, the speaker said the subject was one of much importance at the present time. It was also a curious time to ask the question: Can war be ended? when war has been raging in the Balkan states and in the country south of the Rio Grande. Never was there a time when war and peace were so much talked about, so that it might seem a little exotic to lecture on such a subject. A glance at the past might, however, furnish some ground for a forecast of future development.

Examples From History

Notice the rise and fall of duelling. A century or so ago no private dispute of importance could be settled without blood. Honor was at stake and the only arguments were swords or pistols. In regard to the Arbitration Treaty President Roosevelt drew attention to himself by stating that there were some questions between nations which should not be arbitrated, but be decided by war as involving national honor and he denounced some clauses as going too far.

Men like Roebuck and Byron looked on duelling as part of a gentleman's training. In Germany duelling is being limited more and more within the army to a certain class. The law now affords some protection and social means are regarded as a better settlement than the sword. With the passing of duelling the standard of morals has not decreased and no one would say that morals are worse today than in the palmy days of duelling.

War has existed since time began, and an idea of the progress of war and peace can be gained by considering four or five periods. For perspective, take England in the seventh, eleventh, fifteenth and twentieth centuries.

In the seventh century we find fighting the normal occupation of life. Brawls are frequent, a man's kin may take up his quarrel, and an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, was the law. The most honorable death was on the battlefield. Prisoners were despatched or crucified or strung up on trees as were those taken alive from the legions of Varus. Prisoners were made slaves and often the gods were appeased by cutting off an arm of every tenth man. When the Teutons swept over Europe five million people are said to have been put to the sword. Bloody cruelty is the impression we receive from the history of that time.

Now, in the eleventh century, we find warfare still exists, but there is progress. Women and children are now spared. There is little private redress, the laws of Edward are still in force, there is the ordeal of battle, but under certain conditions and at certain times. Still, the chieftan, with his fifty followers, wages war. Gibbon tells us that every town was a fort and a man had to blow thrice on his horn before the gate to save himself from a cross bolt. Then the Truce of God came into force, and the Church caused holy days and their Sundays to be free from battle and later, Wednesday night to Monday morning.

Go forward to Tudor or the beginning of Stuart times, the practice of slaughtering non-combatants is stopped and garrisons are spared. When Cromwell put the Irish to the sword, the deed was execrated throughout Europe. War is no longer fought for the sake of war, but as a sad and necessary condition of life.

Coming to the twentieth century we find forty-five million people living in harmony in the British Isles. There is a great change in the attitude towards war. Brutality is less, arms cannot be carried, surgeons bind up the wounds of an enemy, certain bullets are barred as being too cruel in the wounds they inflict, private property is exempt and the rights of neutrals increase. The monitary side is considered and while science has made war more deadly, the loss of life is far less than in the seventh or eleventh centuries. In the nineteenth century one in every 10,000 was killed in war while one in every 100 was killed in war in the 10th century, so that war has become 100 times less destructive in one thousand years. Yet such progress may take thousands of years to do away with war, which leads to a consideration of the forces making for war.

Forces Making For War

First, there is that one defended by Ruskin and Mahon, that war is necessary to bring out moral qualities in a nation, to develop heroism, self control, endurance, personality, comradeship. The strain and stress of war does do some of these things, but there is no use letting a dozen mad dogs loose on the streets to develop agility in children, heroism in the police and fortitude in the mothers. Physical drill is good for certain individuals, and the Boy Scout movement has increased the dexterity and usefulness of boys. But life in camp or barracks is certainlny no school for morals.

Secondly, there was the biological argument that war is necessary to weed out weak nations, to allow the survival of the fittest and international progress. This argument rests on rather far fetched analogies and we must remember that struggle is not the only means by which progress has come about. Today, the vanquished nation is not wiped out. Warfare is not the surest means of testing fitness for it often rests with the strongest battalions, individual genius or economic resources, and has little relation to worthyness. The morale of a nation is of great importance as the disaster to French arms in the Franco-Prussian war illustrated. On the other hand, by taking the wars of Napoleon and the American Civil War as examples, war devoured not the most unfit, but the best blood of the nation, so the biological reason does not follow.

Why Wars Were Fought

What are the reasons for war in the past? First, men fought for their faith, and religious wars are not likely to arise in the future. Secondly, the ambition of a family or dynasty caused war which the growth of democracy has made unlikely. Thirdly, men fought for freedom and there are cases as Poland and Austria, where one could easily conceive of a war for freedom arising, but the growth of Federalism tends to make this kond of war less likely. Fourthly, gain was a cause for war, in the shape of plunder markets, colonies, trade and so forth. But war for this cause is now unprofitable. Germany has added one million square miles to its domain and its chief increase in trade has been domestic, due to the rise of the standard of living there. Germany's exports to Switzerland alone in one year are greater than those to her colonies for the past twenty-five years. Lastly, war might be caused in the interests of certain factions or parties, but the growth of capital and labor cuts athwart nationalist or political divisions, as when the labor unions pre-

NEW GRILL ROOM TO BE OPENED

Kingsbury and Ryers Will have Central Location.

A new and up-to-date grill-room a la carte will be opened shortly in this city in the store formerly occupied by Mr. Browett, the optician, by Messrs. J. C. Kingsbury and R. C. Ryers, two well known Western Ontario men, who have been engaged in restaurant business for some years and are highly experienced in this line.

The decorations are elaborate and artistic, and when completed will present a handsome appearance. The painting and papering is in the hands of Coleman Bros., while Contractor Irwin is in charge of the carpenter work. It is expected that the formal opening will take place a week from to-day.

LORD MURRAY AS A PARTY ISSUE

LORD MURRAY.

"Lord Murray's return to England," the Morning Post, of London, editorially observes, "cannot be regarded merely as a personal or private matter. It brings once more to an issue the whole question of ministerial transactions in American Marconi shares, and not only this but the accompanying and succeeding revelations regarding the liberal party's finances.

"Both these subjects are of public moment, for they concern most directly and deeply the reputation and conduct of their administration and the soundness, if soundness remains, of the party system."

WERE I A POLICE COMMISSIONER

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—As there is wide-spread interest in the question of police protection, and as the commissioners will no doubt be glad to know what their constituency is thinking, as part of that constituency I crave space for a few remarks:

1—If I were a Police Commissioner I should be humiliated if the street life of my city were such as to call for general complaint and alarm.

2—If I were a Police Commissioner I should endeavor to leave no doubt in the mind of man or woman as to my gratitude to all and sundry who were sufficiently interested to come to me with suggestions.

3—If I were a Police Commissioner I would not tell people to build rescue homes to take care of the by-products of a weak administration of any department.

4—If I were a Police Commissioner and so deaf that I could not hear the suggestions of those interested in my work I would wear a placard with the legend: "I am deaf, speak out loud."

5—If I were a Police Commissioner I would not talk about the necessity of using the few police on the force to guard the banks and streets. I would guard the boys and girls, and if necessary I would let the banks and stores be robbed.

6—If I were a Police Commissioner I would not do the kicking about high taxation and take kicking from the taxpayers because I fail to preserve decency on the streets of my city through an insufficient police force.

7—If I were a Police Commissioner I would leave the taxpayer do his own kicking and I would earn my salary by keeping the street life of the city strictly within the requirements of Canadian law and Canadian decency. I would ask the Chief how many men and women he needed to do this and I would ask the City Council to pass the necessary appropriations. If I got the appropriations I would give the Chief the necessary men and women and if he did not make good I would dismiss him. If I could not get the appropriations I would resign and let the powers that be appoint some one else to make bricks without straw.

8—If I were a Police Commissioner I would see to it that neither the Salvation Army nor the Women's Council nor any other organization were more in earnest about my work than I would be myself.

9—If I were a Police Commissioner I would appoint a morality officer as requested by Adjutant McElheney, and a Police Woman as requested by Mrs. McElheney, and the Women's Council. I would keep them both on the task until the people for whom I work would have no occasion to be ashamed of the moral conditions of their city, and after these things were cleaned up, if I were convinced that both were not needed I would dismiss the one who was least valuable.

10—If I were a Police Commissioner I would consider the sympathetic co-operation with my department of a large body of women like the Woman's Council, cheap at the wages of a police woman, even if she were not more efficient than a policeman.

Yours truly,
Just an Ordinary Man.

The Canadian Club announce that Dr. James W. Robertson, C.M.G., LL. D., will speak to the club on January 29th.

WONDERFUL WIRELESS

Talk and Demonstration With Experimental Apparatus.

Last evening in the rooms of the Technical Society, Mr. F. K. Dalton, one of the C.G.E. Co. engineering staff, gave a very interesting address on "Wireless Telegraphy." Mr. Dalton had gone to considerable trouble to devise and arrange some experimental apparatus which illustrated the operation of sending signals, and which worked effectively the length of the room. His lecture was also illustrated by copious diagrams placed on a black-board. At the conclusion of his address a vote of thanks was presented to the speaker.

DID NOT INTEND TO REFLECT ON REAL ESTATE MEN

The Review has received a communication from G. Stanley Taylor, who replies to criticism, made of the debate on the subject "Resolved—that it is worse to make money from speculation in land, than from gambling at cards.

Mr. Taylor says the speakers of the affirmative did not intend to reflect in any way on the Real Estate Agents of Peterboro, who, he says, contain in their rankns, Christian men of the highest standing. The communication is a lengthy one and the Review regrets that it was received too late for publication today.

An Interesting Evening for St. Peters Ladies Literary Society

The Ladies' Literary Society held their first meeting for the new year in the hall of the Lyceum last evening, when an exceptionally interesting lecture was given on "The Hedge Schools of Ireland," by Rev. Dean McColl. A very good musical programme was rendered as follows:

Instrumental solo—Miss M. Gorman.
Vocal solo—Miss Annie Simons.
Instrumental solo — Miss Lillian Hill.
Vocal solo—Miss M. Mahony.
Vocal solo—Mr. Ed. Hanrahan.
Accompanists—Miss Aileen Sullivan and Miss Marion Gorman.

Rev. Dean McColl treated his subject in a very interesting way. It was during the troublous times of the latter part of the eighteenth century that this method was resorted to by our Irish forebears to obtain for their children that education which was so prized and so much desired by them. The children of the rich were sent abroad, to the schools in France and Spain, but the poorer classes, of which Ireland has always possessed a very good share, were obliged to resort to other means of obtaining learning.

Some of the most beautiful of picturesque spots in which Ireland abounds, were utilized in this way. The rustic school-master would gather the children for miles around on the sunny side of the hedge, and there conduct school, and these men were proud of their work and of their bright and eager scholars, although one master might have under his charge as many as 150 pupils. They were doubtless very noisy, at times, especially when heated discussions took place, but the teachers were capable and efficient, and, besides the rudimentary work were capable of preparing scholars for the universities. There are instances of these scholars, often poor, and insufficiently clothed, who attended their classes regularly, and afterwards proved the value of their early training in their achievements in the universities. Rev. Father McColl read a couple of very amusing advertisements, one for a school master, and another by a 'philomath' himself, in which he describes his qualifications at length the whole comprising a knowledge of nearly everything under the sun, and of some subjects never heard of before or since. But the people reverenced learning, and had a great respect for its possessor, the school-master was welcome in every house and the best of its contents were at his disposal. The custom was, when a boy had attended regularly, and had come to feel that he knew almost as much as his teacher, for him to challenge the master to an argument. Judges were appointed, and all came to hear the debate. If the master overcame the scholar, the latter remained, and pursued his studies, but if the case was reversed, the pupil usually went in search of some man of greater learning, sometimes in distant parts of the country. These 'poor scholars,' as they were termed, were received by the people, who admired their talent and ability, with open arms, and were lodged free of charge wherever they went. They, in turn, helped the children of the house with their studies. These 'por scholars' were called intellectual knights errant, but they often had difficulty in proving themselves, as the masters would sometimes excuse unfairness to save themselves from defeat, as in the case of one, who took a commonading position at his desk, with fenule in hand. This he brought down with resounding thumps on the desk to emphasize his arguments, thereby reminding his opponent unpleasantly of the many times his frame had been made acquainted with its eloquent force. They also made use of every available trick to puzzle an opponent, and had a stock of unanswerable questions to propound, whereby to outwit him. "Find the solid contents of a load of thorns," was a favorite, to embarass and non-plus the presuming scholar.

In that country, and at that time learning was regarded with awe and reverence, and its possessor looked upon as a walking encyclopedia of knowledge. The Irish people had a great love of, and desire for education, and, if a boy showed the least inclination to be "cute at the larnin,'" his parents and the rest of the family would endure almost any hardship, and sacrifice a great deal, to do without the help of his labour, and give him a schooling. It was a common sight to see a boy perhaps insufficiently clad, coming with a piece of turf on his back, to contribute his share to the heating of the lean-to at the side of the hedge, or the old shed where they took refuge, in the cold weather.

Father McColl brought his address to a close, by reciting very effectively, the description of the village schoolmaster from Goldsmith's "The Deserted Village," who, although he lived in a later age, and under different conditions, had yet many of the characteristics possessed by the men who taught "The Hedge Schools of Ireland."

The Chairlady, Mrs. A. Lahane, then called upon the clergymen on the platform, and Rev. Fathers Guiry, Galvin, Cote, and Meagher rose in turn to congratulate the speaker. Father Guiry remembered having received assistance in his early studies from an old man who had been a 'poor scholar,' and who had come to this country with the Robinson emigration and Father Meagher alluded to a learned teacher in his preparatory school, and another in a Dublin College, who had received their first lessons as "hedge' scholars.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, JAN. 24, 1914.

OUR PROSPECTIVE SENATOR.

THE CHOICE of the citizens of Peterborough for their representative in the Senate has fallen upon Mr. James Kendry, and this choice has been virtually confirmed by the community generally. Mr. Kendry has spent the greater part of his life in Peterborough, having at one time represented the city in the House of Commons.

He has been, and is at present, an active and prominent business man, who has taken the closest interest in the welfare and advancement of all departments of civic life, having held prominent positions in the City Council and occupied the Mayor's chair for a number of years. He can therefore be relied upon to very ably represent the city in the highest chamber of the Dominion. He is a man of experience and stability, who, having grown up with the city of Peterborough, knows exactly its conditions and requirements. He is of the right type of man that we want for such a position. Being a staunch member of the Conservative party, he has had his political enemies, but seeing that there is no possibility of a member of any other party standing for the position, men of all shades of politics will regard Mr. Kendry as one of the best all-round men to fill the place of the late Senator Cox; and further, that he deserves the high honor as a reward for the years of service which he has bestowed upon the city. There are doubtless other men who have served the city with equal diligence, who are worthy of the honor, but there are not enough of these honors to go round and Mr. Keardy can represent them as well as the city which has presented his name to the Premier for consideration.

CORRUPTION IN HIGH PLACES.

THE MONTREAL MAIL is trying to prove its claim to independence by going full tilt for certain members of the Quebec Legislature whom it charges with corruption in connection with the incorporation of "The Montreal Fair Association." The Mail has doubtless good ground for its charges as they are of a very serious nature.

The Quebec Legislature has instituted an investigation into the charges and The Mail is to called before the House to give evidence. If there is any truth in the charges the Mail is to be congratulated upon its bold stand against corruption in the high places of the land. We need more of that type of fearless journalism. Any newspaper that closes its eyes to injustice or corruption, in no matter what quarter, is conniving at and abetting the evil-doing. Corruption would not be possible were all newspapers strong enough and brave enough to stand out against it as The Mail has done; the sooner all our papers do likewise the sooner Canada will be rid of these constantly recurring charges and rumors of graft and corruption.

ONTARIO.

THERE ARE NOT many people in the Province of Ontario who realize that the area of the province has been increased within two years from about 260,000 square miles to about 420,000 square miles. This large increase in area has been the result of taking in the District of Patricia, which now forms the most north-westerly part of the province adjoining the eastern boundary of the Province of Manitoba, a few miles north of the Lake of the Woods, and thence running north and east to the shores of Hudson Bay. The people of the province thus secure the advantage of several possible ports on these waters. Although a little precise information is on record in regard to this new district, the Government authorities have, in a general way, satisfied themselves that not only does it contain a large tract of many million acres of good agricultural land, but that the timber therein has great value. It is known also that the geological formation indicates the possibility of mineral developments of considerable value. As to the possibility of the agricultural lands being developed, we have only to bear in mind that they are, as a rule, no further north than the rich wheat lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and it would, therefore, seem reasonable to believe that they can be settled eventually and farming carried on in the usual way.

Speaking on this subject at the annual meeting of the Bank of Commerce, President Walker said: "Ontario not only continues to hold the premier position among the provinces as regards the value of the products obtained directly from the soil, but it now ranks second as regards area, with 420,000 square miles, the Province of Quebec alone exceding it with 706,000 square miles, British Columbia coming next with 353,000 square miles. The people of Ontario generally have not realized the possibilities of their own province, all eyes being attracted to our four western provinces. Of course, we are not overlooking the district commonly known as the clay belt of northern Ontario, where great development has been going on for several years past and where new trading and mining centres, such as Cobalt, Porcupine, Englehart, Cochrane, Haileybury, New Liskeard, Hearst and other places, have been established. Much of this development has been brought about by the construction of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway and by the settlement of the district by people principally from old Ontario."

Ontario has been overshadowed by the Western Provinces and has gived much of its best to the development of the Prairies. It behooves the older Province to look after itself or it will be left a long way behind. Ontario was first a lumber country, farming followed, and it is on the whole the best all round farming country in Canada. Mining has already established itself, but the mineral wealth of this Province is as yet undeveloped and in some respect unknown.

A CANADIAN POEM.

WILFRID CAMPBELL, the Canadian poet, has written an elegy on the passing of Lord Strathcona. The poem is one of the best things that has come our way from a Canadian poet for some time. Wilfrid Campbell gained quite a reputation some years ago as the "Canadian Wordsworth." But Wordsworth was Wordsworth and we shall not look upon his like again. We do not want any Canadian Wordsworths or Canadian Kiplings, we want individual poets, men who can stand on their own feet and give us the authentic message of their own souls and not an echo of another, however great he may be. If we want to read Shakespeare or Milton or Wordsworth we can always spend an evening with those immortals at our own fireside—or beside the "register." There are too many echoes, we come to a new poet with the hope of seeing a new man and not a mere plaster-cast. Here is Wilfrid Campbell taken off his Wordsworth guard:

Hushed fall the snows on lonely Labrador,
And sad the winds round bleak Mount Royal's head;
Gray grief invades each lorn Canadian shore,
From loud Atlantic surge to far Pacific floor;
For he, their dominant genius, is no more,
That mighty lord of all is frayed and fled;
The wizard brain which plotted, planned and willed.
In death's long lethargy of dust is stilled;
Our last great baron and empire-builder is dead.

That lifts the common-place to the singing level, it is not faultless, but it is straight out, and not from the teeth merely. It is Wilfrid Campbell and none other that is speaking in these lines. Of course all original poetry is not absolutely original in form or expression, but the individuality of the writer should infuse the form and expression so as to give the poem an authentic personal note.

We quote two more verses of this very creditable composition. Had Mr. Campbell had more time he would have revised some of the lines in the poem and probably cut it a little shorter, but there is good poetry in the conception and expression:

Low stricken in his stately London home,
Where eddies of a world-wide commerce sweep,
And King and lord and lowly hearts do keep
For him sad mourning, heartfelt, rare and deep;
This conqueror of a world-wide continent,
This indomitable soul, who never bent
To any blasts of fate or buffets of life,
This masterful titan in the world's wide strife,
Lies housed in dreamless sleep.

* * *

Earth ne'er hath known a mightier pioneer,
Strong soul, who fronted fate and flouted fear,
Looked destiny in the face and never quailed;
Stern Scotsman of that blood which never failed
A friend or foe; true friend, great enemy;
Who made men feel his force where'er he passed;
Leader and prince of commerce; founder, great,
Of empire's civilization west and north.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE MONTREAL MAIL says: "Canadians in England are praising the English roads, while Englishmen are not satisfied with them. The Englishmen, however, have never seen the Canadian roads." Haven't they, though!

SUNNY FRANCE is now in the grip of zero weather and it is said that even in Northern Africa the temperature has fallen almost to the freezing point. Our Lady of the Snows has many sisters just now.

THE FOLLOWING is taken from the official report of the debates in the House of Commons at Ottawa, and relates to the subject of the high cost of living:

Mr. Marshall: I was not in when the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was referring to canned goods, but I understand that he stated that canned goods have increased in price 70 per cent. in the last five years.

Mr. Oliver: That is what I understood.

Mr. Marshall: You are entirely wrong. Canned goods are cheaper to-day than they have been for five years. Tomatoes are 30 per cent. cheaper than they were a year ago, peas about 25 per cent. cheaper, and corn about 10 per cent. cheaper.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

A Land of Promise.

Hamilton Spectator.

Oh, yes, Canada is the most promising member of the British empire. But, thanks to its senate, the least in performance.

A French Canadian Claim.

From l'Action Sociale.

The French Canadians of Ontario and their friends strongly hope that the pressing nomination of a successor to the late Senator Cox will give the Borden government an opportunity to fulfil a formal promise which it made some months ago, namely, that the first vacancy in the Senate from Ontario would be used to give to the French Canadians of Ontario the second representative which they have the strict right to claim in that chamber.

SOME VEHICLES

By Walt Mason

I've seen the circus wagon pass, with stately horses hitched in line, all bright with shining paint and brass—it sent a thrill clear up my spine. I've seen the rich man's motor car, that cost him many thousand bones; it burned the road up near and far, and honked in loud Caruso tones. I've seen all things thatgo on wheels, whatever be the motive power; and, viewing them, a fellow feels he's living in a modern hour. Of all the vehicles that roll along the pike from sun to sun, of all that stir me to the soul, the water wagon takes the bun. The water wagon has no gilt, nor is it hauled by circus span, and all its seats and springs are built upon a stern, old-fashioned plan; methinks its wheels are needing grease, and one can hear them squeal and grind; but those upon it ride to Peace, and leave the Land of Grief behind. Hang on, hang on, O thirsty boys, be not dismayed by jests or sneers; you're headed now for saner joys than you have known in many years!

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

SATURDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-FOURTH

Joseph H. Choate, the famous American lawyer and former ambassador to Great Britain, who is eighty-two years of age to-day, has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the foremost wits of the times. "Choate's latest" has for many years been synonomous with the best anecdotes told in New York clubs. He has been particularly effective in his pleasantries about the ladies. On one occasion at a dinner party he was asked by one of the gentlemen present who he would like to be if he were not himself. He paused a moment before replying, glanced significantly at his wife and then answered, "Mrs. Choate's second husband." Another time at a banquet he was seated under a balcony filled with ladies. He commenced his speech most effectively by remarking that at last he understood why man was described as a creature a little below the angels.

SUNDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-FIFTH

To-day one of the distinguished prelates of the Roman Catholic Church in Canada observes his sixty-fourth birthday in the person of the Most Reverend Edward J. McCarthy, Archbishop of Halifax. Archbishop McCarthy is a native of the Nova Scotia seaport and has been the head of the Church in the eastern provinces for eight years. A cleric of fine scholarship, an eloquent and forceful preacher and a man of sound business acumen, he is an able administrator of the archibshopric. His popularity extends to all classes of the community and among the Protestants of the province he is generally highly regarded as a broad-minded citizen.

TAYLOR PAYS PENALTY.

Slayer of Little Charlie Dawson Is Hanged In Brantford.

BRANTFORD, Jan. 24. — James Taylor, who murdered the boy, Charlie Dawson, was hanged a few minutes after eight o'clock yesterday morning.

Taylor, who had dressed in his ordinary street clothes and a pair of bedroom slippers, rose and stood quietly while the executioner fastened his hands behind his back with a strap. He was then led back into the narrow hallway, which is used as a gallows, and placed on the trap. He walked with firm step and head slightly bowed, and from the time he left his cell he didn't speak a word to any person. As the hangman adjusted the black cap and noose over the condemned man's head, Adjutant Hargrove stood close by repeating the 23rd psalm, and when he reached the phrase, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death," the hangman pulled the lever and the body disappeared from view. Death was instantaneous.

By previous arrangement the body will be handed over to an aunt of Taylor's late wife and a step-brother of Taylor's, and will be interred in one of the local cemeteries, instead of in the jail-yard, as is customary in cases of hanging.

Toronto Man Murdered.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 24.—B. F. Parker, an Englishman who came to Los Angeles from Toronto, Ont., was shot through the heart by an unidentified assassin in the heart of the wholesale district late Thursday night.

Bystanders saw a heavily-bearded man running from the scene.

Athens Wants a Hustler.

KINGSTON, Jan. 24.—The village of Athens is out after a hustler for civic work. It is advertising for a man to discharge the following duties: Assessor, collector, village constable, janitor of town hall, caretaker of fire engine, fire inspector, weed inspector, sanitary inspector, truancy officer, collector of poll tax. He is to enforce all village bylaws and give his whole time to the service of the corporation.

Proud of Him.

Sandy McPherson started to build a small outhouse of bricks. After the usual fashion of bricklayers, he worked from the inside, and, having the material close beside him, the walls were rising fast when dinner time arrived and with it his son Jock, who brought his father's dinner.

With honest pride in his eye Sandy looked at Jock over the wall on which he was engaged and asked:

"Hoo d'ye think I'm gettin' on, Jock, man?"

"Famous, feythur. But hoo dae ye get oot? You've forgot the door!"

One glance around him showed Sandy that his son was right; but, looking kindly at him, he said:

"Man, Jock, you've got a gran' heid on ye! Ye'll be an architect yet, as shure's yer feythur's a builder."

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A Mechanical Chauffer—He Made Himself Useful to a Newly Licensed Driver.

By MILLARD MALTBIE

"Mamma," said Winifred Knowlton, who the day before had got her license to run an automobile, "I'm going out in the car."

"It's too cold. You'll freeze. Besides, there's ice on the road, and your machine is liable to skid."

"Oh, I shall drive very carefully around corners and keep my speed down to a dozen miles an hour!"

Winifred, who was used to doing pretty much as she pleased, called for her car. By the time it was brought up to the door she was arrayed in a fur coat, cap and goggles and, getting into the driver's seat, was soon whirling along at what she considered nothing more than a fair pace. She stopped at the house of a friend and invited her to drive, but the young lady had other matters on hand. She tried another and another, but they were either out or busy, and at last she made up her mind that she must spin alone.

The air was crisp, with plenty of ozone in it, and, since Winifred was well protected, she was not cold. As soon as she got out of the city, coming to a straight wide road, she put on more speed. It was delightful bowling along with her hands on the steering gear and her foot on the brake, ready to reduce speed at the slightest sign of danger. She had been impatiently waiting for a birthday which would give her the age required to obtain a license, and, this being the first time she had been out without some one to act as instructor, she was very proud of herself, besides being much exhilarated. She put on a little more speed and still a little more till she was going at a pretty good gait.

Auto drivers seldom realize how fast they are going. Winifred certainly did not. Coming to a turn in the road, she slowed down, as she thought, quite enough to go around the curve safely, but did not count on ice. To weather that turn she would have needed to move no faster than a person would walk. Instead of that she was going at the rate of five or six miles an hour. The consequence was that she skidded into a ditch beside the road and remained at an angle not quite sufficient to throw her car over.

What was to be done? Nothing but jump out, for she was not sure that the machine might turn turtle, after all. This she did and stood looking at it ruefully. She dare not try to run it by its own power up on to the road, and there was no other way to get it there. She cast an inquiring glance up the road and was relieved to see a car coming. When it reached her the driver, who occupied it alone, came to a stop and took in the situation.

He was evidently either a mechanic or a chauffeur, for, throwing off an overcoat, he displayed a suit of overalls. Jumping out of his car, he stood looking at Winifred's as if deliberating on the best plan to get it up on to the road.

"I could pull it up with my machine," he said, "but I have no tackle. I see no way for me to proceed except by going for a rope. Will you go with me or wait here till I return?"

Winifred concluded to remain with her machine. The wind was blowing cold, but she could walk to and fro. The man thought he could get back with some sort of tackle without going very far and, promising to hurry, left her. She sauntered back and forth, remaining near her car, in order to keep warm. Now and again teams or cars passed her, and she received offers of help, but declined them all, stating that she was being served already. It was not long before the man in overalls returned with a chain and some rope, besides a stout piece of wood to place under the wheels on the lower side of the car to prevent it from going over. Having got the wood under by means of jacking up the forward wheel, he connected the auto with his own and succeeded in drawing it up on the road.

But on examining its machinery he found that certain parts had been bent or broken, and the car could not be moved by its own power. He told Winifred that he would drag it to his shop and fix it for her.

"I haven't any money with me to pay for all this," she said, "but I can send it to you."

"Oh, that's all right," said the man. "Don't worry about that. I think you would better get into your auto to steer it and put on the brake when necessary."

Winifred did as she was bidden, and the two autos made their way slowly till the mechanic turned into the grounds of a country place and brought up at what was evidently a private garage.

"Have you the tools here to enable you to do the work?" asked Winifred.

"Yes," was the reply. "I do most of the repairing on the cars in this garage."

"I see," said Winifred. "You are a mechanic and chauffeur in one. I wish papa would employ such a man; it would be so nice to have the repairing done without sending the car somewhere else. I should think it would be less expensive too."

The young man by this time was engaged in putting Winifred's car into the garage and over a pit from which he could work on its lower machinery. As soon as he had got it into position he drew up a chair for Winifred and asked her to be seated. The garage was artificially heated, and, throwing back her wraps, she sat down in a position where she could see the man work. She had been so absorbed in her accident and what to do in the matter that she had not especially noticed him. Now she saw that he was about twenty-two years old and had he not been in overalls would doubtless have been quite good looking. She had noticed, too, that his voice was well modulated and there were no breaks in his English. His eyes were particularly attractive, being expressive gray ones.

Yet the position he occupied—in a depression in the floor over which he had rolled her car—did not present him in a favorable light. He soon got more or less begrimed in his work, and altogether it did not appear a fitting employment for a good looking young man. But he hammered away as though used to the dirt and grease, while Winifred sat waiting.

Winifred tried to engage him in conversation while he worked, but the effort was not successful. He gave her very brief replies and now and again showed by their irrelevancy that he did not know what she was talking about. So at last she gave it up, thinking that, after all, interesting chat was not to be expected of a greasy mechanic.

After awhile Winifred inquired if there was a telephone handy, and upon being directed to a room in the garage where it was she called up her mother, informed her of the accident and said that she would not be home in time for luncheon. As soon as she had delivered this message the mechanic went to the telephone room and shut the door. When he came out he informed Winifred that the lady of the house on the grounds would be happy to have her lunch with her. He had informed her of the accident and her presence at the garage, and the invitation had resulted.

Winifred decided to accept the invitation and await the repairing of her car at the house. So she walked up the roadway a short distance, meeting a young lady who was coming to fetch her and who received her very kindly, taking her to the house and introducing her to her mother. Winifred was informed that luncheon would not be served immediately, and, meanwhile, she was welcome to the use of a room or the library or to make herself at home in any way she liked. But she found her hosts so affable, so engaging that she preferred chatting with them.

She gave an account of her accident and dwelt especially on the valuable services of their chauffeur. How kind he had been! She did not know what she would have done had he not come along to help her. She became sufficiently at home with her hosts to rally the young lady on the danger of having so attractive a chauffeur. Both mother and daughter smiled and said that in this case no misalliance was possible.

Winifred spent an hour in this way before luncheon was announced. On entering the dining room she stopped on the threshold, paralyzed. A young man stood at the head of the table ready to drop into a seat. When he and the ladies saw the expression on Winifred's face all three burst into a laugh. The young man was the mechanic-chauffeur, but he was without his overalls.

"I should have refused my consent," said the mother, "to this deception. I was overpersuaded."

"No harm done, I'm sure," said the young man. "The young lady took me for a chauffeur, and I simply didn't disabuse her mind."

By this time Winifred had regained some of her equanimity and joined in the laugh or at least tried to, assuring her hosts that she could not possibly blame any one who had been so kind to her, whereupon the mother made an explanation. She told Winifred that the young man, her son, had but recently graduated from a school of technology and had a great fancy for mechanics. They found his ability to repair their automobiles very convenient.

"Since he is my brother," put in the young lady, with a sparkle in her eye, "there can be no fear—"

But she was stopped by a warning look from her mother and a blush she saw rising on Winifred's cheek.

And so it was that Winifred Knowlton went out in her car at 10 o'clock in the morning and a few hours later was lunching familiarly with persons whose names she did not yet know. The mechanic told her that he had finished the repairs on her car and instead of sending a bill for his work he would feel repaid if she would permit him to drive her to her home. The matter was compromised on this basis, and after an hour agreeably spent by the party together the young man went for Winifred's car, while she telephoned her mother that she would shortly be at home, herself and her car both in good condition, thanks to the man who had repaired it and his mother and sister, who had entertained and refreshed her.

Winifred did not avail herself of her recently acquired privilege of guiding her car home, leaving the wheel to her escort. But he availed himself of the privilege of driving a very roundabout course, and they did not reach her home till dinner time. Then Winifred would not let her escort return until he had dined with them.

The convenience of having a mechanic and chauffeur in one was transferred to the Knowltons, since the said mechanic-chauffeur married Winifred.

DIFFICULT NAVAL FEAT.

Landing Big Field Guns on Shore by the Trolley Route.

That the landing of field guns and munitions of war on shores which vessels cannot approach closely is one of the exciting tasks for the men on the warships of the world's great navies is thrillingly demonstrated. The maneuver is especially necessary in the navies of the colonial powers, which must be in readiness to land fighting forces on any of the unapproachable shores of their colonies. British, German and French sailors have long been trained in making such landings, and since the United States has become a colonial power the crews of American battleships are likely to be called upon for similar service.

The battleship or transport carrying the guns anchors as near the shore as possible, and a cable is stretched from the vessel's deck to a tripod derrick on shore. A two wheeled trolley from which are suspended the various parts of the guns is drawn along the cable by a rope running to the men on shore. The guns are dismounted, and several trips are necessary to land all the parts of one gun. The most thrilling part of the work is carried on by the men who ride on the load to keep it from swaying or becoming unfastened from the trolley.—Popular Mechanics.

A Story of [illegible] Flying [illegible]

By MARGARET C[illegible]

The legend [illegible] has come to [illegible] of them is [illegible] Vanderdeck[illegible] around the [illegible] east. He [illegible] In attempt[illegible] met with [illegible] per and [illegible] oath. [illegible] phemy [illegible] resolut[illegible] till the [illegible]

Many ye[illegible] steam had taken the [illegible] sailor life and before [illegible] China by way of the [illegible] the Suez canal and the [illegible] an American merchant sailed from New York for Bombay in the packet ship Albatross. The gentleman, whose name was Van Cortlandt, had descended from the Hollanders of that name who had settled on Manhattan Island in the seventeenth century.

His oldest daughter, between seventeen and eighteen years old, was a girl with an expressive face, which denoted a deep undercurrent of feeling. Her eyes were her most notable feature, being large brown ones, which gave one an impression that she was filled with wonder. And yet it would seem that this, instead of being remarkable, should be natural to any one contemplating the marvels by which we are surrounded. Perhaps these persons appear in a state of wonder because they are nearer by nature to the border which separates us from the infinite.

Maria Van Cortlandt would sit all day on deck peering out on the boundless ocean trying to form in her mind an image of its vastness, or looking upon the clouds drifting up in the heavens or the gulls soaring above the masts. Sometimes it seemed to her father, who adored her, that she was not thinking of the ocean or the heavens, but of that other spiritual world a vision of which is denied to ordinary mortals. Then he would sigh, for it seemed to him that the abode in mortality of such persons is more transient than in persons of a less spiritual nature.

One afternoon when the vessel had just begun to point her prow more eastwardly to round the cape a ship was seen astern coming in the same direction. The captain of the Albatross stood on the poop deck, his glass leveled at the stranger, surprised at the position of her sails. While those of his own ship were set to sail before the wind, the coming vessel had hers close hauled. The skipper had never before experienced in steady weather a wind blowing in two different directions.

It is a fact well known to navigators that a ship will move faster with the wind abeam than when dead aft. Obeying this law, the stranger was gaining on the Albatross. As she came on the face of the Albatross' master assumed a more amazed expression. There was an old fashioned look about the other ship that he had never before seen on any craft. Her sides bulged below her decks, which were narrower, she was very high astern and was built up curiously forward.

And now a few figures began to take form on deck, going about upon their various duties—some coiling ropes, some mending sails, while others lay about smoking enormous pipes. When the vessel came abreast of the Albatross a man was seen standing on the high deck astern who seemed to be the master. His figure standing out against the sky showed him more plainly than the others. He wore a costume that had passed out long before; full breeches to the knee and a short coat with flaring skirt. His face was young, but there was an old look about it. His hair was long, his eyes were large and set deep in his head.

But the most remarkable feature of this strange craft and her antique looking crew was yet to come. Sailing much faster than the Albatross, the stranger passed her in a few moments. As she went by every eye on her was fixed on those on the Albatross as those on the Albatross were fixed on the vessel and her crew. The young master on the poop deck extended his arms to Maria Van Cortlandt with a mute appeal on his face. To the astonishment of those beside her, Maria's arms went out to the strange being.

Then there was a low swish of waters as the vessel drew away, leaving the Albatross in her wake, and Maria fell over in a swoon. Every eye of those near her was fixed upon her, and when they were raised for another glance at the receding vessel it had disappeared.

A man standing on the forecastle of the Albatross when the strange ship sailed away and out of sight said that he read the name—"The Flying Dutchman."

In the log book of the Albatross when she was broken up was found the entry, "The Flying Dutchman passed us bound southeast by east half east."

There is a story in the Van Cortlandt family of a Maria Van Cortlandt who [illegible] to China with her parents and [illegible] on the voyage a phantom lover in [illegible] phantom ship. While the high cost of living is one of the live topics of the day, a note of warning should be sounded—a warning against extravagance, a suggestion that every family make a deposit in the savings bank each month. The future happiness and prosperity of the average American family depend upon the proper adjustment of income and expenditure. It is not what a man earns, but what he and his family save, that counts in determining the ultimate success or failure of his life from a material standpoint.—T. D. MacGregor's "Talks on Thrift."

BLUE AND DISCOURAGED

Mrs. Hamilton Tells How She Finally Found Health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Warren, Ind.—"I was bothered terribly with female weakness. I had pains and was not regular, my head ached all the time, I had bearing down pains and my back hurt me the biggest part of the time, I was dizzy and had weak feelings when I would stoop over, it hurt me to walk any distance and I felt blue and discouraged.

"I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now in good health. If it had not been for that medicine I would have been in my grave a long time ago."—Mrs. Artie E. Hamilton, R.F.D. No. 6, Warren, Ind.

Another Case.

Esmond, R.I.—"I write to tell you how much good your medicine has done me and to let other women know that there is help for them. I suffered with bearing down pains, headache, was irregular and felt blue and depressed all the time. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and commenced to gain in a short time and I am a well woman today. I am on my feet from early morning until late at night running a boarding house and do all my own work. I hope that many suffering women will try your medicine. It makes happier wives and mothers."—Mrs. Anna Hanson, Esmond, Rhode Island.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

This week's meeting was called to order promptly at the appointed time by J. J. Hartley, president. The new head officer remarked that he wished punctuality to be one of the characteristics of the year's meetings.

The attendance of delegates was not numerous, considering the possibility of the appearance of delegates around the seventy mark, chosen by the various locals of the city to represent them on Peterborough's sinking mercury, the social season and the all-too prevalent feeling of "my absence will not be noticed," are the main factors at present in reducing interest in the labor movement. Several committees to be appointed were left over till next meeting by the President, who wished for a more representative gathering before he chose his men. The scribe hereby takes advantage of the space kindly given by the local press for these notes, to notify the wayward delegates to be on hand next meeting night, Feb. 4th.

Labor Minister Scored.

The outline of the Minister of Labor's proposed amendments to the Lemieux Act, as published in a Toronto paper recently, was vigorously attacked by the delegates present. It means nothing less than an attempt to break up the labor unions of Canada. If published as a "feeler" then a strong sentiment was a sure result and as for the proposed arbitration boards they were about as fast as Royal Commissions, delegates remarking that jobs over which there was a dispute could be finished long before the Board of Arbitration had partaken of its first supper prior to deliberation on the case. Confidence in the Trades and Labor Congress was also expressed; the ever watchful officials would be sure to spread the alarm when this new attempt against trades unionism was really started.

A Pulmotor for the City.

Representative Lyburn asked the President whether the council would endorse the request made to the City Council by a local medico that a pulmotor be secured for the city. Artificial respiration administered by the average man was as a rule, unskilful, though kindly meant. The pulmotor, which was the scientific instrument for retsoring to life asphyxiated persons, could be kept at the Fire Hall, and rushed wherever it was needed. As in the case of a drowning accident, fire, coal gas, etc. The firemen, constables, first aid students, etc., could be instructed regarding its use, which was not by any means complicated teaching, and humanity at large would be the safer. Action was deferred to next meeting for reasons aforementioned.

Next meeting February 4th.

Cause and Cure of Headache

The cause of headache as you know, is the stoppage of the circulation resulting in pressure on the delicate nerves of the head. In time nature will start the blood going again, but meanwhile we suffer and are unfit for duty.

Assisted by two ZUTOO Tablets, which by the way are as harmless as the soda they contain, nature will remove the pressure and stop the headache in twenty minutes. Why continue to suffer? Why be unfit?

It is really remarkable how many people now use ZUTOO to cure their headaches. Do you? If not, why not?

PALL-BEARERS ARE CHOS

Notable Britons Will Acco pany Strathcona's Body to the Grave.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The announcement was made last night that the ten pall-bearers to act at Lord Strathcona's funeral on Monday will include Lord Lansdowne, Lord Aberdeen, Colonial Secretary Harcourt, Rev. George Adam Smith (Principal of Aberdeen University), Sir William Osler, Sir Thomas Skinner, and W. L. Griffith (Secretary at the High Commissioner's office).

In conformity with the wishes of the family the funeral will be of as private a character as possible, despite the fact that a national tribute is being paid to his memory. The coffin will be borne in an open hearse, which, with the mourners and carriages, will proceed from Grosvenor Square to Westminster Abbey by way of upper Grosvenor street, Park Lane, Grosvenor Gardens and Victoria street. The procession to Highgate will be by way of Whitehall, Trafalgar Square, Charing Cross road, Tottenham Court road, and Hampstead road.

SWEDES TO EXPLORE.

Five-Year Expedition Will Start Out Next Year for Antarctica.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The Swedes expect to join in the Antarctic quest, according to advices from Stockholm, published in The Times yesterday.

The Swedish Antarctic committee, an association formed last year with Admiral Palander at its head, and Professors Nordenskjold, Andersen, De Geer, Nathorst and Lonnberg among its members, has planned the expedition which will start in the autumn of 1915.

It is intended that the proposed expedition shall establish a base in Grahamland, somewhere on the shores of the Antarctic Sound, the scene of Nordenskjold's and Andersen's former exploits, and spend five years in exploring the country.

The expedition will consist of ten scientific men, well acquainted with the Antarctic regions.

DEPUTIES EJECTED.

Armed Guards Throw Out Unruly Hungarian Legislators.

BUDAPEST, Jan. 24. — Armed guards were called into the Lower House of the Hungarian Parliament yesterday to eject unruly members of the Opposition during a debate on the press reform law. Ex-Premier Count Julius Andrassy, Count Aladar Zichy and a dozen other deputies were thrown out of the building when they defied a ruling of the President.

The uproar was so great that it was impossible to conduct business until the wearied members of the Opposition quit the House in a body.

As a result of the insults hurled across the floor of the House, Deputy Desy challenged Count Stephen Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, to fight a duel.

The press reform law was carried after the tumult had subsided. The bill is designed to protect the Government against the attacks of the press, and the Opposition claims that it imperils the freedom of the Hungarian people.

Masterman Booked For Right Hon. John's Cabinet Post.

LONDON, Jan. 24—The Daily Herald, a Labor newspaper, claims to have authority to state that Charles Frederick Gurney Masterman, financial secretary to the treasury, will be promoted to the Cabinet, succeeding John Burns as President of the Local Government Board.

For some time, according to cables, John Burns has been losing his influence both with the Asquith Government and Laborites. It is alleged that he has shown a conspicuous lack of energy and interest in the duties of his office, to which a handsome stipend is attached.

TENACIOUS DICTATOR MUST SOON LET GO, SAY OFFICIALS

Long Predicted Fall of Provisional Government is Now Said to be Imminent and U. S. Unofficial Representative is Looking for a Suitable Successor.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Conviction in administration circles that the Huerta regime in Mexico is rapidly approaching the collapse, which has been persistently predicted has led to much discussion here of the nature of John Lind's frequent conferences with Mexican leaders. Belief is freely expressed that President Wilson's representative is surveying the situation with a view to determining how events will shape themselves when the Huerta structure falls.

Mr. Lind's latest conferences with Jesus Flores Magon and other Mexican statesmen have interested members of the diplomatic corps who pointed out last night that in view of President Wilson's reiterated statements that he would not recognize Huerta nor any of the things he stands for, the American envoy might very naturally be induced to throw out hints as to what type of man would meet with the approval at the White House. They thought that Mexicans would in all likelihood embrace an opportunity to sound Mr Lind informally as to the acceptability of various leaders who might arise when the crisis is reached.

So far as the officials here are advised, the vicissitudes which preceded the Madero revolt and followed the downfall of that leader's stormy incumbency of the Presidency, have not detracted from the high standing which Francisco de la Barra, at present Minister to France, attained as the man of the hour when Gen. Diaz was forced to abdicate. Senor de la Barra then was brought forward as the leader, who as Provisional Pres dents here believe de la Barra could again compose the situation in Mexico, so as to permit of the choice of a successor to Huerta.

"The Ha[illegible]," said Gen. The importance of holding these islands securely fortified, as a naval base, is of the greatest, because any enemy from the west of us desiring to attack either the Pacific coast or the Panama Canal has got to leave these islands in his rear in order to do so, and I doubt if any well-considered hostile expedition would venture to assume such a risk, as it would necessitate the movement of troops and supplies of all kinds through waters in which we would hold a strongly fortified base, giving adequate protection to our ships, and so situated as to give an opportunity to make sudden and unexpected attacks upon the enemy's lines of communication, jeopardizing his transport of men and supplies.

"The Panama Canal has been a strong additional reason for doing this, but the defence of the Pacific coast is also a reason, I think the fundamental reason."

SIR GEORGE IS IN ERROR

Senate [illegible] Three Out Re[illegible] Bills, Says [illegible]

OTTAWA, Jan. [illegible] The contents of the speech from the [illegible] and the naval question were [illegible] debated by the Senate yesterday, [illegible] Daniels, of St. John, Sir [illegible] Bowell, of Belleville, Ont., [illegible] Domville, of Rothesay, N.B., being the speakers.

Senator Daniel took issue with Sir George Ross, who on Thursday described the Senate as a non-partisan body.

"How can that be when there is an Opposition in the Senate and Sir George himself is the leader?" asked Senator Daniel. "To whom is the Opposition. It is opposition to the Government. The Senate should be an independent body, and I favor making it independent of both parties."

Senator Daniel urged that the political parties should come together on the question of defence.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell referred to the cost of living problem. High wages went with the high prices, and the only ones affected by the higher prices of necessaries were those on stated wages.

With regard to redistribution, Sir Mackenzie took issue with Sir George Ross, who said the Senate had thrown out three redistribution bills. He had looked up the record and had found that none of the bills thrown out had been general redistribution bills introduced constitutionally after a census.

Senator Domville urged that the Maritime Provinces ports be given justice by the Government and be treated as generously as were western cities. He predicted that the people would demand satisfaction at the next election of the protectionists, who were now clasping Canada like an octopus.

The debate will continue Monday.

Home Rulers Need No More Money.

DUBLIN, Jan. 24.—The trustees of the Irish Home Rule Fund are so confident of the home rule bill passing the House of Commons within the next few months that they issued a formal notification yesterday stating that no appeal for funds would be made this year, either in the United States or elsewhere.

Beef Barons Join Forces.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The River Platte Fresh Meat Co. and Jas. Nelson & Sons, two of the largest British concerns in the meat trade, have amalgamated. The amalgamation was brought about, it is said, in order effectively to fight the invasion of Great Britain by American meat concerns.

SPEND LESS AND BORROW LESS

Canada Must Go Slow Sir Edward Holden Says.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Sir Edward Holden, famous banking authority, made an important speech yesterday on international finance and currency. After dealing with the position of France, Sir Edward referred at some length to Canada, United States and India.

Canada, he said, has borrowed in London during the past three years about £120,000,000 sterling. During 1913 she borrowed about £44,000,000. Her imports during 1912 amounted to about £127,000,000 sterling, and the interest which she has to pay in respect to the money borrowed is approximately at least £15,000,000. Her exports for the year amounted to about £80,000,000, therefore, after paying for her imports with her exports, she has to provide the sum of about £72,000,000 as her borrowings in this market have amounted to about £44,000,000. The balance of her indebtedness, for which provision has been made, amounts to about 28 millions sterling.

Judging from these facts it would appear, in Sir Edward's opinion to be the obvious duty of Canada to go slowly, expand less and borrow less, but it would be a mistaken policy for investors in the country to button up their pockets against further Canadian loans, so long as securities are of first-class character.

Enquiry Begins on Tuesday.

QUEBEC, Jan. 24.—Two committees will be in session next week probing the charges of corruption preferred by The Montreal Daily Mail against three members of the Legislature.

After a short discussion yesterday afternoon it was resolved by the Legislative Council to appoint a committee composed of Hon. Messrs. Turgeon, Chapais, and Champagne, to investigate the charges against Hon. Messrs. Bergevin and Berard. The committee will hold its first sitting next Tuesday afternoon, on the same day that the committee of the Lower House sits to examine similar charges against Mr. J. O. Mousseau.

Killed by Radial Car.

TORONTO, Jan. 24.—Residents in North Yonge street were horrified last night by the addition of another fatal accident to the long list already to the credit of high-speed radial cars. George James, 174 Woburn avenue, was the victim, and even the cutter he was driving was shattered to splinters. The horse was killed.

DIRECTORS' REPORT

The Directors submit herewith their twenty-ninth Annual Report showing the result of the business for the past year accompanied by the Balance Sheet to the 31st of December, 1913.

The gross earnings for the year were $286,422.83, and after the payment of interest on deposits and debentures and all expenses of management, there remained a net profit of $157,102.01. To this amount has been added $53,232.54, the balance carried forward from last year, which makes a total sum for distribution of $210,334.55.

This amount has been disposed of in the following manner:

(1)	By payment of Four Quarterly Dividends at the rate of 10 per cent. for the year, amounting to	$100,000.00
(2)	By addition to Reserve Fund	50,000.00
(3)	By amount carried forward to Profit and Loss Account	60,334.55

The above addition to the Reserve Fund increases it to $850,000.00 or 85 per cent. of the present Paid-up Capital.

All payments maturing during the year on the Company's investments have been satisfactorily met, and the results from the property owned by the Company have also been promptly paid. The books, accounts and securities of the Company have been carefully examined by the Auditors, and their Report is attached to the Financial Statement.

It is with feelings of deep regret that we have to record the death of Senator Geo. A. Cox who was President of the Company since its inception and to whom in a very large degree, the present strong position of the Company is due.

"ONLOOKER" PUTS IN PLEA FOR JUSTICE

He Recalls the Meeting of the Police Board When the Ladies Asked for the Appointment of Police Woman

If a mere man who strayed into the Clerk's Office last Saturday may be permitted to speak, are not all the members of the Women's Council somewhat unkind in their criticism of the Police Commissioners? Such wise men ought not to be lectured anyway by petty grievances as those adduced; whatever are the women of the present day thinking of? Even suppose two or three score of boys and girls come to grief annually what then? They'll keep it quiet enough! The people most concerned never think of dragging those nasty skeletons out of their closets and rattling the unsightly bones before official eyes! If the banks are protected and indecencies carefully hidden what more do sensible people want?

Onlooker was touched to the marrow at the words of the Magistrate, so logically answering the disagreeable accumulation of facts raked up by the deputation. He pointed out that sin had entered in at the beginning—one felt that his presence at the Creation would have prevented that! He was emphatically of the opinion that therefore this Sin would continue to the end—let the women quietly escape it and bear it with fortitude. Let girls be warned by pulpits, mothers and teachers, ineffectual as such methods must be. Then, with unanswerable logic he challenged the deputation in ringing tones enquiring if they were sufficiently in earnest to contribute to the erection of a nice new Rescue Home. With characteristic generosity he eloquently urged the ladies to raise funds to build a commodious, perfectly equipped Rescue Home equal to the accommodation of a large number of future occupants and in charge of a gentle, motherly, loving woman—say from the Salvation Army—who would love and pity these poor girls and bind up their broken lives with the balm of her sympathy. This he urged with tender solicitude. What a comfort to the mothers of Peterboro to be thus assured that when their daughters, through shame, drop out of the ordinary activities of life such an asylum as that glowingly pictured by the Magistrate will be provided. Truly

"Kind hearts are more than coronets
And simple faith than Norman blood."

With men like that planning for the public good why need these women go fussing and annoying them?

Then the S. A. Adjutant who apparently acted as a friend in need to the harassed Commissioners was warmly welcomed by the Chairman. For a while the atmosphere became indeed surcharged with beautiful assurances of brotherly love—the window had to be opened! Excessive as were the expressions of affection and admiration on the part of the Commissioners for him, the Adjutant tried to seem humble and succeeded fairly well; assuring all present reiteratedly that he was thoroughly disinterested, but was opposed to a Police Woman, because of certain convictions that fortified him against all conceivable allurements or dangers. Yet in the face of this splendid courage and fine adherence to principle so convincingly reiterated Onlooker heard a guarded "Methinks he protesteth too much," from a member of the Delegation! She must sure have been a Militant poor thing!

Everyone stopped breathing when the Chairman, the Judge, rose to speak. He too, like the Adjutant, had convictions and would be as heroically true to them as the former speaker in spite of all the signatures in Peterboro to a petition, or endorsations of Public Bodies either! The gallant blow with which he then nearly felled the table was as convincing and impressive as the Adjutant's ardent protestations! Some of the babies visibly paled! Doubtless being a Judge and a Representative of Peace he had not permitted himself, noblesse oblige, to form even a definite opinion on the matter until after the case had been duly presented by the Deputation. But it was strikingly apparent that, having reached certain conclusions almost immediately, these conclusions became reduced to Convictions with a lightning rapidity possible only to a very Great Mind—a mind too colossal to be ever moved by the united prayers of the citizens, let alone women! The thought of a Woman Police was distasteful —a sort of a fifth wheel to the Civic Chariot now rolling along so comfortably on four; and with his customary candor and Washingtonian truthfulness he spoke out even at the risk of wrecking the hopes of the array of loveliness he had so gallantly welcomed into the Presence at their first entrance.

Then that this Utterance might be relieved of its sombre and almost harsh sincerity the Judge with the native tact and polish which is his chiefest charm, diverted the minds of the now despairing Delegation by returning to the subject of the Salvation Army and thinking dimly that a solution of this vexed question might eventually be reached through that medium.

Not an eye remained dry as he told in touching accents how his Christmas joys had been accentuated by receiving a Christmas card from former Adjutant Merritt. Is it not worthy of note that so great a gentlemen, one who stands high in the estimation not only of Peterborough but of the whole surrounding County should feel so exquisite a gratification through the remembrance of a humble friend! It was one of those touches of Nature which makes the whole world kin, and transformed the prosaic room into a place of almost unearthly beauty. Undoubtedly the ladies felt for the moment, like Onlooker, that after all there are compensations for even the lack of a Police Woman!

The Chief too was there urbane and unruffled. A fine commanding figure is our Chief and doubly so on the rare occasions on which he decorates our town in uniform. One too who bears the arduous duties of his office with kindly ease. He remained calm and unperturbed through all the length of naughty occurrences recited by the ladies. Well might he exclaim with Demosthenes of old, "Not often doth the truth embarrass ME." With anxious eye and bated breath the ladies searched his benign and impassive countenance for an answer to the burning question. Will he or will he not advocate a police woman? But eager scrutiny avails not for the Chief, like the Sphinx, "looks wise and says nothing." Do thoughts too deep for words lie behind that inscrutable countenance?

The last of this noble Triumvirate of Commissioners to address the meeting was the Mayor. He was slightly more optimistic than the previous speaker being, as he stated, a newcomer among them. His declaration, on the eve of the election contest, to stand for a police-woman doubtless contributed to his sanguine frame of mind and he at least appeared to be untramelled by any predetermined judgment—or tyrannical convictions. He repeatedly assured the ladies that something would be done and his hope seemed also to lie vaguely in the direction of the Salvation Army. His candour was refreshing; his promptness in settling the difficulties confronting the Commissioners regarding the wholesale accosting of girls on the street will inspire our citizens with renewed confidence in his ability to manage all civic affairs gloriously. His directions to secure public safety were simple and efficient. When a girl is accosted let her just run into the first house and let the men of the house at once run out and either capture or chase away the offenders. The mere contemplation of this complete and dramatic routing of the villains fairly dazzled "Onlooker," who went out gaily "whistling, "Lo, The Conquering Hero Comes," to the tune of "Old Hundred."

NOVEL WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The 400 shivering, unkempt men who formed the bread line at the Bowery mission had only pleasant memories of the novel way in which Mr. and Mrs. Finley Shepard celebrated their first wedding anniversary. Mrs. Shepard was formerly Miss Helen Gould.

Instead of the usual bread and coffee, each hungry wayfarer received a hot roast beef sandwich, coffee, pie, crullers and fruit at the expense of Mr. and Mrs. Shepard.

Seeking to Influence Jury.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24. — Because someone has been writing anonymously to the jurors in the case, Justice Vernon M. Davis of the Supreme Court, before whom Hans Schmidt, a former priest, charged with the murder of Anna Aumuller, is on re-trial, yesterday earnestly cautioned the jurymen against discussing the case with anyone, and requested them to refrain from reading newspaper articles or communications relative to the crime.

Crane Runs Foul of Wires.

STRATFORD, Jan. 24. — A big crane on the Grand Trunk's Goderich line, running over the Wellington street bridge yesterday, went foul of many telephone, telegraph and fire alarm wires. Nine fire alarm boxes were put out of commission.

Lack of Legislation.

"I am told that sometimes the Eskimos chew boots and shoes for nourishment."

"Well," replied the systematic man, "I suppose that's what they get for not having any proper pure food laws."

Arctic Iron Mine.

The richest and perhaps largest iron ore mine in the world is at Kiruna, Lapland, as far north as northernmost Alaska. The climate is milder than that of Alaska, and the mine is worked the year around.

Out of Practice.

Sandy McMickle, the gray-haired executioner of Bermuda, has not hanged a man in 37 years, but has drawn the modest salary that goes with the job. Recently he was notified that he would have to preside at the hanging of a negro recently convicted of murdering another negro. The court fixed the day of the execution. Sandy asked to be excused because he was old, his nerves a bit unsteady and because he was wofully out of practice.

The authorities decided to let Sandy off and engaged a British soldier, in prison in Bermuda for assaulting his superior officer, to do the job. The soldier, surnamed Piper, said he was willing provided he received freedom, $100 and free passage to England. This was granted, and, it is said, he may not officiate, as the visitors there have asked the authorities to postpone the hanging until April. This is now seriously being considered.

When In Search of a New Sweet Try Banana Titbits.

Here is a novel idea for a sweet dish: Peel and split a banana, lay both halves together on a large plate, says Table Talk. On the top of the banana put a layer of vanilla ice cream, and over this put a little grated or crushed pineapple, a few chopped almonds or nuts, and lastly one tablespoonful of whipped and sweetened cream on top and finish with a cherry placed in the center of the cream.

CORNETS A LA CREME.
DELICIOUS SWEET TITBIT.

Now for a delicious sweet titbit: Roll out some pastry very thin into a length about sixteen inches, cut this into strips one inch wide, wet along one edge of each, butter some cornet molds on the outside and wrap round the pastry, allowing the wetted side to wrap over each fold; brush over the top with a little beaten egg, bake in a hot oven for twelve minutes, and then allow to get quite cold. Beat up one cupful of cream, add one tablespoonful of sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract, and with this fill each of the cases. Decorate with small pieces of angelica.

The right invariably triumphs—at least that is the feeling a man always has when he happens to beat the other fellow to it.

TRIED TO GET AT THE PRINCE

Insurance Man's Attempt on German Heir is Balked.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—An unsuccessful attempt to attack Crown Prince Frederick William of Germany was made yesterday afternoon as he was alighting from his automobile at his palace.

A man ran into the carriage way and reached the door of the motor car.

The sentry on duty in front of the palace dashed forward and seized the would-be assailant of the prince and overpowered him.

The man is believed to be suffering from mental derangement.

The crown prince has made himself unpopular among certain classes by his support of the army as against civilians.

FALLING HAIR

Many People Have a Simple Way of Stopping It—They Use Parisian Sage.

It was Dr. Sangerbond of Paris who first discovered that dandruff and falling hair were caused by a microbe.

And now that Parisian Sage, the remedy that kills the dandruff germ, is sold in every town in Canada, the people of this country have awakened to the fact that dandruff is unnecessary; that falling hair and itching scalp can be quickly stopped, and that the people who use Parisian Sage will never grow bald.

To every reader of The Review who wishes to eradicate offensive dandruff, stop falling hair and have an immaculately clean scalp, free from itchiness, the Warne Drug Co. say they will sell Parisian Sage in a large fifty cent bottle with a guarantee to refund the money if not satisfied. It is an ideal, daintily perfumed hair dressing, free from grease and stickiness that will put life and beauty into dull faded hair and cause it to grow luxuriant.

E. N. LEWIS, M.P., URGES REFORMS ON INLAND WATERS

Member for Huron in Debate in the Commons Also Favors Increase in Savings Bank Rate When Bank Rate Goes Up—Senate Exceeded Rights When It Amended the Highways Aid Bill.

OTTAWA, Jan. 24.—The debate upon the address yesterday was resumed by Mr. E. W. Nesbitt, Liberal member for North Oxford, and continued by E. N. Lewis, the Conservative member for West Huron, Mr. J. H. Sinclair, the Liberal member for Guysboro, N.S., and Solicitor-General Meighen.

Mr. Nesbitt made a plea for the removal of the duties upon wheat and flour imported from the United States. The farmers of Ontario, he said, had no objection to free wheat, and the farmers of Western Canada were unanimous in their demand for it.

Mr. Meighen said in reply that he was not at liberty to discuss the tariff policy of the Government, which would be announced in due time by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech.

In reply to a question, the Government announced that it had under consideration the proposal to extend the time for filing applications under the Fenian Raid Bounties Act.

Mr. Lesperance, the Conservative member from Montmagny, announced his determination to bring in a bill to repeal the Naval Act, but denied that he had carried on any negotiations with the Opposition or was actuated by any hostility toward Quebec members of the Cabinet.

Mr. Nesbitt (North Oxford) said that the Senate by rejecting the naval aid bill had made possible the naval holiday now urged by Mr. Churchill. The people of Canada desired naval defence and were anxious to relieve the British taxpayer from the burden of protecting Canada. But they were not desirous of entering European politics nor the European competition in armaments.

Referring to tariff questions, Mr. Nesbitt said the Liberals favored a tariff upon fancy canned goods and delicacies. They only wanted staple foods admitted free of duty. He contended that the Canadian cheese industry was on the decline in spite of protection. The Oxford farmers sold their milk for shipment to Detroit at $1.90 per one hundred pounds, while the cheese factories only offered $1.20.

"What the farmer of this country wants," Mr. Nesbitt continued, "is not protection nor education, but lower freight rates and wider markets. If the Western farmers do not want the tariff against American wheat, why retain it?"

Mr. Lewis (West Huron) gave a graphic description of the terrible shipwrecks upon the Great Lakes last November. Fourteen fine vessels had been lost, eight of them disappearing altogether with all on board. He believed that the disaster might have been averted if a hurricane call had been sent out on the fatal Sunday, and if the port of Goderich had been properly equipped as a port of refuge.

Mr. Lewis also advocated the establishment of a load line for vessels upon the Great Lakes.

Mr. Lewis then referred to the interest charged by the chartered banks. At the present time he was paying 8 per cent., although the Bank Act fixed the legal rate at 7. He contended that when the banks raised their rates of discount from 6 to 8 per cent. they should increase their rate of interest made to their depositors from 3 to 4 per cent.

The West Huron member also advocated compensation for innocent persons improperly convicted and imprisoned, and suggested that all immigration hereafter from southeastern Europe be forbidden by law.

Mr. Sinclair (Guysboro) said the Prime Minister had no well-defined or settled opinions upon any subject of public interest. The Conservative party, according to Mr. Sinclair, was put in power by the combines, and was at their beck and call. Their cry now was to "leave bad enough alone." The Government, he said, gave a fine exhibition of "coupon patriotism." They had been warned to profit by the lesson of South Bruce and get away from the domination of the railways and the financial junta at Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Meighen (Portage la Prairie) made an elaborate constitutional argument to show that the Senate had exceeded its rights in amending the highways bills. He defended that measure as being within the competency of Parliament and conceived in the public interest.

The debate will be resumed on Monday.

Confession Was False.

SOMERVILLE, N.J., Jan. 24.—Paul Carl, the young man who a week ago confessed that he was guilty of shooting Monroe F. Ellis, a wealthy lumberman of Basking Ridge, N.J., was yesterday discharged from custody. The county prosecutor told the court that Carl's confession had been proven false in every way.

Ellis was shot two years ago while sitting at dinner by somebody who fired a shotgun through the window. He recovered, but has been able to give the police no clue as to his assailant.

MAY EXTEND LAWS.

U. S. Anti-Trust Legislation More Complete Than Announced.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The anti-trust legislative program as outlined in bills made public Thursday, is not the last word in proposed remedial legislation to regulate big business. That the tentative measures submitted may be altered or extended was emphasized yesterday in both branches of Congress and the President let it be known that he did not consider the forms of the bills drafted closed.

Pursuant to the purpose of administration leaders to exhaust the subject, it was determined by the House judiciary and Senate interstate commerce commission not to introduce at the present time the interlocking directorate prohibition, definitions of restraint and specification of "cut throat" competition. Hearings on the question are to be held before the bills go to Congress.

The interstate commerce commission bill introduced Thursday will be taken up to-day by the House interstate and foreign commerce commission, which may see fit to alter the provisions suggested by the judiciary sub-committee and Senator Newlands, chairman of the Senate interstate commerce commission. The fifth of the proposed bills, that to authorize Federal regulation of railroad securities, probably will not be drawn for several weeks.

HELD UP SLEEPERS.

Lone Bandit Made Porters Help Him In Daring Job.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—With the assistance of two reluctant but badly scared porters, a lone bandit held up four passengers on the rear sleeper of the Michigan Central passenger train due here from Detroit at 7.30 o'clock yesterday morning. The affair netted the bandit something under $300.

The robber entered the train at Jackson, Miss., and left it about fifteen minutes later when Louis Thombs, one of the porters, signalled for the emergency brakes.

There were about twenty passengers in the car, and most of them did not know that anything had happened until they arose in the morning. The hold-up took place at 1.45 o'clock. There were no women in the car.

Claims To Be Strathcona's Son.

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—Asserting that he is the son of Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, late High Commissioner for Canada, James H. Smith, of Brookline, will take steps, it is said, to obtain recognition of his interests in the vast estate. Mr. Smith refused last night to talk about it, but his wife said counsel had been engaged to represent him in presenting his claim to the executors of Lord Strathcona.

Mastiff Takes a Cab.

M. Clemenceau, the French statesman, owns a large and fierce mastiff whose habit it is from time to time to make long excursions into outlying parts of Paris. When he is tired the dog will jump into a horse cab, and sit there growling and showing his teeth if the cabman attempts to remove him. Seeing the name and address of M. Clemenceau engraved on the dog's brass collar, the cabman finally drives the dog home. In this way M. Clemenceau has had several long fares to pay.

As They Appear To-day.

When a prosperous and respected citizen is discovered to have a past in which figures a prison cell he is a "modern Jean Valjean."

When a woman shows a desire to get out and fight with the troops instead of melting lead to form bullets or making lint bandages she is a "modern Joan of Arc."

When a traveler, long-considered deceased, returns and finds his wife wedded to another he is a "modern Enoch Arden."

ICE JAM IS CAUSING WORRY

Bridge of Ice on the St. Lawrence May Cause Flooding.

MORRISBURG, Ont., Jan. 24.—There has been uneasiness felt along this section of the St. Lawrence river this week owing to an ice bridge having formed between the head of Croil's Island and the Farran's Point Canal. Ice bridges at the head of the Long Sault Rapids have on two or three occasions in the past thirty years brought on huge ice jams, with the resultant backing up of the water of the mighty St. Lawrence, sending the waters inland from the shore line, and causing much damage between Farran's Point and Morrisburg, besides incidentally providing a spectacular show ranking among the most impressive on the continent. During the present winter there has been some unusually cold weather, also a large amount of snow, conditions making for ice jams at the Sault.

Here a current prevents the river from freezing, and masses of ice are daily floating down stream. Men in the employ of the Massena Power Co., together with volunteer workers, are at work with dynamite and axes, and have hopes of saving the situation.

A MOTHER'S DUTY TO HER DAUGHTER

Is to Guard Her Health by Keeping Her Blood Supply Pure.

Anxious mothers who see their daughters fail in strength, become pale and languid, can be certain that the cause of their anxiety is the condition of the growing girl's blood. At no time in her life does a girl stand in greater need of pure, red blood and the strength which it alone can give her, than when she is developing into womanhood. It is then that anaemia rapidly develops and the growing girl finds herself in declining health. If your daughter complains of feeling constantly tired, if her appetite is fickle, if she is breathless from slight exertion, or if her heart palpitates violently on going upstairs, it is a certain sign that her blood is failing to meet the demands upon it, because it is thin and watery. It is at such times that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are worth their weight in gold to tired anaemic girls. They actually make the new, red blood that brings brightness to the eye, the bloom of health to the cheeks, and strength and activity to the whole body. The following is an instance of their value to young girls. Miss Hilda Pearl Snowe, Barrington, N.S., gradually drooped under an attack of anaemia. At first she was pale and listless, suffering from occasional headaches, but as the trouble progressed, a severe cough also attacked her and her friends feared she was in the grip of consumption. Almost from the outset she was being treated medically, but with no apparent benefit. At a critical stage in her illness Miss Snowe wisely decided that she would give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial. After taking them for some time there was a noticeable improvement in her case and the Pills were gladly continued until she was fully restored to health. Miss Snowe is today as healthy and rugged as any girl could wish to be, and her friends believe that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved her life.

These Pills not only cure anaemia, but all troubles due to poor blood and weak nerves. Sold by all medicine dealers, or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A MYSTERY SOLVED

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The manager of the Sloan Detective agency pressed a button as he hung up the telephone receiver.

"Send Birch in," he ordered as a shock headed office boy appeared.

"Yes, sir."

Almost instantly the door opened to admit a broad shouldered young man, alert of manner, with keen gray eyes and resolute mouth.

"You wish to see me, Mr. Sloan?" he asked.

The other nodded. "Sit down there. I say, Bob, there's been another one of those confounded murders. It's Hinman, the banker, this time."

"Josiah Hinman?" Birch's eyebrows went up. "Our greatest philanthropist and the most harmless of men! What are the details, sir?"

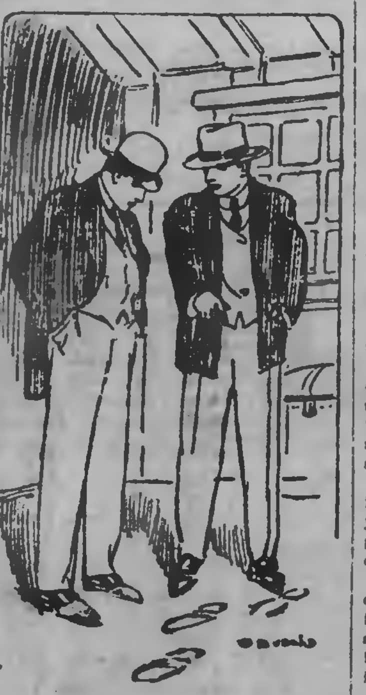
"Oh, same as the other three. He was found murdered in his bed this morning. Doors of the house locked, no signs of windows being tampered with, servants all old retainers, not an enemy in the world that we know about, and yet found dead by his valet."

"How was it done?"

"In just the same manner as Flickinger, the railroad king, and Benson, who was, as you remember, Flickinger's right hand man—stabbed through the heart with a dagger of foreign make. I'm going up there, and I want you to come on with me."

"You know I'd like nothing better," returned the other eagerly. "Mr. Hinman was very kind to me when I was a boy. He gave me my first chance in the world."

"I know. He's helped a lot of other people too. He was a fine old chap. Funny how they've picked out three men all interested in the L. B. M. railroad. I've no doubt the same gang turned the three tricks."



SAW FOOTPRINTS IN THE DUST.

"There wasn't a clew in the other two cases," mused Birch as the manager's automobile stopped before a handsome stone house on the finest avenue of the small city.

In five minutes they were in the death chamber of the mansion, and Sloan was rapping out questions to the agitated valet faster than the man could find replies. When the interview was concluded they were not much wiser than before.

"I have not touched a thing, nor has the doctor," ended Blunt tearfully. "He must have been asleep, for the papers were folded on the bedside table, as was his custom, and the light was out, although the murderer might have done that."

"Very true," said Sloan. "Now, my man, if you will leave us alone"—

Blunt went out and closed the door, and the two detectives were left alone in the room from which Mr. Hinman's body had been removed a short while after their arrival. The two men had diligently searched the luxurious apartment and after that every room in the house, and now they stood silently regarding the only clew at hand.

The slender, blood stained dagger.

"What data have you concerning the Flickinger and the Benson cases?" asked Sloan.

Birch referred to his memorandum book.

"The most important is that I learned that four men who had been discharged by the railroad company had threatened harm to Mr. Flickinger and his secretary. I could find no trace of these men. It was said that one of them was really a titled foreigner down on his luck, that he had passed through all the phases of good and bad fortune and he had failed to make good."

"I guess he's the man we're after," said Sloan. "What name?"

"Van Benjidck."

"You've searched every room in the house, Birch?"

"Yes, and had a man to take records of all finger prints. I say every room in the house. There's one place I've been through, and I've a notion to go there again. Come with me."

Sloan followed Birch through the hall and up a flight of stairs to the third floor, where there were several bedchambers and a billiard room under the mansard roof. From the passage a door led into an open attic that ran across the back of the house. A window at the back overlooked the wing containing the servants' quarters, and overhead was a trapdoor leading to the roof. A narrow ladder led to the trapdoor.

From the doorway where they stood they could see that the dust of the floor was untracked near the window, and any hope that the murderer might have gained the roof of the wing and entered the house by the attic window was at once dispelled.

Suddenly Birch touched his chief's arm.

"Look there, sir," he whispered.

Sloan bent his keen eyes to the floor and saw the trace of footprints in the dust. Some one had passed from the ladder to the passageway and gone back again. Instantly Birch had made a detour, so as not to disturb the telltale marks with his own boots and he was up the ladder and was lifting the trapdoor.

"Unfastened, sir," he reported; "evidently pried up from the roof—lock broken."

He passed up on to the roof, and Sloan followed.

The large expanse of flat, tinned roof was surrounded by a fanciful iron railing. In one place the railing had disappeared. There was a gap of perhaps fifteen feet. Birch crept to the edge of the roof and peered over.

"Funny thing," he commented; "that iron railing is down on the ground there—looks as though it had recently fallen. Let's have Blunt up here." He fetched the valet, and the two detectives pointed out the broken railing to the astonished servant.

"But, sir," he protested, "I am sure it was not broken yesterday, because the gardener would have removed it. He cut the grass yesterday and cleaned up the yard thoroughly. You see, it has fallen directly underneath the library windows, and some of it sticks right up in the turf."

"You heard no sound in the night, you are sure?"

"I am sure, sir. I sleep in the wing yonder, and at the head of my bed is a bell that connects with Mr. Hinman's room. One of the servants in the house next door was coming home from a party very late last night or early this morning, and she declares she saw a big blackbird hovering over this house. She is very superstitious, sir, and I suppose she's imagined that since hearing of the murder."

"Very likely," said Sloan in a peculiar tone, and his eyes met those of his young assistant with a significant glance. "Thank you, Blunt. That will do for the present."

When the valet had disappeared down the trapdoor Birch dropped to his knees and made a searching examination of the roof. In the slight layer of dust some clew might be found.

"It's here, sir"—he looked up with a smiling face—"the tracks of the 'big blackbird.' And the discovery reveals how the other two murders were committed."

Sloan knelt down beside him and watched the movement of Birch's fingers as he pointed out the tracks made by the rubber tired landing wheels of an aeroplane. When the machine had made its departure it had carried away fifteen feet of the ornamental railing from the roof.

"Find a foreigner who answers to the description of Van Benjidck. If he is a skilled aviator he's your man," was Sloan's decision.

"You remember that the residence of Mr. Flickinger is of this same type—flat roof and so forth?" questioned Birch as they returned to the office.

"I remember, and I also recollect that Thomas Benson lived at the Hotel Batwell, and his room was in the annex, a flat roofed wing.

Once in the office Sloan picked up the afternoon edition of a New York newspaper. Suddenly he uttered a sharp exclamation and pointed to a glaring headline on the front page.

"You won't have to look any further, Birch! Your man's found and lost—gone to his reward! Listen to this:

"'Another daring aviator met death early this morning in some unknown manner. Rudolf Benjidck, well known as a fearless flier, was found crushed to death under the body of his heavy aeroplane on the grounds of the Broadbrook Country club. It is not known at what moment or under what circumstances Benjidck met his death, but it is supposed that he was trying out the big machine which he recently purchased. An investigation is being made into the matter.'"

Robert Birch had arisen and was buttoning his coat.

"I'll be there at that investigation," he said grimly.

Two days afterward he returned to the office with a chain of evidence that left no doubt that the unlucky aviator had been the murderer of the three men, whom he believed had worked him harm. The shoes he had worn corresponded in every detail with the footprints found in the attic of the Hinman house, and in his pockets were found not only Mr. Hinman's jewelry, but diamonds that were afterward identified as the property of James Flickinger.

There was nothing left to do in the matter. Retribution had overtaken the murderer before he could make use of his guilty gains. The "big blackbird" had proved a bird of evil omen to him.

Ever Faithful.

"Henry, I believe you are like all the men. When I give you letters to mail you think it's a good joke to carry them for days and days in your pocket."

"Abigail, I give you my word I mail every one of them—eventually."—Chicago Tribune.

PETES LACKED THE FIGHTING SPIRIT IN SECOND HALF

Belleville Turned the Tables After Their Visitors Had Netted Two Goals---

SCORE WAS 3-2

The Intermediate Petes failed to go the distance at Belleville last night, and as a result victory that was expectedwith the two goals at the end of the first half was turned into rout when the 60 minutes had come and gone. The final score was 3—2.

That the Belleville septet did not get a dozen goals, was due to the brilliant work of Janes in the nets for Peterboro. His job was made more difficult, because the greater portion of the play in the second half was in Peterboro territory. With his defence men and the homesters forwards buzzing around, scores that were registered, might not have been had Janes had an open view of the proceedings. The rubber dribbled toward the nets for the first score, with the players bunched outside the nets.

Some of the fans still doubt that the rubber went past the goal line. But the Belleville goal umpire hoisted the white flag and the home crowd raised a noise like a suffragette demonstration. The next two tallies were bounders off players' sticks.

There wasn't anything that looked like a nice rush, an accurate pass and a hot shot, coming from the Belleville seven. But in a game of hockey, it doesn't matter how the puck gets in, so long as the umpire does his little piece.

The Petes had one good shot in that fatal second half and that was all. Kelly sent the disc netward but the rubber connected with the post.

The Petes Faded

The reversal of form as seen in the work of the locals, sent a cold shiver through the small band of their supporters. They didn't even look like a good Junior team. True the ice was soft, and very sticky, but that alone should not have turned them on their heads. Denison, who had the crowd applauding his work in the first half, couldn't take the puck the length of his stick and the four forwards were but little more successful.

As for the homesters, they started the second half like a different team, and bow they kept up the pace to the finish must have astonished the fifteen hundred spectators. They over-skated the puck, just as the Petes did, but they fought every minute. That's what gave them the honors.

Park and Denison Scored

Park and Denison bulged the netting the first half for the Petes, the registration not being made till the game had gone eighteen minutes. During the time Captain Giroux's company looked like a superior team. They did not play a combination game, as attempted by Belleville, but they were more effective individually. Their back checking smothered the other fellows, who tried to make the nets on two and three man plays. When the forwards couldn't stop them, Bond and Denison filled the gap and what got through the defence men, was wasted, as Janes was in the way. He had a number of short low shots, any one of which might have leaked in, had he not been on the alert.

During this period Bradshaw was as good as any player on the ice. He is finding himself at right wing and before the district is decided, he should be at home at that position.

Park batted in the first goal from a scrimmage and Denison took the next counter, after Bradshaw bad rushed the rubber to the Belleville defence. It was thirty minutes of good hockey.

Some Extra Specials

The incidentals to the game were rather lively. Soon after the battle started a fistic-rough-and-tumble go caused some excitement. Slashing followed when Park took a spill. Two Belleville players joined in the melee and Giroux followed suit. The result was that Simmons and the Petes' captain did a turn in the coop.

At another stage of the engagement spectators along the boards endulged in some rough tactics to which the locals objected. The referee saw it too and gave orders that it should not be repeated. "Kill Kelly" and "Get Giroux" were popular war cries by the rowdy element, as the fans had been told a lot of yarns about rough work in Peterboro. Everybody in Belleville with the exception of Bradley himself, blamed Kelly as being responsible for that player's injury, in consequence of which he carries one arm in a sling. Bradley says the local boy was not intentionally rough and he has nothing to say against Kelly.

In the second half with two minutes to go, the gong sounded for the finish. The score was 2—2. Investigation showed one of the timekeepers was out in his time and play was continued. No more than a minute had gone when a shot from Doyer landed in the nets and Belleville were leading. The Petes forced the play for the remaining minute but couldn't pull the string.

Rescued by the Cops!

As the Peterboro players were trailing into the dressing rooms, Kelly was abused and threatened. Some half-drunken Belleville fan made a lunge at him, but Tommy Moffatt, who was nearby, got the full benefit of the attack, as two bands circled his neck. The local players jumped to the rescue and peace and quietness did not come till two cops arrived on the scene. Without any of the Peterboro crowd making the suggestion, the blue coated ones remained on guard and stayed with the Peterboro contingent till the hotel was reached.

The teams:

Belleville—goal, Brotherhood, defence, T. Brant and Doyer; rover, Dunning; centre, Whalen, wing, Simmons and S. Brant.

Peterboro—goal, Janes; defence, Bond and Denison; rover, Giroux; centre, Park; wings, Kelly and Bradshaw.

EXCITING GAME AT PARKER'S RINK

Parker's rink was the scene of a very exciting game of hockey last night from 10 to 11. The game was to be between the Queen Mary School and the Arrows, but owing to the Queen Mary septet being able to produce only three players, the Arrows had to lend them the remaining players and as a result, the Queen Mary won to the tune of 7 to 4.

As the regular lineups were not played, this game will be played again in the near future.

One kind of a nuisance is always telling you that "you ought to take something for that before it is too late."

Although they fought gamely for the honors, the local Junior O.H.A. team was forced to take second place in the battle for the supremacy of this district. The final game was played last night in Kingston and Jim Sutherland's aggregation defeated Capt. Halpin's crew to the tune of 6—2.

vented war between Norway and Sweden at the time of the separation. The speaker made a very strong point when he instanced the Krup scandal of last year. This company like many other great supply companies to war departments, had very influential men among its stockholders—peers, financiers, newspaper owners, politicians—and it was to their interest to create war scares, to preach loyalty, the need of dreadnoughts and armies. The object of a semi-feudal class in Germany today was no doubt to draw the red herring of foreign entanglements across the path of reform, but democracy was rising too quickly.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the speaker said the number of facts on the other side was encouraging and referred to the arguments of Norman Angel. The most powerful factor in maintaining peace is the growing importance of international credit. More and more nations are doing their business on credit, a vast pyramid resting on an open of a very small amount of gold. Highly elaborate banking mechanism forms part of modern business. Credit is becoming internationanl. More and more nations are lending abroad. firms and corporations have international dealings, making the whole world a single financial market. When Cleveland issued his ultimatum to Venezuela hundreds of millions were dropped on the New York Stock Exchange and if Britain bombarded New York this loss would be borne by British Insurance companies to a very great amount. So far as finance is concerned, war is unlikely in highly civilized states. The war in the Balkans is a case in point. These states had a very primitive form of agriculture, no developed finance or organized commerce to speak of, were more like England in the twelfth century, than the 20th and the war did not seriously effect other nations like England and the United States.

A famous Russion Bloc, has claimed that science has made war so deadly by quick firing guns, motors, war balloons and aeroplanes and so costly that the defensive side in a war has an impregnable advantage.

More important is the growth and strength of democracy and the power of labor. Organized labor is realising on whom the burden of war falls, and has weight in the councils of the world.

Again, there is the organized effort for peace. In the past there have been scattered thinkers with their dreams of peace, but there is nothing to approach the modern movement. Carnegie has instituted his peace foundations; history is being rewritten with more fairness for opponents, so that we are not being poisoned from the beginning. International travel and Hague Conferences also conduce to peace, the latter having secured such victories as international law amendments regarding the collection of debts, restricted use of the more terrible forms of weapons, as the soft nosed bullet and the growth of arbitration treaties. There is no case of an arbitration award being rejected within the last sixty years.

What Canada Can Do.

Turning to Canada, he said we have to become worse before we could become better, for no one nation could safely begin disarmament. So long as one nation arms we will have to arm or else sponge upon Britain. There is a difference of opinion as to what form Canada's war preparation should take. If we are going to take part in the defence of the Empire, whatever method we adopt, let it be for peace. Canada should use its influence to bring about freedom of private property at sea from seizure, as it is exempt on land, except for strategic purposes. At the last Hague Conference there were two failures, compulsory arbitration, blocked by Germany and freedom of private property at sea, blocked by England, the latter thinking she had more to gain by such a stand. But England is in a losing position, for half the merchant fleet of the world sails under the British flag for the protection of which fleet she has a decreasing naval protection, due to the growth of the navies of foreign powers.

In one respect Canada and the United States were setting an example to the world in the case of the Treaty of Arbitration—relating to water rights and powers along the boundary which on the petition of one, caused a joint commission to investigate and on the petition of both made it a deciding commission, which is a close approach to compulsory arbitration.

Thus there is every reason to hope that war will come to an end as duelling and the burning of witches have become part of the past. Fleets will probably endure long after war has ceased, and for the present, we should try to lessen jingoism and to understand our neighbors.

A vote of thanks was moved by Sheriff Hall, and seconded by Rev. Mr. Webb, and tendered to the speaker of the evening.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

BELMONT CLUB DANCE.

The annual dance of the Belmont Club, given last night in the Conservatory of Music, was an assemblage of "fair women and brave men," "when soft eyes looked love to eyes that spake again." The artistic decorations, pretty costumes and fair, smiling faces made a scene of wondrous beauty and charm.

Two hundred and fifty guests danced the happy hours away to the unstinted music of Fraelick's orchestra from Toronto. Many guests were present from Toronto, Lindsay, Port Hope, Millbrook and Campbellford. The patronesses were Mesdames E. V. Frederick, A. W. McPherson, J. Hamilton, W. H. Bradburn, R. Denne and E. G. Patterson. Mr. T. H. Hooper was caterer.

A few noticed among the dancers were:—Mrs. Firth, in blue satin and lace; Mrs. R. Turner, in mauve chiffon, lace and diamonds; Mrs. C. Graham, in yellow satin, with pearls; Mrs. Dickson Hall, yellow satin brocade, lace and diamonds; Miss Gertrude Rush, pale blue satin bandeau and aigrette; Miss Helen Howson, pink satin, lace and pearls, aigrette; Miss Lillian Hall, mauve charmeuse and sable trimmings; Miss Linda Hall, blue satin, lace tunic; Miss Rose Mulholland, white satin, marabout bands; Miss Hazel Morris, rose pink silk; Mrs. Frederick, purple silk, black lace and diamonds; Mrs. J. Hamilton, white satin and lace; Miss Patterson, white satin, sequin trimmings; Miss J. Hall, White satin and chiffon; Miss Ola Morris, cream silk; Miss Vie Stevens, red silk; Florence Cameron, blue silk and lace; Miss Gladys Cameron, pale yellow brocade; Mrs. Fleming, white satin beaded lace; Miss Withel Blewett, pale yellow silk, Miss Dela Fosse, chiffon robe; Miss Irene Pentland, flame colored satin black, lace brilliants; Miss Grace Burrett, cream brocade; Miss Rita Cavanagh, cream satin and flame chiffon; Miss Puffer, rose satin and lace; Miss Mattie Robertson, cream brocade tango velvet garniture; Miss Dorothy Allan, white silk bandeau of brilliants; Miss Ruby Cunningham, white silk; Miss McGill, flame color chiffon; Miss White, amber satin and lace; Mrs. R. Denne, white satin; Mrs. McPherson, white silk; Miss Olive Kyle, cream and flame color chiffon; Miss Bessie Brightman, white satin and lace; Mrs. E. T. Carr, white silk; Mrs. F. Hall, cream brocade blue trimmings, and many others. The following guests from a distance were present:—Mr. Dover, Belleville; Miss Gale, Toronto; Mr. Barker, Toronto; Misses Vera and Sybil Brown, Port Hope; Mr. L. E. Stevens, Lindsay; Miss Grobb, St. Catharines; Miss McDonald, Campbellford; Mr. B. W. Pratt, London; Messrs. Beale and Gray, Lindsay. Among the local gentlemen guests were:—Messrs. W. Cochran, R. Hall, W. Thornton, H. and F. Cressman, G. Brisco, J. Lundy, Drs. Frederick and McPherson, F. Jamieson, Ross Cameron, Sidney Rush, Bert McClennan, Fisher, Wright, Eccleston, J. and F. Patterson, Fleming, J. Hamilton, W. R. G. Higgins, J. McNabb, Ahearn, Russel, K. and C. Lech, P. Hooper, F. Linton, McKeen, McDougall, J. Brightman, F. Hall, McIntyre, C. G. Graham, R. Turner, Firth and others.

ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY.

There will be two fifteen minute addresses interspersed with vocal and violin selections of more than usual merit at the entertainment by the Astronomical Society, in the Collegiate Assembly hall on Monday night.

Mr. Firth, of the Collegiate staff, will give an address on "The Ice Age in Canada." This address will be of great interest to us. The topography of the country largely owes its present appearance to that period and then the very interesting fact that the centres of the activity of the glacial period were not found to be centred at the pole. All this and much more will be fully explained by Mr. Firth, who is so well able to handle this subject.

Mr. J. L. Milligan, of The Review editorial staff, who is also a keen student of the sciences will give an address on "Gravitation—What Is It." This part of scientific thought reads almost like a romance. Everything, no matter how apparently still it may appear, is in motion. One scientist has said that there is a probability of there being a system, fully as complete as our solar system, to be found in the smallest atoms of matter.

If this is possible, how infinitely multiplied would be the wonders of creation.

These two gentlemen varied by such artists as Mrs. R. W. Davidson, Miss Logan, and others, should make an evening not to be lightly missed. There will be no charge. Everybody is welcome.

Program—
Chairman—T. A. S. Hay.
Vocal Solo—Mrs. R. W. Davidson.
Recitation—Mr. John.

The monthly concert of Peterborough Lodge, of Oddfellows, will be held next Thursday evening. "Architecture," will be the subject of the address.

It is the desire of the publishers that all take an interest in this column of The Review. If you have friends visiting you, or are going away for a trip, leave word with the editor or send particulars on a post card.

Mrs. T. W. Whalley will receive for the first time since coming to Peterboro, at 308 Boswell Ave., from 4 to 6 o'clock, Jan. 27th, and afterwards on the 4th Tuesday.

The many friends of Mr. Jerry Sheehan will regret to learn that he is confined to his room through illness.

Miss Bertha and Anna Byans, of Havelock, are visiting in the city.

Mr. George Kellcher, of Campbellford, is spending a few days in the city.

A CLEVER IDEA.

Cunning Way to Use Irish Lace Collars on Lingerie.

"What a perfectly darling gown!" cried a girl ecstatically as she bent over a trousseau in the making. "I knew you'd rave over that yoke, Bess," the pleased owner commented.

"But where did you get it? I didn't know that they sold yokes like that for nightdresses. And it's real Irish too!"

"That's the best part of it," laughed the pretty owner complacently. "I didn't buy it, and I've two more gowns with Irish yokes handsomer than that one. That is," she went on, feeling obliged to modify the buying statement, "they weren't bought for the gowns. You see, Bess, they're just every day Irish-Dutch"—and here they both tittered—"collars. I had three that I really didn't need for neckwear, and mother sugested that I make yokes of them. They're just the right size for yokes, and one couldn't ask for a finer gown than one of soft nainsook decked with numerous clusters of tiny pin tucks under an Irish-Dutch collar yoke and tucked across the back, finished off with a valenciennes edge and inset designs of valenciennes insertion. Try it and see. The collars curve beautifully over the front of the gown and just come to the shoulder seams."

For the Linen Closet.

The housewife, whether she be a novice returning from her honeymoon to the new home or the housekeeper of many years, will be delighted with a bag of lavender flowers. Our grandmothers many, many years ago discovered the potency of the lavender flowers and scattered them among the snowy linen. The slight but delicate fragrance that was imparted to the sheets and pillowcases was most refreshing and pleasing to the weary sojourner when he or she sought the bed. No adequate substitute for the lavender flowers has ever been found. And the demand for them is quite as strong today as in previous years. A fresh supply is just now adding to the attractions of the toilet counters, and the bags at 25 cents are finding many purchasers.

Use For Magazine Covers.

Many of the pretty prints which now come with newspapers and as covers on magazines can be made to look like oil paintings by being treated in the following manner:

Mix together one ounce of Canada balsam and two ounces of spirits of turpentine. The print or drawing must first be sized with a solution of isinglass in ice water. When this is dry take a camel's hair brush and apply the composition and the result will be astonishing.

Bleaching Feathers.

Plunge the feathers in naphtha, rinse in second dish of naphtha and dry in the open air. Place in a closed box and expose to the strong fumes of sulphur. The box must be air tight or the bleaching will not be successful.

Few persons realize that a horse's hoof is really the same thing as the toe nails of human beings or of animals having toes. The horn of a hoof grows just as a toe nail does. The hoof grows more rapidly in unshod horses than in those wearing shoes, and it grows faster in horses which are well groomed and well fed. But on an average the horn grows about a third of an inch a month. Hind hoofs grow faster than fore hoofs. The toe of the hoof being the longest part, it takes longer for the horn to grow down there than at the heel. For instance, the toe will grow entirely down in from eleven to thirteen months, while the heel will grow down in from three to five months. As the new horn grows out any cracks or defects in the old gradually work down to where they can be cut off, just as with human fingernails you can watch the progress of a bruise from the root to the tip.

MR .TOM TERRISS,
the eminent English Actor.

Those who did not witness the wonderful achievements of this clever actor in his portrayal of Dickens' characters, on the occasion of his recent visit, should not fail to do so on Saturday next, Jan. 31, as it is an exceptional opportunity to see real good and wholsome drama, presented in a manner never before attempted on the stage. It is owing to the numerous requests from the local patrons who were present on the last occasion, that the management has been able to arrange for a return engagement of this versatile actor, who will give a special matinee of "A Christmas Carol," followed by "The Cricket on the Heart," and for the evening performance in addition to "A Christfas Carol" Mr. Terriss will present "Nicholos Nickleby." Judging from the unnanimous press opinions in favor of Mr. Terriss' wonderful accomplishments, there should be a capacity house at each performance. We see too little of such good plays as are being provided by Mr. Terriss, and the engagement is far too short. Everyone should turn out and witness these adaptations from that immortal writer's beautiful works.

From here the company travel to Montreal, for a whole week's engagement under the auspices of the Dicken's Society, which is a very strong organization in that city and where Mr. Terriss will be accorded a hearty welcome.

SIR JAMES BETTER.

Definite Improvement In Premier's Condition Reported.

TORONTO, Jan. 24.—Sir James Whitney's condition was even more hopeful yesterday and his recovery is now talked of as a possibility. Last night's bulletin said:

9.40 p.m.—Sir James Whitney has had a fairly satisfactory day. There is definite improvement, but it is slow.

Dr. Clarke,
Dr. McPhedran.

The above is the most encouraging bulletin that has yet been issued since the condition of Premier Whitney became critical. Last night's bulletin completed a period of more than 24 hours in which no setback has been reported. It is understood that Sir James is taking nourishment in increasing quantities and that he is gradually gaining strength. Dr. Clarke stated yesterday that it was not unusual for a man who had undergone a period of illness of the duration of the Premier's to recover.

LURE OF THE DANCE HALL AND THE AUTO

Rev. R. G. Peever Preaches a Stirring Sermon to Large Congregation

To a church crowded with an attractive congregation, the pastor of George street church spoke earnestly and helpfully last evening, pointing out what he said he knew to be wrong and what should help to improve the moral life in this growing city. His text was taken from Amos, Chap. 5' verse 15. "Hate the evil—love the good; and establish judgment and justice within the gates."

From an address, holding the attention of his hearers for three-quarters of an hour the following excerpts are made:

He had lived in the city for six months. He believed that the moral life of the city was at a low ebb. His judgment as to a state of affairs had been confirmed by others visiting the city, and every thoughtful citizen should ask, how can the community life be improved?

He had noticed—noticed with large regret, that Peterborough was a place of much small talk and gossip. He, in his position, was not apt to hear, but he heard enough to convince of the truth of the statement. Others heard and reported. The old unruly member was an unruly member. Talk, innuendo, trifling conversation provoked restraint and distrust. It was a rural habit of fifty years ago, but had been killed in rural communities.

He regretted to say he found the same habit of small talk in the press. The press should lead—not report. It was true that people delighted in reports of small happenings and personal mention and society intelligence, but if the press would lead, it should eschew such things, and print that which would life up the moral life of the city. So long as the press dealt in small things it would be a small press.

He had this to say. He had lived many years in ministerial service, but never yet had he resided and worked in a place where the lines between Protestant and Catholic were so sharply drawn. It alarmed him, as a tendency to severance in citizenship in a community. There might be a reason for this severance, but if there was one he did not know it.

He had never lived in a community where the lines of demarcation were so rigidly drawn as in Peterough between the political parties—Conservative and Reform—Grit and Tory. These antipathies bred a lack of confidence, of harmony and a lack of interest; of work together for public good.

He deplored the policy, as shown in the press, of a detraction of the Government. This eature was persistent and life long. It could only have the one effect of breaking down confidence in the motives, acts and work of our public men. If what was alleged against both sides were true, then action should be taken. If it were untrue then it should be stopped. The press might just as well realize that the day had gone by when people will take either religion or politics from men who cannot say something good of their fellows.

A most regrettable thing, a perniscious and emasculating thing, as well, was the large place given to the public dance in the life of the community. In a dancing community the mind of the people centred around cheap ideals. Ideals of fifty years ago, when the barn-raising dance was the usual thing. These ideals should be changed. Who will lead in the effort. We are deploring the moral ruin of scores of young girls and right against, close to, alongside of this evil, stands the public dance.

Juvenile crime is on the increase. Naturally this might be expected in some ratio to increase in population, but crime was slipping ahead with long strides. Sabbath desecration is augmenting. Things morally wrong and illegal had been carried on under Christian auspices in the city.

He would declare without reservation, that to-day the automobile was looked on—as it really was—os ane of the greatest menaces to a Christian Sabbath, and the machine, in bad hands, had further to its discredit. It was an end to a means for the ruining of countless young girls, foolishly consenting to go for rides only to find that it led to sorrow and degredation.

How can we mend the situation? There is no cause for frenzy and panic. What is needed is moderate, persistent and sane work. Work and example. Put away gossip and small talk. Get new ideas and ideals. Bring in the gospel of law. Bring out the good old ten command-

BARLESS CANADA THE CALL OF REV. DR. McTAVISH OF DOMINION ALLIANCE

He Tells of the Growth of the Local Option Movement and Claims Province Would be "Dry" in Two Years on Straight Majority Vote

"If we had an even vote in local option campaigns, we would sweep the Province in two years."

So said Rev. Dr. McTavish at Knox church yesterday morning. His opening remarks were a statement of the objects of the Dominion Alliance, and what had been accomplished. The ten clergymen of the Alliance held 2,500 church services in 1912 and 500 other meetings. In 57 campaigns for local option, 52 municipalities gave majorities for the measure, but the three-fifths vote prevented local option in some of these places. If the three-fifths clause could be done away with, the Province would be dry in two years. There are now 533 "dry" municipalities and 322 are "wet." It was very encouraging, Dr. McTavish remarked, to think that during the last 40 years the number o bars have decreased at the rate of 400 per year. Another encouraging item is the fact that once a place becomes dry it generally remains that way. Four years ago 134 municipalities had local option and 3 were repealed, but they lost. In three years, out of 178, 15 by-laws were repealed, but again they failed. Two years ago out of 240 "dry" municipalities 22 repeals were voted on and only one was successful. Last year 15 out of 245 were repealed, but all lost. Hence out of all these local option towns only one returned to the bar. This one place was the village of Acton, and in the four months following the opening of the bar $1350 were collected in fines for selling liquor without a license.

Dr. McTavish spoke very complimentary of the first-class temperance house this city has in the Oriental Hotel. It is a pleasure, he said, for him to go into such a hotel for in his travels he has often been compelled to stay at licensed hotels, and if there was anything more shocking, it was to pass by the bar door and hear God's holy name used several times a minute in blasphemous expressions. A man who is engaged in the liquor business cannot rightfully kneel down in the morning and pray to God that his work of the day will be a success; he does not as a general rule like to attend church because he is likely to hear a temperance sermon, he cannot in most cases join any fraternal society and one example of this is the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, which will not admit a man engaged in liquor business, a bar-tender or a licensed hotel porter into their society,, therefore for the good of the liquor men themselves, the liquor traffic should be done away with.

A great deal of grain is used every year to manufacture liquor and with such a scarcity of grain as there is now it would, Dr. McTavish thought, be much better to turn this into bread. To have this come about he urged his listeners to vote for local option and as the Americans are crying, "Saloonless America in 1920," so let us cry "Barless Canada Before 1920."

During the service Rev. H. J. Keith spoke of their late fellow-member, Mr. Robert Telford, who passed away a few days ago. He urged the congregation to pray for his aged mother, so that the Almighty will enable her to withstand her sad bereavement.

Master Roy Branton the boy soloist from Toronto, assisted in the musical part of the service.

JOHN McCLAY ON TRIAL BEFORE JUDGE HUYCKE

Girl Tells Her Story and Salvation Army Officers Are Called to Give Evidence For the Prosecution.

John McClay, charged with supplying drugs to Margaret Elmdale, a girl whom he is alleged to have wronged, appeared before Judge Huycke this morning. He pleaded not guilty to the charge, through his counsel, V. J. McElderry. Mr. Dan O'Connell pleaded the case for the defendant. Mr. Joseph Wearing conducted the prosecution. The court room was crowded.

The girl called to the box, told a tearful story of how she had come from the Old Country about a year or so ago. She had been sent here by a training home. She had no relatives or friends in Canada except Adjutant and Mrs. McElheney. She described how she had met McClay, a number of times on the street. In June he asked her to go to the circus. They went there and also made a date for the next night. They went walking by the way of the Lift Lock. Here, the prisoner, becoming rather intimate, was resisted. They however continued to meet. Sometime afterward she became sick and McClay advised her to go and consult a doctor. McClay suggested to her that she was in trouble.

"You didn't think so?" enquired Mr. Wearing.

"No," replied the witness.

The girl then falteringly told the court how McClay supplied her with the pills. She was not aware of their real purpose. McClay also suggested she see a local doctor. Later she became aware of her trouble. McClay had suggested to her in August if the worst came to the worst, he would marry her.

The witness continued that McClay had been called to Adjutant McElheney's home. He refused to have anything to do with the girl.

In the cross examination which followed by Mr. O'Connell, the girl admitted there has been considerable attachment between them. Witness admitted improper relations with the prisoner several times.

Adjutant McElheney told how he and his wife had the girl removed to their place, owing to her condition. He also told of the affair when McClay was called to his home. McClay accused the girl of several little affairs, but eventually when faced by the girl, he admitted the truth, but said he was trying to do all he could for her.

Refused to Aid Her.

He absolutely refused to aid her in any way, said the witness.

They had considerable difficulty in getting the prisoner to go to the home.

"Then the girl could easily hear the conversation then," questioned Mr. O'Connell.

"Yes," answered the witness.

During the conversation the prisoner admitted having improper relations with the girl. He, however, denied being responsible for her condition. He also said he had done all necessary to help her get rid of her trouble.

The outstanding features of the girl's accusations against the prisoner were:

"Why did you give me the pills and offer the doctor $50.00, if you were not responsible?"

Mrs. McElheney told how she conversed with McClay, who claimed he was not responsible, and he also said that she was only a street girl and he had picked her up, Mrs. McElheney had also appealed to his manhood, but to no avail. The prisoner stated he had not been the first to have improper relations. The girl denied this, and the prisoner did not give any names.

Mrs. McElheney corroborated her husband's evidence as to McClay's statement that he had seen the doctor so as to help her in her trouble. The pills were produced in court and identified by Mrs. McElheney as the pills seen in the girl's possession.

Mrs. McElheney spoke of her astonishment when McClay absolutely refused to give anything for the girl, as he had offered a certain doctor fifty dollars to rid her of her trouble. He also coldly remarked "Yes, you'd fix her up and have her marry a decent fellow."

She was not a decent girl, and not the type of girl be would marry, said McClay. He also stated he had paid for everything he got.

The case is proceeding.

PREMIER IS IMPROVING

Doctors Hopeful That He Will Recover Completely

TORONTO, Jan. 25.—According to the doctors in attendance, it now seems probable that Sir James Whitney will completely recover from his illness. Dr. Alex. McPhedran said last night that the Prime Minister had passed a very satisfactory day, and when asked whether the distinguished patient would ultimately regain his health he stated that Sir James was making very good progress and that the outlook was exceedingly hopeful.

Dr. C. K. Clarke, superintendent of the General Hospital, also was quite hopeful. "The condition of Sir James is very favorable," said he. "The Prime Minister is taking nourishment well and altogether he is much improved in health. Of course," added Dr. Clarke, "we still regard Sir James as a sick man."

Both doctors said that the patient was much better yesterday than at any time since he was brought home from New York, and that he was not nearly so restless as he has been.

Dr. R. A. Pyne, too, was pleased at the improvement in the Premier's condition.

PLEA FOR RESCUE HOME IN THIS CITY

By Adjutant McElheney

While we are deprecating moral conditions in our city as most cities do, please let us remember conditions have been created and more than likely ever will exist as long as humanity is not given over to higher and nobler control than self, that have to be dealt with and that right early.

For years Peterboro city and county, have been depending on other cities taking care of their production and it is high time that as we rise to other occasions and do our duty we should do it in this respect.

What if Chief Thompson or his men get some women who need looking after, both now and hereafter, who have they got to go to, or where can they turn. What if the home life is not congenial and the girl, light and trifling and really had not bad enough and send to prison, (which only make them worse anyway).

What can they do? No place is provided by the city and if other places in other cities are full what are they to do. Simply give advice and let the thing work out itself, or else can prison them.

Four Young Girls.

Then as the case now is. I have four young girls who must be looked after almost immediately. All our homes in Toronto, Ottawa, London are full and having sent others this year I am beginning to feel ashamed to send any more. Not because our people wouldn't take them and gladly do it as they have for years, but the homes are full as are all other similar institutions. I know that even some women from their viewpoint will say some harsh things about these women, but in most cases they are more sinned against than sinning and even if they have and the Pharisees say, "By our law she should die," may I say what our Master said, "He that is without sin amongst you, cast the first stone," this would help us to do something for them and send them out with a new lease of life and say, "Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more."

Practice Besides Preach.

Talking, resolving, delegating, preaching, praying, is all very good (something pretty cheap when we like to make it so) but to get down to the humane and Christian way, and get off our mule or hobby horse and put the other fellow on and take him to the inn and put up for him was last Sunday's lesson in Sunday School. Shall we not only talk to our classes about it, but get out and do it and do it quick.

I believe if the hearts of the people of Peterborough and County, were apprised of many things that some of us see and know, a place would be provided for these dear souls who never had the fighting chance in life that many of us had and have yet for which we ought to thank God in the most practical way.

I question very much if many who condemn would have done any better in the same moral atmosphere and economic conditions. To any sceptic who feels there is no need and is not the first need to better moral conditions in Peterborough my phone number is 440, my address is 575 King St., and I will go or you may come and see either this Mr. McElheney or I or both, and if we can't "produce the goods," I will publicly retract my plea for what we feel is a crying need.

Let me say that we here are not looking for more work or anything of the kind, we have our hearts and hands and home full and only want to help our city solve the problem that humanity at large is up against every day and do our part to rescue the perishing," and "care for the dying," while the little while we are in your city.

PARENTS PLAN TO HALT THE INCREASING PACE OF YOUNG

Organization to Curb Late Hour Parties—Dancing Censored

Teachers Urged to Co-operate in Devising Means for Simpler Joys

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—"We hope to make it fashionable to be sensible and unfashionable to be foolish," said Mrs. John Hays Hammond in outlining the plans of the Parents' league, which has been formed for the purpose of uniting parents and teachers in establishing wholesome common sense standards for the education, amusement and home life of children.

At her home Mrs. Hammond, who is the president of the league, asked to make it clear that the league has no use for faddish or freakish suggestions and that the movement was begun only after she and her associates in the work realized the imperative necessity of interesting fathers and mothers and teachers in old-fashioned simplicity and reasonableness.

Devoted to School Children

"The league's work for the present will have to do with children of school age," said Mrs. Hammond. "The debutante problem we will not take up until some time in the future.

"Last March a number of parents and teachers met one evening at the Cosmopolitan Club to consider how best to solve problems presented by the theatre-going and the late hours kept by boys and girls, especially during the Christmas and Easter vacations. As a result of the discussion the teachers were asked to embody their suggestions in a letter. Thirty-two principals of the leading board and day schools complied.

Urges Return to Simplicity

"The league does not propose to reorganize the home, but it seeks to make conditions outside of the home conform as far as possible through co-operation of parents and teachers to the standard of the home and of the leading schools of the country. The league hopes to establish simple, wholesome customs only by enlightened public opinion. Our platform, if it may be called a platform, can be presented as follows:

"We believe that boys and girls of school age should refuse all invitations to parties, theatres, etc., during the school term except occasionally on Fridays and Saturdays and that parties and theatre-going be limited during the holidays.

"We think that parents should arrange simple and appropriate forms of recreation for the children; for instance, attendance at young people's concerts, visits to the country, museums and places of interest, and that they reserve time during the holidays to join their children in such recreations.

Dancing to Be Supervised

"We want parents to advocate reasonable hours for beginning and ending dances for young people, that the hours be stated, in all invitations and that the manner of dancing be carefully supervised. We have not considered it necessary as yet to make suggestions as regards various modern dances. Such matters can probably be left to the good taste and good sense of parents and teachers. All that I care to say on the subject is that some of the new dances are very beautiful and graceful, and that they are perfectly proper if properly supervised.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, JAN. 26, 1914.

NOT CRUEL NOR UNKIND.

THE TORONTO GLOBE objects, of course, to the Hon. Mr. White's pronouncement against "free food." In the course of a characteristically unctuous editorial it makes the charitable statement that the Finance Minister is not cruel nor even unkind; he simply does not understand. It admits that the Conservative Minister is in league with all that is selfish and tyrannical in public life. Distasteful as it is the editor is forced to concede the point that Mr. White "well-favored and well-fed" forgets if he ever knew, "the stress of the man at the relief office." What Hon. Mr. White never knew is the stress of the man who has been relieved of office, and that really is what The Globe is thinking about. Because after all we do not think that any of those emaciated authorities to the left of the speaker know much about city relief.

All this stuff about the Minister of Finance not understanding and being well-favored and well-fed is because the Government is not driven by panic into snatching at each and every nostrum offered by economic faddists. The Globe should have learned two years ago what the people think of its economic philosophy and get down to business. But The Globe talked for years after the defeat of the Ross Government about "the delusion" of the people of Ontario. It can't be helped.

THE KING'S ENGLISH.

LORD ASHBOURNE in a speech at a meeting of the Gaelic League declared that speaking English continually deforms the mouth. He described Englishmen as having thin, prominent lips, long front teeth and the general appearance of a measly rabbit. The German language, Lord Ashbourne said, was strong and vigorous. The English language was in a state of rottenness and decay. John Bull's future, said Lord Ashbourne, was behind him. He was insular and nothing would bring him in touch with the outside world.

As to the effect of speaking English upon the mouth, that all depends upon the speaker, and how the English is spoken. There is no more elastic tongue in existence than the English language. There is no place in the English-speaking world where the King's English is spoken in so many different ways as it is in the British Isles, and especially in England itself. It often happens that a London Cockney can scarcely understand a Lancashire man. A raw Yorkshire man might as well speak German as try to converse with a raw Liverpool man in the broad Yorkshire dialect, and yet there is not a hundred miles between them.

The dialects in Canada are not very well marked as yet. But anyone can detect a Torontonian from a person who has been "raised" upon a farm in one of the North-eastern Counties. In many districts of Ontario there is a strong Scotch burr-r-r on the tongues of the inhabitants, while in others a rich brogue denotes the speaker's ancestry. But among all classes the Canadian hits the aspirate with a sledge-hammer emphasis, while the average Englishman sails over the Anglo-Saxon language like a skiff on a smooth sea. The Englishman's dropping of the aspirite is one of the cheapest of jokes, but for the antithesis of this the average Canadian is the best example, he meets every aspirite like a snag. At the same time many Canadians speak the best English, unequalled except by the Dublin man who speaks the finest English in the world.

THE FRENCH IN EASTERN ONTARIO.

THE INFLUX of French-Canadians into Eastern Canada has been referred to before in this column. The London Advertiser quoting from an address by a local minister says that some French organization exists which promotes this imigration as a steady solid wave, by purchasing farms when available in continguity to territory already occupied by French people. The census figures amply shows that in 1901 Glengarry had over 12,000 people of Scotch origin, 14,457 all told of British origin, and 7,219 French; in 1911 the figures were 12,283 British and 8,710 French. Russell had, in 1901, 16,053 British, 17,522 French; in 1911, 15,253 British and 22,475 French. Prescott, in 1901, had 7,642 British, 19,190 French, in 1911, only 6,456 British and 20,124 French. So Armand Lavergne keeps thinking of a French state some day to the north of the American Republic.

The tide of French imigration has reached further east than any of these districts. It is rapidly spreading over Hastings County. Almost every week sales are occurring of British farms and in nearly every case the buyer is a Frenchman. It is often a source of wonder to British farmers as to how these French people can so readily buy up the farms as they invariably pay cash down. Various explanations have been given, some go so far as to say that the Roman Catholic Church are interested in the promotion of this wave from Quebec. If this be the case it is hardly good policy even from the Church's standpoint, as the Irish Catholic is bound to suffer along with the rest of the English-speaking people. French-Canadians are good citizens for a French-speaking country, but as a rule they do not mix with the English-speaking part of the community, they want their bilingual schools and their object is to eventually make them monolingual. No Irishman, Protestant or Catholic, would stand for that and he has either to get out or "kick" and the chances are that he gets out.

This movement should be at once checked. It can be checked at once if the English-speaking inhabitants get together as the French have done. The Advertiser says:

"There is a chance for the formation of an English association, to raise funds for purchase and loan to the colonists on easy terms of payment. The occasion might draw an Offa Dyke across the region and, working on the "what we have we hold" motto, stem the glacier-like advance of the inhabitants. In such an association one can imagine the Orange Lodge and the Irish Roman Catholics, a solid Ireland set against the intruding nationality, standing shoulder to shoulder, for "The Watch, the Watch on the Dyke," so to speak. There are about 2,000 German-Canadians in Stormont County who would surely rise to such a call. It would be a great work for English, the brogue, the Fatherland and an Irish peace."

There is no objection to the German-Canadian as a citizen of Ontario, because he learns the English tongue and uses it and enters into the common life of the community. No Britisher objects to the French-Canadian because he is French or because he is generally a Roman Catholic. The sole objection is that he is insular and brings Quebec with him.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE HANGMAN who is to manipulate the execution of a murderer in Montreal, has been arrested in that city for being drunk and for carrying a revolver. Is this the type of man that we get to do our hanging for us? However we don't blame him for getting drunk.

TORONTO SAVINGS and Loan Company has issued its annual report and general statement, which shows that the affairs of the company are in a healthy and prosperous condition. The late Senator Cox was the moving spirit of the company, but it will be gratifying to the shareholders to know that he was a man of sufficient fore-sight to prepare for his own removal from the concern, and that his death will not affect in the least the management. We published the report of the Annual General meeting of shareholders in our Saturday's issue.

THE FOLLOWING VERSE by Dr. Robert Bridges, the poet laureate, appears on the invitation card for the 112th annual celebration of the Greenock Burns' Club, to be held to-day.

To Burns, brave Scotia's laureled son,
Who drove his plow on Helicon,
And who with Doric rhyme erstwhile
Taught English bards to mend their style
And by the humor of his pen
Fairly befool'd Auld Nickie Ben.
Blithe Robbie Burns, we love thee well
Because thou wert so like thysel',
And in full cups with festive cheer
We toast thy fame from year to year.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

A Tame Imperialist.

Montreal Star.

Sir George may hold responsible when he will; but the people will hold responsible the men who killed the Navy Bill of last year—and at the head of that list of deliberate dabblers in delay will stand the name of Sir George Ross, Sir Wilfrid's tame Imperialist.

Lord Strathcona.

Hamilton Spectator.

"Knowest thou a man diligent in business; he shall stand before kings." This is perhaps the tersest possible summary of the wonderful career of the great man who in London, and up to the end immersed in his habitual labors, has just passed to his rest.

Our Lady of the Twilight.

Our Lady of the Twilight
From out the sunset lands
Comes gently stealing o'er the world
And stretches out her hand,
Over the blotched and broken wall,
The blind and foetid lane,
She stretches out her hands and all
Is beautiful again.

No factory chimney can defile
The beauty of her dress;
She stoops down with her heavenly smile
To heal and love and bless;
All tortured things, all evil powers,
All shapes of dark distress
Are turned to fragrance and to flowers
Beneath her kind caress.

Our Lady of the Twilight,
She melts our prison bars!
She makes the sea forget the shore,
She fills the sky with stars,
And stooping over wharf and mill,
Chimney and shed and dome,
Turns them to fairy palaces,
Then calls her children home.

She stoops to bless the stunted tree,
And from the furrowed plain,
And from the wrinkled brow she smoothes
The lines of care and pain;
Hers are the gentle hands and eyes
And hers the peaceful breath
That ope, in sunset-softened skies,
The quiet gates of death.

Our Lady of the Twilight,
She hath such gentle hands,
So lovely are the gifts she brings
From out the sunset lands,
So bountiful, so merciful,
So sweet of soul is she;
And over all the world she draws
Her Cloak of Charity.

WORKERS ALL

By Walt Mason

We are workers, all and sundry, toiling at our daily chores; some are cooped in gloomy buildings, some are working out of doors; some with thews and muscles labor, some are striving with the brain, and no work that's done in earnest ever yet was done in vain. There's reward for every effort if we to our duty keep, till the whistles blow at nightfall and we journey home to sleep. Some must work for little wages, other men have coin to spare; but the first are often happy while the last are full of care; some must rise at early morning while the others slumber late, but the gods who watch the workers in the end make all things straight. Let us therefore labor blithely, let us build and spin and reap, till the whistles blow at nightfall and we journey home to sleep. We are workers, only workers, on this swiftly whirling ball, and the Boss is keeping cases on his helpers, one and all; when we all line up for judgment on the fateful final day, each according to his record will be handed out his pay. Let us labor then with spirit—let us not like sluggards creep—till the whistles blow at nightfall and we journey home to sleep.

THE CANADA LIFE REPORT

Another Record Year for This Fine Old Company

It has become a matter of habit to look for a favorable Annual Statement from our oldest Life office, and that printed today is no exception to the rule. All along the line the accomplishment was good, and in many respects better than in any previous year.

The policies issued in 1913 were for nearly $17,000,000, and those actually paid for were $15,349,000, bringing the total business in force up to $153,121,364.

The premium income was $4,713,845, and the consideration for Annuities $892,607, while the interest income was $2,488,433. The total income for the year, from all sources reached the enormous sum of $8,094,886, an increase of about $700,000 over the previous year.

The assets now stand at $52,161,795, having increased in the year by over $3,860,000.

The Canada Life has always moved along conservative lines, its ambition being for strength rather than mere size, and the President, Mr. E. W. Cox, in his address, announced the complete valuation of all bonds and debentures owned by the Company, on the Amortization system. This re-valuation has been going on for some years, and means practically that the valuation of these securities is based on the original price paid, their present value being computed under the actual rate of interest realized. This method assumes that the securities will be held till maturity, when they will be at par, and it enables the Company to ignore market values.

This is a method of valuation which the Life Presidents' Association is urging the different States throughout the Union to adopt, and the voluntary action of the Canada Life management in ignoring the temporary advantage of fluctuating market values is to be highly commended. It is one more indication of the solid and substantial nature of everything pertaining to that great Company.

The death of Senator Cox was marked by a resolution of the Directors, in which the great value of his services to the Company was noted.

The new President, Mr. E. W. Cox, has devoted his business career to the welfare of the Canada Life, and with the support of his capable staff will, without doubt, conserve the interests of the policyholders to the very best advantage.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

MONDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-SIXTH

Sir Percy Girouard, a son of Canada who has won Imperial renown, is celebrating his forty-seventh birthday to-day. Sir Percy's fame rests on his skill as a railroad builder. Lord Kitchener picked him out when he was still under thirty and gave him the difficult task of providing railway transportation for the troops in the Soudan. This necessitated the construction of 200 miles of track in the space of a few months, but it made possible the victory of Omdurman. Later when Kitchener was sent to South Africa, he took the young Canadian engineer with him and put the work of constructing and operating railways in his hands. For this service he received knighthood. After acting for some years as Governor of British East Africa, Sir Percy retired a year ago and became associated as a director with one of the big English gun manufacturing companies.

STALKING THE DUKE.

Penny-a-Liner Followed the "Iron Man" To His Own Advantage.

How a Cabinet secret was revealed in a most amazing fashion by a needy and adventurous penny-a-liner at the end of his resources is related by Mr. J. D. Symon, in "The Press and its Story." It was during the administration of the Duke of Wellington, at a juncture when the Opposition would have given anything for some hint of the Cabinet's policy. The secret was well-guarded until one evening, just at the rising of the House, a penny-a-liner, who had been hanging about Westminster waiting for something to turn up, saw the duke emerge from the House of Lords accompanied by one of his colleagues.

"Now, the duke, in his later years, was very hard of hearing, and cherished that not uncommon illusion of the deaf, that in order to make other people hear he, too, must shout. It occurred to the starveling scribe that if he would only follow the Prime Minister he might hear something to his advantage.

"The night was dark, so the penny-a-liner managed to keep well within earshot, and yet to escape remark by those he was following. He had not gone very far before he knew he was in luck's way. The duke was actually talking about the situation in his usual loud tones, and gradually he proceeded to unfold the policy of the Cabinet. The penny-a-liner listened with all his ears and kept well within range of the Minister all the way to Apsley House. Thereupon, with beating heart, he sought some friendly refuge and committed his discovery to writing. This done, he lost no time in calling upon the editor of one of the leading Opposition papers. So humble a scribe was, of course, unknown to the editor, but the plea that the visitor had an urgent communication to make gained him admission.

"The editor glanced over the article and was thunderstruck when he realized its nature. Here was the very thing for which the Party had been praying. Naturally the editor inquired how so uninfluential a person could have come by such very private information. Being satisfied, however, of the truth of the man's story, he decided to print it, and gave the reporter a handsome check for his enterprise. Next day the appearance of the news, reinforced by a leading article, spread consternation in the Government camp. Who was the traitor?

"Somewhat of a hue and cry was raised, and the duke's friend fell under suspicion. Relations between the Prime Minister and his colleague were, in fact, somewhat strained, until at last the true story of the remarkable discovery was given to the world."

"PLUMS" OF THE BAR.

What Advocates Can Earn in the Land of Cakes.

The promotion of Lord Dunedin from the highest judicial office in Scotland to be a Lord of Appeal in the House of Lords, and the appointment of Mr. Alexander Ure to the Lord Presidency of the Court of Session at Edinburgh, recalls how difficult it is for young men to make their way as advocates in Scotland. Like thousands of others, these distinguished lawyers, when they embarked on a legal career, realized that it was anything but easy to "become known" in a professional sense.

Lord Haldane once said that in the first few years after he became a barrister his average salary was fifteen shillings a week. But many of the young advocates in Scotland earn considerably less. They walk the long hall, where the Scottish Parliament sat years ago, in arduous idleness while several undertake reporting of the legal debates, an occupation which is regarded as a stepping-stone to an appointment as sheriff-substitute, with a salary of anything from $3,000 to $5,000 a year. Among the lawyer-reporters is the brother-in-law of the heir to a Scottish dukedom.

There are numerous instances of Scottish lawyers getting to the top of the tree through social influence, but merit finds the path to a lucrative appointment steep and rugged. The Faculty of Advocates, of which all the pleaders are members, is one of the most exclusive trade unions in the world. The great majority of the advocates are politicians, for, though many years ago the church was the open door to the Bench, the political arena is to-day the easiest and surest way to high judicial office.

Most of the King's Counsel are sheriffs, each drawing an income of about $3,000 or $3,500 from his office, and, besides, they are allowed to practice at the Bar, whereas sheriff-substitutes are debarred from pleading. The present Government have made a large number of legal appointments in Scotland since they came into power in December, 1905.

The writer has calculated that the aggregate annual salaries attaching to these positions amount to about $300,000, which, capitalized at 3 per cent., represents $10,000,000. The busiest junior at the Scottish Bar is the Hon. William Watson, a son of the late Lord Watson, Lord of Appeal, and the foremost figures among the senior pleaders are the Right Hon. Charles Scott Dickson, K.C. M.P., Dean of Faculty and Lord Advocate in the last Unionist Administration, and Mr. Avon Clyde, K.C., M.P.—London Tit-Bits.

Feel rested? No, and I haven't been since I learned the tango.

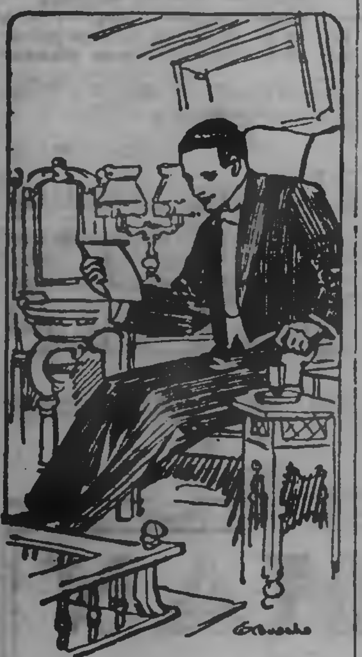
His New Year's Resolutions—After All, They Were Unnecessary.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Billy Henderson woke up on New Year's morning with a headache, a bad taste in his mouth and a feeling of general depression all over him. He remembered a confusion of sounds and scenes. There were music, the popping of champagne corks, laughter and a babel of voices. Billy saw himself sitting in a curtained window with a girl and had a dim remembrance of having spoken things to her that now seemed very ridiculous.

"I wonder," he said to himself, "if I've been making an ass of myself again."

Billy had seen the old year out and the new year in, in company with a party of boon companions. A new year lay before him. Should it be as unprofitable as the last? Should he continue to mingle with the fast set with whom he had associated? No; he would cut them all. Extending his hand as he had seen persons make vows in the theater, he made the following resolution:



"WELL, I'LL BE JINGED!" SAID BILLY.

"I, William Henderson, solemnly resolve that I will, during the year before me, neither smoke, drink nor propose."

A town clock slowly and solemnly struck the hour of 12 as if to impress the importance of the vow upon its maker. At the last stroke the door opened and the butler entered, bearing a salver on which nestled a delicate little note emitting a violet perfume. Billy knit his brows as he saw it and, taking it up, opened it, meanwhile directing the butler to bring him some soda water. The note read as follows:

> My Dear Heart's Mate—I can't wait to tell you how happy you made me last night when you told me how dearly you loved me and asked me to be your wife. It is now 8 o'clock in the morning; but, though I did not get home till 3, I have been awakened by the sweet memory of hearing you make your delicious avowal. I cannot refrain from writing you to ask how you feel after our merry seeing the old year out and the new year in. Do send me a line by bearer to assure me that what you said to me was not a dream, but a reality. With a million kisses, your loving KATE.

"Well, I'll be jinged!" exclaimed Billy. "What's the use of making resolutions for the new year when there is a mountain of transgressions piled up for the old one? Luckily she's signed her name, for I hadn't the slightest remembrance of who she was. Her purpose is evident. She intends to clinch it while it is hot. What in the world shall I do? I have it. My cousin Kate Singleton will help me out of the scrape. She was with us last night, and I remember saying some sweet things to her."

When the butler returned with the soda Billy called for writing materials and wrote:

> Dearest, Sweetest Cousin—Believe me, what I said to you last night came from the heart. You made me very happy when you told me you returned my love. Isn't it lovely that we should be both so blessed on this bright New Year's morning? Yours till death, BILLY.

He read the note over and asked the butler what kind of morning it was and, being told that snow was falling, was minded to write another, but concluded that, with such an enormous falsification in pretending that he supposed it was his cousin that he had been proposing to, a little thing like a mistake in the weather wouldn't make much difference. Besides, his head ached badly, and he felt unequal to any more lovemaking. He addressed the note to Kate Singleton instead of Kate Edmonds and dispatched it.

So much for Billy Henderson's starting in for the new year. The resolutions for it were all right, but he was obliged to carry a load of debt into the new account. He had no fear of any trouble with his cousin, only he must explain to her how he came to write her such a note. But there was no hurry as to this, for it had been sent to Miss Edmonds, and it was not to be expected that she would forward it at once. What she would do in the matter Billy could only conjecture. He must await the result.

Billy had been up every night for a week till the small hours in the morning and, having been refreshed by the soda water, sank into a slumber rendered especially peaceful by the good resolutions he had made for the next year. He slept eighteen hours without knowing that he had slept even one. He touched the button for the butler and when he came asked:

"What time is it, James?"

"Seven o'clock, sir."

"Seven o'clock in the evening?"

"No, sir—7 in the morning."

"Nonsense! I heard it strike 12 awhile ago."

"That was 12 o'clock yesterday, sir."

"Phew! Have I slept so long as that?"

"Yes, sir. There are two letters for you, sir. They came last evening."

"Two letters!" exclaimed Billy, starting and recalling the complications of the day before. "Are you sure there are two?"

"Yes, sir."

"Bring them up at once."

He arose and put on evening dress, then, seating himself in an easy chair before an open fire, thought of the dangers of bachelorhood.

When the notes came he first opened one addressed in the handwriting of Miss Edmonds. There was no gush in it. Indeed, it was very brief, stating that she had received a note addressed to Miss Kate Singleton. Supposing that he had inadvertently written the wrong name on the envelope, she had been tempted to open it, but had refrained from doing what might turn out to be a dishonorable act. She had therefore sent the note to its address and awaited a reply to her own missive.

Billy opened the other note, which he knew to be from his cousin, with feverish haste. It ran thus:

> My Dear Billy—I did not take what you said to me last night, though it was very tender and sweet, for a proposal, but I am very happy on learning from you that you meant it as such and am glad to be able to make you happy this New Year's day by confessing that I have loved you ever since we were children together. But I have never thought you cared for me. Oh, Billy, what a lovely new year present you have given me! Your loving KATE.

"Well, I'll be jinged!"

Billy sat up in bed with a note in each hand, looking back and forth from one to the other.

"This is starting in for the new year with a vengeance—swore off proposing, and here I am with two propositions on hand, neither of them intended. 'Loved you ever since we were children together.' I didn't know that. I never even suspected it."

Billy sat musing over the revelation for some time. Then suddenly he pushed the button.

"Bring me a cocktail!" he cried to James when he entered, then, remembering his resolution, added, "Make it a cup of coffee."

When Billy arose after his long rest it was nearly noon. He telephoned to his office that he was "under the weather" and would not be ready for business till the next day, then went to his club. He was doing a lot of thinking. He was not seriously concerned about his complication with Miss Edmonds, for in the first place he was inclined to think that she had been disposed to take an inch where he had given her an ell, and in the second place he was not sure that he desired to get out of his unintended proposition to his cousin. Kate Singleton was a fine girl, a mighty fine girl. He wondered why he had not thought of making love to her—serious love—not that habitual lovemaking that was constantly bubbling up in his bosom, but the kind of love a fellow makes to the girl he wishes to marry.

After all, what better beginning could he make for the new year than settling himself down to one real good, sensible girl who would marry him because she had loved him ever since they were children together and not for the $10,000 a year, with expectations, he was known to possess? With his Cousin Kate for a wife he wouldn't need to make any resolutions. Wouldn't that be fine, especially since he had no confidence in his ability to keep them?

Then a happy thought came to him. If he married Kate, no resolutions being necessary, the resolutions he had already made need not be kept.

"Waiter," he cried impatiently, "bring me a cocktail and a box of cigarettes!"

Braced by the refreshment, he wrote a note to Miss Edmonds regretting exceedingly that he had been misunderstood by her. Nothing would give him greater pleasure than to stand by anything he might have said to her, but he was prevented from doing so by his engagement with his cousin, Kate Singleton.

"I flatter myself," he said after reading the note over and dotting several i's and crossing some t's, "that's a bang-up, manly statement that no reasonable girl could find any fault with."

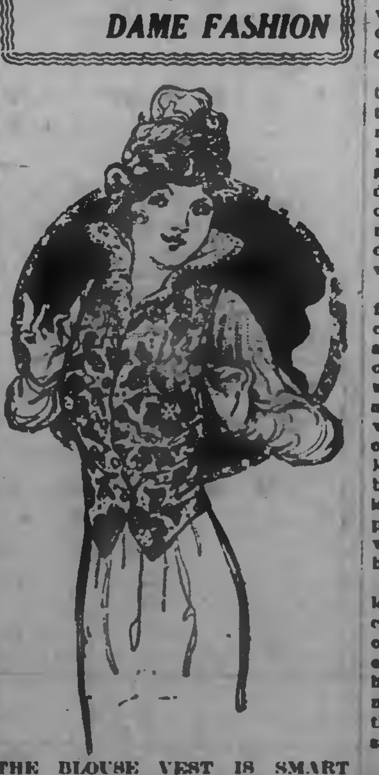
As soon as Billy had sent the note he felt easier. The same evening he went to see his cousin.

"Billy," she said, "what made you choose such a time and place for so serious a matter? Had I known what a boisterous party there would be I wouldn't have gone, and I'll never go there again."

"Why, the truth is," replied Billy, looking at her with his honest eyes, "I'd been putting it off so long, thinking that you didn't care anything for me as a—as a lover, that I just couldn't stand it to wait any longer."

"Poor boy!" she said softly, dropping her head on his breast, while he encircled her waist and kissed her.

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION



THE BLOUSE VEST IS SMART AND USEFUL.

The newest blouse looks like a vest and a blouse combined, while it is really a single garment, but ever so useful to wear with a street suit at this time when the vest is a smart accessory. Here is a vest-blouse that was worn last week with a street suit of dark blue mohair, the stuff which rivals serge. The sleeves are dark blue accordeon pleated chiffon, the vest, which has back and front both, is of silk brocade in tones of dark blue and maroon. A wired Medici collar of shadow lace gives a dainty finish.

A new broom will last longer if the strands are tied together and put into a pail of boiling water and soaked for two hours. Dry thoroughly for two hours.

Mystery of a Safe

It Was Not Solved By Detective Work

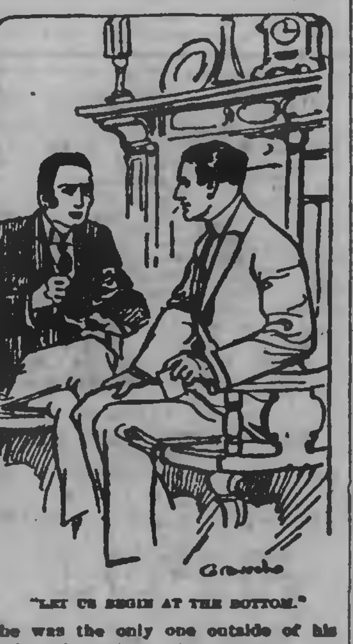
By MARGARET STEARNS

In all my experience of twenty years in the detective business I never had a case involving more ingenuity and deep laid planning than the robbery of the safe in the dwelling of Mr. George A. Tourtelotte. I was sent to the gentleman's house one morning by my chief and found him in a very uncomfortable state of mind. Money had disappeared from his safe, where he had kept what valuables there were in the house, and he assumed that some one who lived there must have been the thief, for the safe was an old one, opened not by a combination, but by one of those little keys with teeth such as are used for the private boxes of safety deposit companies.

Mr. Tourtelotte, who was very rich, did not care so much for the money lost as the discovery that he had a thief among the members of his household. His theory of the robbery was that some one had come into his sleeping room at night, stolen his bunch of keys, among which was the key of the safe, unlocked the safe, taken the money and returned the key to the place whence it had been taken.

His theory did not satisfy me, because the thief would not have been likely to return the keys. Mr. Tourtelotte evidently considered me very stupid, declaring that, if the thief were a member of his household, not to return the key to the place from which it had been taken would be to prove almost conclusively that he was a member of the household. But Mr. Tourtelotte was accustomed to lock and bolt his bedroom door on retiring.

Before I started on my investigations Mr. Tourtelotte informed me that one of the members of his family was a governess, a young lady who had come to him with the very best of recommendations. He had on several occasions given her the key to the safe when certain articles, such as silverware for the table, were wanted, and she was the only one outside of his wife and children who had ever handled the key. No servant on any account was permitted to do so.



"LET US BEGIN AT THE BOTTOM."

My habit has always been to pay attention to every suggestion, and I entered this information in my mental notebook, but I rely so confidently on my being able to tell by instinct a guilty from an innocent person as to discredit an accusation against any one my perceptive faculty declares innocent. The governess, Miss Martin, did not even appear to realize that she was in a position to be suspected.

It happened that there was no clew for me to work upon except what I could get from Mr. Tourtelotte himself, and, his suspicions having been fixed on Miss Martin, his mind was so taken up with this solution that there was no room in it for anything else. But I, who had investigated for indications of an entrance into the house, had learned that on the night of the robbery a window over a trellis had been left unlocked, and, though this did not prove that the thief had come from without, it indicated that he might have done so.

After learning all there was to be learned so far as I could see about the case I had absolutely nothing to work on. I do not remember to have been ever so completely baffled. Usually I have found some clew, even if it led me on a false scent, but in this case there was no clew at all. I therefore said to Mr. Tourtelotte:

"There is some information about this case that has not come to me. Let us begin at the bottom. Tell me of every time you can remember of your safe key having left your keeping and who has had it."

He racked his brain for some time, then said:

"There is only one time that the key has been out of my hands and gone into other hands, and then only for a minute at most. The circumstance could not have had any possible connection with this robbery."

"Tell me what you refer to."

"About two weeks ago I was traveling in a parlor car. A gentleman having the next chair to me took up a suit case and, on putting his hand into his pocket for the key, found that he had left it at home. He seemed very much annoyed, saying he had some papers in his suit case it was essential that he look over before reaching his destination. He was a lawyer and as soon as he arrived must try a case in court to which the papers referred. A gentleman sitting in the chair on the opposite side of the aisle offered him his key ring with a number of keys on it that he might see if any of them would fit the lock. He tried them all, but found none of them available.

"'Perhaps,' said the man who had loaned the keys, 'this gentleman'—referring to me—'has a key that will serve your purpose.'

"I handed him my key ring, and he tried all the keys on it, but without effect."

"Mr. Tourtelotte," I said, "I am inclined to think that this episode may have some connection with the robbery."

"Will you kindly explain how?"

"I assume that the key of your safe was on the ring."

"It was."

"Were your eyes on your keys every moment they were in the other's possession?"

"No. His back was toward me when he was trying them."

I sat pondering for awhile before saying anything more.

"I fear," I said at last, "that I shall have to give up the case. There is a possibility that some game was played on you by this man to whom you loaned your keys, but to find him would be impossible. Besides, it would require all the ingenuity of a first class modern detective story writer to show how a chance momentary loan of keys on a train could result in money disappearing from your safe without that safe having been forced open."

"Why do you decline to suspect Miss Martin?"

"Because she has a very expressive face, and it would be impossible for her to carry such a secret without betraying it. Moreover, I have perfect confidence in my ability to tell a rogue from an innocent person by looking into the eye."

"Very well, sir; since you acknowledge your inability to ferret out the matter you are welcome to retire from it."

I learned afterward that he employed another detective, who worked on the lines he indicated, and Miss Martin was kept under surveillance. But she was never known to spend a cent that she could not afford to spend, and no clew was found against her. I met her on the street one day, and she recognized me as having been at the house where she was employed immediately after the robbery. She told me that Mr. Tourtelotte had dispensed with her services, but she did not know why. I did not enlighten her. Before I left her I entered her new address in my notebook in accordance with my habit of keeping the addresses of persons in any way connected with my cases.

There was a special reason which I did not know at the time why Mr. Tourtelotte wished to fix the robbery of his safe on Miss Martin. He had a son whom he suspected of being in love with her. He informed that son, Edgar, that he was convinced that Miss Martin was a thief, but since he could not prove it he made no charge. But, not desiring to have one whom he did not trust a member of his household, he had sent her away.

This was the first Edgar Tourtelotte knew of his father's suspicions. He came at once to me to hear what I knew about the matter. I told him that I had no suspicion whatever of Miss Martin; on the contrary, I was sure that she was an innocent girl. This pleased him very much, and he begged me to try again to discover the guilty person, agreeing to pay me for any time I spent in doing so. I told him that, not being one of those detectives who could work up a case from a scratch on a wall or the stump of a cigar, I would not undertake to work up one in which I had no clew whatever. I added that I believed his father's safe had been robbed by a professional criminal and there was a possibility that at some future time an explanation might come out by some crook in limbo.

The lovers were in time relieved by just such an explanation. It came to me in a roundabout way. A lot of us detectives were sitting together one evening swapping yarns when one of the party told that a crook who had given him samples of his ingenuity related the following with great pride:

He had marked a rich man for his quarry and noticed that he left the suburb in which he lived every morning by a certain train for the city. One day, well dressed, the criminal entered the same car with the gentleman, followed by a confederate. On the way to the city he pretended to be a lawyer with a case coming off in court that he must try when he reached the city. In this way, aided by his confederate, he secured the rich man's safe key long enough to take an impression of it in wax, entered his house by a trellis, opened his safe and secured a good lot of swag.

There was no use having this ingenious crook arrested, for he had already been sentenced to serve a term of ten years in state prison, but I informed the Tourtelotte family of the explanation of their safe mystery, and I was soon afterward informed by Edgar Tourtelotte of his engagement, with his father's consent, to Miss Martin. On the day Edgar was married he sent me a check for $100.

ADOLESCENT TYPE.

Paris Now Creates a New Phase of Gown.

AFTERNOON FROCK OF STITCHED MOIRE.

A Parisian chronicler of fashion has dubbed the present sartorial mood of the City of Light "la mode adolescente." Surely this is a very apt description of the costumes being sent over from the other side of the pond. There is a languor and abandon about the lines that suggests the soft, pliant, yielding figure of the adolescent, and in no costume of the season is this phase of the mode more apparent than in afternoon frocks.

This costume is the backbone of every well dressed woman's wardrobe. It meets so many varied engagements of the day. It is charming for an afternoon bridge, for luncheon and for the club meeting or for formal calling.

Illustrated is a delightful example of the daytime gown, carried out in black moire. The striking feature of this model is the machine stitching done in white thread which outlines the bodice, producing a brocaded effect. This is the last cry in applied designs.

TURTLES HAVE GOOD TEMPERS

Place a number of different kinds and sizes of turtles in a small space and the forbearance which is exhibited might well be a lesson to man. Big and little will crawl about, heedless of each other's comfort or security from harm. A small painted terrapin, for instance, will clamber solidly over the head of a vicious snapper, and the chances are that the latter will merely duck its head or move to one side so that the claws of the former will not injure its eyes. There seems at such times a look of patient resignation or sullen submission, which would immediately change to savage resentment and fierce attack if a man made a hundredth part of the commotion. These creatures appear to be able to distinguish between "no offense meant" and intentional mauling. While they submit to the one, they will fight over the other, if fight has not been previously thrashed out of them.—Kansas City Star

SPECIAL SERMONS IN THE CITY CHURCHES

EVERY PROMISE FULFILLED WHEN CONDITIONS ARE MET

Sin is an Independent Self Organized Act Says Rev. F. A. Conners

The Gospel of Christ, the Power of God unto Salvation, was the subject taken by Rev. F. A. Conners, at Park Street Baptist Church, Sunday evening. His text was:

Rom. 1:16, "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto Salvation."

In the course of his remarks, Rev. Mr. Conners said that the great Apostle of the Gentiles gives us in this brief passage the key-note of the Gospel, reiterated and emphasised throughout the whole New Testament. In another passage he rings out "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." And Peter peels forth, "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree." And John from his solitude, sends a wave across the water "Unto Him who loved us and washed us in His own Blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God."

And so we have from that day to this, the increasing testimony of the Saints of God, to the power of the Gospel of Christ. Onward it sweeps down through the ages, widening in its sweep, and increasing in its forces with the multiplied millions of witnesses who have tested its claims and proven its power.

The statement here of the Great Apostle that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, suggests the note that those to whom he wrote were trammeled and hedged by the traditions of the Fathers and the Judeanizers, who despised the great message of love and peace because of the humility with which it was clothed and that characterized its founder and His followers.

This spirit has been in the world ever since the fall of man, and was much in evidence in Rome at this time of the Apostle's writing.

Wisdom, Love and Power

The Gospel is the combined wisdom, love and power of God to those who believe. It is God's righteousness through His Son and His Life by His Spirit.

Its power is only to those who believe its message. "To as many as received Him to them gave He power to become the Sons of God."

The Gospel demonstrates its power in its every subject of faith. Its every claim is established, and God's every promise is fulfilled when the conditions are fully met. Only he who believes can receive. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Much faith receiveth much power and great blessing according to your faith so shall ye receive." All the tests of time can never disprove its claims, nor all the demands of faith exhaust its power and supply.

The Gospel was to the haughty, self-righteous Pharisee, a stumbling block, it did not harmonize with the traditions of the fathers.

It was to the Greeks foolishness, for it did not agree with their reasoning, who claimed to be the standard of knowledge, but to all who believe, whether Jews or Greeks, it is the power of God unto our Salvation.

God hath ordained that by the foolishness of preaching men should be saved.

The Apostle is here but witnessing to the facts of his own experience and what every believer has found to be true, That the law held us in bondage because of sin. (A transgression of the law) and that the Gospel has set us free because of grace.

Every claim of the law is fulfilled in the Gospel.

Read Roman 3:19-31.

Sin, an Independent Act

"Sin is the independent self organised act of man's free will in opposition to the known mind and will of God."

Sin is the self-defeating act of man, and not a triumph of evil over righteousness, or Satan over God.

Sin is essentially weaker than righteousness, as flesh is weaker than spirit, or Satan than God.

All the attributes of God are combined in one dominating characteristic love. With all the power and blessing of God at man's disposal, why are we so lean of soul? One man has given us the solution in one brief paragraph.

1. People own Bibles, but feed on newspapers.
2. We sing about peace, but do not surrender to God.
3. We pray that the Kingdom of God may come, but block it by the Kingdom of Rum.
4. We listen to sermons on selfishness, but practice it with the most cunning deception.
5. We wear crosses but shrink from bearing them.
6. Praise Christ with the lips but by our works deny Him.
7. We pray "O Lord, Thy Kingdom come."

All these are but evidences against us. Where is the world to look for the proofs of the Gospel's power, if not in its subjects of faith.

The mingled forces of the world,
With those of God's annointed,
Has thus misled the weaker man
And left him disappointed.
But those of faith and courage true,
Have in the Gospel rested,
And never found a promise fail,
Which they had fairly tested.

It is easy to use the word Idol in jest and scorn, but not so easy to define it and explain the place it holds in the hearts of men.

It is this that is robing us of our happiness in life and our hopes of eternity.

Primative religion was a matter of conviction, modern religion is a matter of convenience.

The power of the Gospel is manifest at every point, and from every angle of life.

1. Its power is felt in conviction of sin.
2. Its power is felt in convincing of truth.
3. Its power is felt in its transforming of the life.

Artificiality and Sham

This is the age of artificiality and sham, and it has so entered into our religious life that even the very elect are being deceived.

The Gospel of Christ has not lost its power, and God has always His faithful witnesses.

Life was lost in Adam through heeding Satan's lies; and is restored in Christ through believing God's Truth, the Gospel.

"Believing that Christ died to save the world, will save nobody, that is merely a matter of history. Believing that Christ died to save me will save anybody, that is an act of faith."

Therefore with the Apostle I can say, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for I have proven it, the power of God unto Salvation."

LURE OF THE DANCE HALL AND THE AUTO

ments and take them to heart and respect and observe.

Inculcate obedience to parents,
Thou shalt not bear false witness,
Remember the Sabbath day,
Thou shalt not steal.

Take these admonitions back into our hearts and our lives and we should be a changed community.

Preach the positive gospel of practical help. One standard for men and women—for girls and boys. Why should the girl who errs go down in shame while the youth is recognized in society? Give a larger place to home life. To those who lacking good homes and who must find interest or recreation in our streets—make the streets absolutely safe—materially and morally. Thousands of young people have no home. Should not the Christian people of the city open their homes to such as these and help to bring brightness and safety to all.

We need larger and more playgrounds for our young filks. We need more policemen. We need to see that each policeman has one day of rest out of seven—and then they will probably be able to keep awake on the other six days.

We need a representative from our schools—a principal or able teacher—in our council; and a woman on our School Board. We need a woman policeman—badly needed. The Council of your city is just as much responsible for its moral life as for its sanitation.

Don't be depressed by revenue and taxes. If you live in a city you must pay city prices. You can't get the convenience of a city at village rates. Don't grumble. Brace up. See that the money is wisely expended and especially that it is spent so that the moral life of the city will be bettered.

"This city is a place of gossip and small talk—of course there is none in this congregation," said the preacher, ironically. That unruly member is a very busy member in Peterboro—O, how he whispers! This creates distrust—O, it's parochial and rural. It has even got into the press in the shape of letters of carping criticism and narrow-mindedness—it is no easy matter to conduct a newspaper."

"Look at the press report for the last few months. It is time something was done for the protection of our young people when our girls cannot go from the Y.W.C.A. to the Library without being accosted, and in some cases, abused."

"How are we to remedy this state of things?" The preacher said he would rather speak on another subject, but he believed the Christian pulpits in the city ought to speak out and not shirk their duty in this matter.

Mr. Peever insisted that our streets must be made safe for our young people. Many of them have no homes in the city. We ought to provide open-air playgrounds and ice rinks. We should have more police in this city. In Ottawa they had one policeman to every thousand."

He said "the man who accepted civic office ought to be prepared to do his duty or resign his office. If necessary, double the police force, and appoint a police woman. Hunt the prowlers that infest our streets. Put your money into the city, not into a Rescue Home. All hail! to the women, if they goad our dull minds, and move us to do something to elevate the moral conditions of our city."

Cornwall To Be Centre.

CORNWALL, Jan. 26.—It is announced that Cornwall will be the chief distributing centre for the Cedar Rapids electric power. The transmission line will be completed by the spring of 1915, when 120,000 horse-power will be available at the cheapest rates in the province. This will make Cornwall one of the best locations in the Dominion for industrial plants, as, besides the electric power that will be available, there is an unlimited water supply at the town's doors.

THE THIRD SERMON ON THE APOSTLES' CREED

Charlotte St. Methodist Church was well filled last night, when Rev. T. J. Mansell delivered the third of his series of sermons on the Apostles' Creed, his subject being the second article, or "Jesus Christ, His only Son, Our Lord." The speaker prefaced his discourse by the importance of the reality of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and proceeded to deal with the reality of Christ, His historical position and His relationship to God and man, particularly the power of Christ to save men from their sins. God never had a beginning and Christ was next to God, but was equal with God. The word Christ was not a surname, but was equivalent to the Hebrew Messiah, meaning "the annointed one," which was an emblem of consecration.

Jesus was the highest development of sonship. We are all sons of God. In the course of time Jesus might be surpassed by a higher development. In regard to such arguments and those of men like Theodore Parker, he mentioned the statements of Christ which were unique in that no other man ever made any even approaching them. Notice these: "I am the light of the world," —"The Bread of Life."

Christ never expressed sorrow for wrong-doing, because he had power to forgive sins. An article in the Literary Digest describing the conversion of the Governor of the State of Tennessee was read and reference to the saving power of Christ as found in the Brewery Mission on Craig St., in Montreal was also made.

Self Induced Insanity

Sin was self-induced insanity, the speaker said, but the most serious consequence of sin was the suffering it caused the innocent, particularly the children who inherited a tendency to some moral or physical defect.

In regard to the power of Christ to save men from the sin of drunkenness, the speaker had some caustic remarks to make about hotels and the opposition to prohibition, saying that the good hotels were the cause of the liquor dives because the respectable young men, who began to take a drink in the respectable hotel, gradually drifted to the disreputable resorts, when they would be no longer tolerated in the high class hotel.

The musical part of the service was good as usual, an excellent anthem by the choir, and a fine rendering of "My Redeemer" a difficult solo by Miss Richardson.

The announcements for the week were as usual, the important one being the mass meeting at 8 o'clock on Tuesday evening, when addresses will be given.

CANNOT 'OUST HUERTA; FAILURE IS ADMITTED

He Expects to Dominate the Situation in Three Months.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 26. — President Huerta betrays no sign of yielding, although he is cognizant of the increase in the strength of his enemies intriguing within the capital, and those in the field; is handicapped by inability to procure money, and is confronted with Washington's determination that he must retire from Mexico's affairs.

Personal and political friends and the highest officials of the Catholic Church in Mexico who have been endeavoring by methods for the most part discreetly indirect, to bring about his elimination, are seemingly convinced that they have failed.

Gen. Huerta talks optimistically of the outlook, displays pride in the size of his army, which he estimates as considerably more than 100,000, and appears to believed that in spite of all obstacles and reverses he will be able to dominate the situation within three months. It is conceded here that ex-Minister Flores Magon has failed in his mission to Mr. Lind at Vera Cruz, and that the United States will listen to no proposition short of the unconditional elimination of Gen. Huerta.

No one—not even President Huerta—attempts to disguise the fact that the Mexican treasury is practically empty. In the capital, the Government payrools are being liquidated with reasonable promptness, but it is no secret that the diplomatic representatives and consols abroad in many cases have not been paid for weeks, and that the troops outside the capital often receive their pay long after it is due. In most cases these funds are derived from local sources; sometimes they are from forced loans levied on the inhabitants where the troops happen to be stationed.

Extraordinary taxes have been levied in the capital as well as outside points, and there are rumors that other decrees are soon to be issued that will exact still greater tribute from the people.

Women and Children Slain.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 26.—One hundred women and children and 150 Federal soldiers were massacred by rebels recently near Vanegas, to the north of San Luis Potosi, according to reports received here yesterday. The soldiers, with the women, surrendered to the rebels, and were taken to a ranch near Matebuala, where the alleged butchery occurred.

Major Rebollo and Capt. Ramires and a handful of men were the ones to escape. They arrived here Saturday, bringing news of the occurrence.

TO COME TO CANADA.

Dominions Royal Commission Will Take Evidence Next Year.

OTTAWA, Jan. 26. — The Dominions Royal Commission, that recently created body representative of the British Empire, which deals for the most part with matters concerning the trades interest of Great Britain and her overseas Dominions, will spend three months in Canada next year. While the commission is in Canada, the question of ocean freight rates, not only transatlantic, but transpacific, will be examined in all its aspects.

This was the important statement made last night by Hon. George E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, on his return from England, where he had been attending the sittings of the Dominions Royal Commission. He left Canada for London on Dec. 26, so that he has been absent from Ottawa just one month.

Mr. Foster states that the question of the recent increase in ocean freight rates was not gone into by the commissioners at the London sitting, but will be taken up in South Africa where the commission goes next month. South Africa is deeply interested in the question as well as Canada.

NO PROSPECT OF PEACE.

Redmond Sees No Probability of Buying Ulster's Good Will.

WATERFORD, Ireland, Jan. 26.—"Every sane man knows that, barring accidents, the home rule bill will be the law on the land this year," said John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, speaking before an immense gathering here yesterday afternoon.

"If any change is made in the home rule bill," continued Mr. Redmond, "it will only be to buy the good will of our opponents. But I say frankly that I see no prospects of their good will being purchased at any price whatever. That good will is worth purchasing at a big price, but any change in the bill should be consistent with the unity of Ireland. There are no lengths short of abandonment of the principles you and I hold to which I would not go to win the confidence of the men of Ulster."

Referring to Wm. O'Brien's resignation from his seat in Cork, Mr. Redmond asked his supporters to refrain from contesting the seat, declaring that a fight between two professing Nationalists at the present moment would be a scandal and an injury to the cause.

FIELDING HEADS MERGER.

New Montreal Newspaper Combine To Be Working In a Week.

MONTREAL, Jan. 26.—It was officially stated yesterday afternoon that Hon. W. S. Fielding, former Minister of Finance, will be president and editor of the new Liberal paper, The Herald-Witness, which will appear here in the evening field in place of The Herald and The Telegraph, which are now being amalgamated. It was stated yesterday afternoon that a week would see all the details worked out and the new paper on the streets. The subscription lists of The Telegraph and The Herald have already been merged, and all that remains now is to chose the staff.

Mr. C. Gordonsmith will be one of the editors. The staff will be a very large one, it is possible that very few will be out of employment or be inconvenienced by the amalgamation of the two papers. Meanwhile there are reports of new papers appearing.

"ARSON SQUAD" RESUMES WORK

GLASGOW, Scotland, Jan. 26.—A bomb outrage, believed by the police to have been carried out by suffragettes, Saturday, virtually destroyed the extensive conservatory in the Glasgow Botanic Gardens, known as the Kibble Crystal Palace.

Besides the great glass room and sides of the structure, which were blown into thousands of atoms, many valuable tropical and other plants were ruined.

A caretaker succeeded in severing the fuse of a second bomb just before the first one exploded. He had a narrow escape of losing his life by being struck by some of the flying splinters of metal and glass.

THE PARABLE OF THE WIDOW'S MITE

Large Congregation Heard Rev. R. B. Grobb at St. John's.

Rev. R. B. Grobb, of All Saint's church, exchanged with Rev. Canon Davidson, and took the service at St. John's church Sunday morning. A large congregation joined heartily in the beautiful ritual which was reverently and impressively read by the rector of All Saints, after which a sermon, which contained many helpful and uplifting thoughts was preached, from the parable of the "Widow's Mite," St. Mark xii, 41, 44. The preacher drew a vivid picture of "Jesus sitting over against the treasury" watching the people as they came in, the rich giving a little from their "abundance," but the poor widow from "her want," out of the abundance of a thankful heart. Rev. Mr. Grobb pointed out that we are too apt to give grudgingly of our time, talents and means, and only a trifle of each, but when we begin to feel we must "deny ourselves," then we draw back and "hold fast" to all we possess, thus forfeiting the blessings which we should receive, did we from our "abundance" give as freely as did he "poor widow." During the offertory Miss Ruby Quartermaine gave a beautiful rendering of "I Came to Jesus as I Was."

"I suffered from Rheumatism for six years; tried different doctors, with no relief. I saw your advertisement and decided to try RHEUMA. I have taken three bottles and am entirely free from the disease. I was so bad I could not sleep nights. Now I sleep well, and my kidneys work perfectly."—P. W. Miller, Catawissa, Pa.

"For 14 months I was so badly afflicted with Rheumatism that much of the time I was obliged to use a cane. I used one bottle of RHEUMA and THE CANE IS IN THE CORNER NOW. No one could be happier to be rid of the pain, swollen knees and badly swollen ankles. I certainly believe there is no remedy for the disease like RHEUMA."—Mrs. Daniel S. Knox, Severance, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1912.

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy No. 69879, for $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

PARTICIPATING RESULTS.		NON-PAR RESULTS.

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. If so, call at or 'phone the Sun Life Office, 402 Water Street.

FARM HAND A SUICIDE.

Theodore Mann Hangs Himself In Robert Laidlaw's Barn.

GUELPH, Jan. 26. — Theodore Mann, a young German, 24 years of age, committed suicide on Sunday morning on the farm of Robert Laidlaw, Paisley Block, six miles from Guelph, by hanging himself from a beam in the barn. He was discovered by one of the farm hands at 10.30, quite dead and the body still warm.

Young Mann had been in the employ of Mr. Laidlaw since November last, but spent the three months previous to that in Berlin. He had been acting quite strangely for some time past, and looked as though he was worried about something. He wrote three letters to his mother in Germany during the week, the last one being written Friday night. He was a single man as far as could be learned.

British Aviator Killed.

LONDON, Jan. 26. — George Lee Temple, a British aviator, was killed yesterday while flying at Hendon. He was making an especially difficult dive when a strong gust of wind caught the tail of his monoplane, and the machine crashed to the ground. The aviator's neck was broken.

Temple was the first British aviator to make a flight upside down in this country, having accomplished this feat on Nov. 24, two days before B. C. Hucks looped the loop at Hendon.

WAR OFFICE FINDS IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Great Results Are Met in Recruting Work.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The scheme recruiting the British army by newspaper advertisement, recently inaugurated by the War Office, is excellent testimony to the value of newspaper publicity. About ten days ago the War Office inserted in most newspapers alluring announcements detailing the advantages resulting from enlistment in the army, and inviting would-be recruits to write for booklets with further information given. Fifty thousand copies of this booklet were prepared, and Saturday the last of a whole edition was applied for, thus showing that newspaper advertisements reached the quarters desired What results were attained in the increased enlistments, however, has not yet been announced.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

On Charge of Aiding in Escape of Murderer

WINNIPEG, Jan. 26.—After a preliminary hearing, occupying nearly three days, Percy Hagel and John Westlake were committed for trial by Magistrate Macdonald Saturday afternoon on a charge of aiding John Krafchenko to escape from the Central police station, after commitment for trial for the murder of H. M. Arnold, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Plum Coulee, Man.

The police have decided not to lay charges against Frank Holt, who helped in the hiding of the alleged murderer in fear of his life, and J. H. Buxton, jr., who turned "King's evidence," which led to the re-arrest of Krafchenko. Percy Hagel was counsel for the prisoner.

Prince William of Wied Faces Trouble in Struggle for Throne

LONDON, Jan. 26.—(C. A. P. Cable.) — The powers of Europe have decided upon an international demonstration in Albanian waters to enforce their demands that Essad Pasha give up his claim to the throne of Albania. Each nation will send one ship to Durazzo.

This action of the powers also is taken as an intimation to Turkey that the future of Albania is now a European question.

In the event of Essad Pasha yielding before the arrival at Durazzo of the international fleet, as is possible, the ships will be utilized to welcome Prince William of Wied, who has been selected by the European nations to occupy the Albanian throne.

The demand of the prince for a loan of $15,000,000 with which to finance his administration of the new state has now been agreed to by the powers, so that the reason for delaying his assumption of sovereignty has been removed.

Prince William of Wied has now completed arrangements to leave Berlin for his new Kingdom of Albania, and in the course of the next month will go to Trieste, there to board the yacht Mohican and make an impressive entry into his dominions.

Essad Pasha, who at one time was regarded as a serious candidate for the throne of the new Albanain Kingdom, and who, according to most reliable reports, has a strong local backing, professes allegiance to William Wied, but some doubts are expressed of his sincerity and are unlikely to be dispelled until Wied's arrival at Durazzo. Essad is in virtual command of the country with a force estimated at 15,000 men under his orders.

CONGRESSMAN IS CONVICTED

NEW YORK, Jan. 26. — William Willett, jr., former Democratic member of Congress, was convicted last Saturday of bribery in attempting to purchase a Supreme Court nomination in Brooklyn and Queen's County in 1911. The jury had the case under consideration for 40 minutes.

Willett was remanded to jail for sentence.

Indicted with Willett were Joseph Cassidy, former Democratic leader of Queen's County, and once an important figure in local politics, and L. T. Walter, jr., as the go-between.

PORT AU PRINCE, Jan. 26.—The revolutionary movement is gaining headway in the southern section of Haiti, and the position of the Government is considered critical. Bargain Day For Butter.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 26.—A Toledo farmer came to the Brockville market with 100 pounds of butter in one-pound prints. The crush of purchasers surrounding the cutter was so great that he could not keep tab on them, and after the lot had been cleared at 30 cents per pound, he found that he was short in his receipts by $6, showing that 20 pounds had been carried off. One woman was reported to have taken a basketful.

Points in Wedding Etiquette.

With the exception of May, which is considered an unlucky month, and Lent, the quiet season, there is no time of the year when wedding ceremonies are not constantly taking place.

As might be expected, the preparations for a wedding take up not a little time and forethought. There are so many small details to be considered, various minor points of etiquette to notice, and a hundred and one things to remember if the actual day is to be gone through by all concerned without hitch or inconvenience.

The magnificence or simplicity of the ceremony depends, of course, on the worldly position of the bride and bridegroom, though certainly the present day tendency is toward a rather disproportionate display, as every year presents become more numerous and costly, the bride's trousseau more elaborate, while immense sums are expended on decorations, catering and such like items.

The popular fashion of white satin and orange blossoms for the bride's attire still holds its own, though there are occasional innovations made such as the wearing of gold or silver brocade and touches of color on the train, while quite recently, instead of the usual white bouquet or sheaf of lilies, the bride carried a great bunch of crimson roses.

For winter weddings muffs of fur, lace and chiffon have replaced the flowers, or sometimes a prayer book bound in white and silver.

The invitations are sent out a full three or four weeks beforehand in the name of the bride's parents, the bridegroom supplying a list of those of his own friends whom he wishes invited.

As regards the bouquets, those of the bride, bridesmaids and bride's mother are supplied by the bridegroom, who also pays all fees connected with the ceremony.

The cost of the reception and the carriages for taking the bride and guests to church are provided by the bride's parents, but the bridegroom pays for the carriage or motorcar to the station after the reception.

At one time it was considered incorrect for a widow to be followed by bridesmaids on the occasion of her second marriage, but this rule is often broken. Sometimes, however, the custom of a "matron of honor" is followed instead.

The number of bridesmaids varies considerably, four to six being most usual, but two, ten or twelve, or in their place several small children, are often seen.

The chief bridesmaid holds the bride's bouquet and gloves during the service, and all the bridesmaids and the parents on both sides follow to the vestry for the signing of the register

Keep Your Hands Quiet.

The hands of some people seem to have acquired the secret of perpetual motion. A girl who has this fault should set about conquering it immediately if she does not want to do damage to the nerves of those who have to be with her and wreck her own. The instant she realizes that she is pulling at her hair combs, or collar, or giving her belt a vicious jab let her stop and hold her hands fixed in her lap, no matter what effort it requires.

Look about in the theater, or tea room, or street car. Hardly a girl has her hands in repose. Most are tugging at some article of dress as they talk or, what is worse, fingering the dress of a companion.

The manager of an office where there are many girls had to put up a notice that clerks must not touch articles on her desk when they came to speak to her. She says that one when making a report would pick up a pencil and draw weird figures on the desk blotter. The next hooked paper clips together, making a long chain that the manager had the work of unhooking; another tapped the desk with a pencil during her conversation. In short, scarcely a girl came and stood beside the desk with quiet hands.

The wall around a public telephone is another indication that most people while using the line must still be working with their hands, for always there is a mass of pencil scratchings as far as the hand can reach.

When Introduced.

It is a duty to listen attentively to the name of one who is introduced. Avoid all mistakes by asking politely for the name that you have not heard or that has been mumbled by a thoughtless introducer.

"Will you tell me again your name? I was not quick enough to hear it," is a graceful little way of correcting an error. By all means do not guess at a name, nor do not conclude that a man and woman who enter a room and are introduced together are necessarily married. A guest has no right to refuse an introduction under the roof of a hostess who has invited many persons whose private feelings are naturally unknown to her. A courteous acknowledgment, even between unfriendly ones, is due your hostess. After the polite, formal acceptance of an introduction a separation can be effected. But don't forget to save others the embarrassment of an ill-bred display of personal feelings.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAY; MONTREAL TO DULUTH

Joint Commission Will Consider Scheme by Which Canada and the U.S. Would Share Construction of Huge System of Deep Canals For Ocean Traffic —Work May Cost Three Hundred Millions.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26. — A project for the joint construction by the Governments of the United States and Canada of a deep waterway for ocean-going steamers from Montreal to Duluth, Minn., has been inaugurated through the international joint commission which has jurisdiction over the boundary waters of the two countries.

The discussion instituted through the international joint commission are the result of a recent conference in Washington in which Secretary Bryan, Chairman J. A. Tawney, of the American section of the international commission, and Senator Charles E. Townsend, of Michigan, participated.

It was arranged that the matter should be taken up first with the Canadian Government through the commission. Chairman Tawney will confer soon with T. Chase Casgrain, K.C., chairman of the Canadian section.

The project for an ocean waterway from the head of navigation on Lake Superior to the Atlantic has been agitated for many years. It was considered seriously at the time when President Taft entered into reciprocity with Canada.

Several routes have been proposed for the waterway, the cost of which is estimated from $100,000,000 to $300,000,000, but the one most favored in the United States provides for the utilization of all the lakes and the St. Lawrence river.

This route, it is contended, would not result in any material lowering of the waters of the great lakes, while it is said a considerable change in the lake levels would result if any of the other proposed routes were decided upon.

Senator Townsend, of Michigan, is one of the most ardent advocates of the project. He said recently:

"It does not require an economist nor an expert traffic man to show the economy which would result to the stupendous industry of the middle west of the United States and Canada if the burdens of reshipment were removed and cargoes could be loaded at lake ports and unloaded at the ultimate destination.

"This benefit would be increased by the similar advantages resulting to inbound freight rates from the Atlantic coast and from foreign ports, but these benefits, coming directly from the actual use of the ocean waterway, would not be the only ones enjoyed by industry.

"Such a waterway would produce the result which has always followed, and will also follow, from the creation of water transportation, namely, it will cause a reduction of rail rates and an improvement of rail facilities from all points on even remotely competitive rail lines."

Senator Townsend recognizes three obstacles to the realization of this project. The railroads will oppose it, the international complications will have to be met, and the cost necessarily will be so great as to make its realization difficult.

The Senator believes that if the question were properly handled the Government of Canada undoubtedly could be persuaded to join in the scheme, the burden of cost to be shared on the basis of proportionate benefits accruing to each country.

Until the Government have actually agreed on the project, Senator Townsend believes it would be wise for the United States to plan every harbor improvement on the great lakes, with a view to the ultimate construction of a 35-foot channel from Duluth to Montreal.

Epidemic Now Broken.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., Jan. 26. —The backbone of the smallpox epidemic that has held this city in its grip for the past month, is broken, in the opinion of the health officer, E. E. Gillick. There was no increase in the number of cases to-day, the total being the same as Friday, 122. While three new cases were reported Saturday, three were released from quarantine. A representative of the state department of health is expected here to-day to co-operate with Dr. Gillick in handling the situation.

Yesterday was the quietest Sunday Niagara Falls has had in years. With the exception of the Roman Catholic Churches, all the churches were closed, and the theatres, which are open every day in the year, were closed by the board of health, but the schools have not been closed.

WAS EATEN BY WOLVES

School Girl is Devoured by Ravenous Animals.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The long-continued cold, especially in the central districts of France, is bringing numbers of wolves frantic with hunger out of the woods. A little girl returning from school at Lacoquille, near Perigueux, was devoured by wild animals, the searching party finding only a torn pinafore and a few bones. Hunting parties are being organized everywhere.

The temperature in Paris has shown a slight improvement in the last day or two, owing to the brilliant sunshine, the mercury on Saturday standing above the freezing point for the first time in many days. In the country districts the cold is growing more intense, and the weather bureau sees no immediate probability of higher temperatures.

The thermometer registered six below zero yesterday at Puy de Dome. The cold is likely to prove disastrous as many farmers have sown late wheat, trusting to a repetition of the mild autumn and winter of the past few years, and it is feared that crops in many places will be destroyed.

People of Turin Shiver.

TURIN, Jan. 26.—This district is still experiencing intense cold, 20 degrees of frost having been recorded for the past few days. Despatches from Acqui, in the Province of Alessandria, reported 27 degrees of frost.

IS NOT SON OF STRATHCONA

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—James H. Smith, of Brookline, Mass., who, according to despatches from Boston on Saturday, might claim the vast estates of Lord Strathcona as the son of the peer, was in this city yesterday and said that he had no intention of making a claim for the estate or any part of it. The following statement was given out for Mr. Smith:

Mr. Smith is a son of Lady Strathcona by her former marriage. He was born in June, 1852. Lord Strathcona was married to Lady Strathcona in 1853 at Northwest River, Hamilton's Inlet, in the Province of Labrador, within the jurisdiction of Newfoundland. Lord Strathcona did not arrive at Northwest River until the autumn of 1852.

Lord Strathcona's only cold, and daughter, now the wife of Dr. Robert Jared Bliss Howard, F.R.C.S., lives in London and is the heir presumptive of Lord Strathcona by a special act of Parliament. Mrs. Howard was born in January, 1854, at Northwest River.

Mr. Smith said that he did not care to go into the matter to the extent of making a statement, but that he merely explained the family connection for the purpose of setting forth the true conditions and relationship.

The average salary paid to Philadelphia women school teachers is $80 a month.

BACK BROKEN; LIVED A YEAR

TORONTO, Jan. 26.—After having lived for a year and five months with a broken back, Louis T. Tezzalato, of North Bay, died at St. Michael's Hospital Saturday evening. Tezzalato was a miner in the employ of the Victoria Mines, and on Sept. 19, 1912, while working near a huge derrick, was struck down by a falling beam, which broke his back midway between the waist and shoulders. He was rushed to Toronto and taken to St. Michael's, where he has lain at the expense of his employers ever since.

The body was removed to the morgue, but the matter of an inquest has not yet been decided.

Assailant Not Identified.

HOUGHTON, Jan. 26. — None of the members of the crowd who assaulted Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western Federation of Miners, in Hancock, on the night of Dec. 26, and then deported him, were identified to the satisfaction of the special grand jury, and a "no true" bill was returned in the case Saturday.

George E. Nichols, the special prosecutor, decided that there was no law under which the men who are alleged to have forced Moyer on the train, could be punished for kidnapping, even if they could be identified and he so informed the jury.

Portugal Railway Strike Over.

LISBON, Jan. 26. — The railroad strike, which began Jan. 14, was declared ended last night. The employes return to work without having obtained any advantages. The recent wholesale arrest of the ringleaders of the general strike, by order of the Government, led to its collapse.

PARSON TORE BIBLE TO PIECES

His Sermon Was on Tearing the Bible to Pieces.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Jan. 26.—Members of the congregation of the Lyon Street Church of Christ sat aghast yesterday when Rev. William Nelson picked up a small Bible and tore it into bits, scattering the fragments on the heads of the parishioners. When he had finished the destruction he volunteered the explanation that his topic for the evening's sermon was "Tearing the Bible to Pieces."

PRICES ASCENDING.

Labor Department's Index Figure Continues To Rise.

OTTAWA, Jan. 26.—The trend of prices of general commodities in Canada continues upwards. Statistics issued by the Labor Department show that during 1913 the upward movement was most noticeable in animals and meats. The average prices in this class of foodstuffs rose during the year from the department's index number 167.5 in January to 185.9 in December. Dairy produces also advanced considerably, rising from 160.4 in January to 182 in December.

There was a very heavy decline in the price of furs as a group, the index number falling from 358 in January to 247 in the last three months of the year. The general level of miscellaneous groceries throughout the year was two points lower than 1912. In textiles prices rose from 127.8 in January to 136.9 in December.

Couldn't Afford to Run.

When Jacob M. Dickinson, formerly secretary of war, as a member of the Alaskan boundary tribunal was called upon suddenly to make his argument because Sir Edward Carson had concluded his remarks one day ahead of time he began by telling a story: "So far from feeling any sense of confidence," he said to the president of the court, "I am in a position very deeply to sympathize with the feeling of the Confederate soldier who, when the battle line was sweeping forward in the last fearful charge at Chickamauga and a rabbit jumped up and ran through to the rear, cried out: 'Run, cottontail! If I did not have any more character at stake than you have I would run too.'"

An Intruder Came and Lectured the Occupant

By ELEANOR TISDALE

On the front porch sat Edward Meredith at an easel, sketching the landscape before him. He was so interested in his work that he did not notice some boys who had climbed the apple trees and were poking and beating with sticks the apples on the branches they could not reach with their hands. Presently he heard a woman's voice:

"Come down, little boys. You have quite enough apples on the ground, to which you are welcome. You are breaking the limbs."

The artist laid down his palette, rested his maulstick against his easel and walked down to where stood a young woman and where boys who had descended from the trees were gathering apples from the ground. Raising his hat politely to the lady, he said:

"I beg pardon! By what authority do you give away my apples?"

"Do you own the place, sir?"

"I rent it, and that makes me the owner temporarily."

"Is the fruit yours?"

"The fruit, under the terms of the lease, belongs to the owner of the property, but it is under my guardianship."

"Do you consider that you are fulfilling your duty as guardian by permitting boys to come in and break the branches of the trees?"

The young man knit his brows.

"Will you kindly explain how you came to be appointed arbiter in this matter?" asked Meredith.

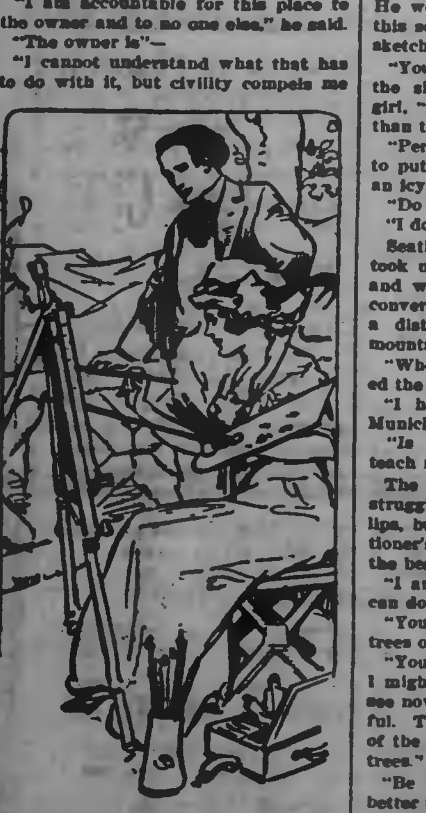
"Will you kindly give me a reason for your delinquency in not protecting trees committed to your care?"

Meredith was getting the worst of the argument, but, feeling that he had the right on his side, persisted.

"I am accountable for this place to the owner and to no one else," he said.

"The owner is"—

"I cannot understand what that has to do with it, but civility compels me to reply to a civil question. The owner's name is Elizabeth Gawtry."



"WHERE DID YOU LEARN TO PAINT?"

"Married or single?"

"That I do not know," was the somewhat impatient reply.

"Not know whether your landlady is a wife or a maid?"

"I have never seen her, nor can I understand what her status has to do with your entering my grounds and administering the property."

"If you see a swindle going on before your eyes, don't you think it your duty to protect the person swindled? I do not accuse you of swindling the woman, whoever she may be, but you are very negligent of her interests, and my interference is justified."

This was spoken with perfect coolness, without rancor and rather as an explanation than as a reproof. The woman, so the artist judged, could not be more than twenty-two years old and was singularly attractive. I say singularly, for she seemed to have an individuality of her own. From being irritated Meredith began to be interested, curious as to what meant this intrusion and why the lady had taken it into her head to protect the fruit trees, to give away the apples and lecture him for not taking better care of the property. He began to feel that he should exercise more politeness to a woman, especially a woman young and comely. He was young himself and noted for his deference to the gentler sex.

"I have no seat to offer you here," he said, "but if you will come up to the house I can make you more comfortable."

"That will do, little boys; you have plenty. Now run along, and if you come in here again for apples take only those you find on the ground." Then, turning to Meredith, she accepted his invitation.

He did not know whether to be more astonished at her instructions to the boys or her willingness to go with him. It was but a short distance to the porch, and when they reached it the lady at once took position before the picture Meredith had been sketching and looked from it to its subject with a critical eye.

"Very good," she said, "but this is not the best view here to treat effectively on canvas. That vista between the trees over there would make a far more attractive picture."

What did this mean? A woman had come into his premises, had given away the fruit, had scolded him for not taking better care of the property, and now she was finding fault with him for not choosing the best subject for his picture! He stood gazing at her with renewed astonishment, then fixed his eyes on the vista she had referred to and was the more chagrined at perceiving that she was right. He wondered why he had not chosen this scene rather than the one he was sketching.

"Your drawing of the little house on the side of the mountain," said the girl, "is defective. You can do better than that. Try again."

"Perhaps you will do me the favor to put it in for me," said Meredith in an icy tone.

"Do you really wish it?"

"I do."

Seating herself before the easel, she took up palette, brush and maulstick and with a few dashes of the brush converted a clumsy piece of work into a distant house blending with the mountain mist.

"Where did you learn to paint?" asked the astonished Meredith.

"I have been recently studying in Munich and other European cities."

"Is there anything else you can teach me how to do?"

The girl looked at him, and a smile struggled to obtain the mastery on her lips, but it faded, seeing by her questioner's expression that he was not in the best of humor with her.

"I am not aware," she said, "that I can do anything better than you."

"You can certainly guard the fruit trees of this place better than I."

"You mean that were I in your place I might be more attentive to them. I see now why you have seemed neglectful. The demands of art do not admit of the artist chasing boys out of apple trees."

"Be that as it may, you can paint better than I."

"I may have had more instruction, more practice."

"Are you as proficient in music as you are in art?"

"Why do you ask?"

"Because I flatter myself that I am a fairly good pianist, and I'll warrant you can prove yourself a far better one."

"Then you are doubtless my superior. I pretend to play only accompaniments. Let us go inside and determine this question."

"How did you know that I have a piano?"

"If you play the instrument it is to be presumed that you have one."

He followed her in as she went straight to the piano. Looking over some music, she selected a sonata, spread the sheets on the rack and asked him to play. He asked her to precede him, but she declined, so he played for her with remarkable expression and touch.

"You have beaten me. I can't vie with you on the piano, but I will sing for you."

She took his place at the piano and sang "Home, Sweet Home," with a feeling that he had never heard expressed before, yet it was very sad.

"I have it!" he exclaimed when she had finished.

"Have what?"

"The riddle is solved."

"You talk in riddles."

"Your singing that ballad so divinely is only to be accounted for in the fact that this is your home. You are my landlady, Miss Gawtry."

"Why do you think so?"

"Every condition fits. By the terms of my lease the fruit on the place is yours. You are familiar, doubtless from childhood, with the landscapes surrounding the place. You knew there was a piano here and on entering the house went straight to it. Now, tell me why there was that melancholy in your voice when you sang 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

A moisture came into her eyes. She made no reply to what he had said for some time, and when she did her voice trembled.

"I am the last of my family. Father, mother, sisters, brothers, are all gone. When the last one left me I shut up this our homestead and went to live in a city. From there I sailed for Europe to study music and painting, leaving orders that the place be rented."

"And I, coming by on a sketching tour and taking a fancy to the place and the scenery about it, rented it."

A door opened, and the housekeeper announced luncheon. Meredith prevailed upon the lady to lunch with him, and while they were at table she mentioned many things about the place that he had not noticed, entertaining him with reminiscences, at some of which she laughed and at others wept.

All this happened years agone. Meredith in time married his landlady and never reverts to his first meeting with his wife without wondering why this rencontre with the girl he was to marry should have been so unpropitious to a love affair. His wife tells him that he was very stupid not to have seen at once that she was fooling him.

The Merediths do not live on the place where they first met. It was too full of sad memories for Mrs. Meredith. She would never sell it, but she would never live in it.

SIXTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

CANADA LIFE

ASSURANCE COMPANY

A Splendid Year.	In important respects the Company in 1913 excelled its record for any previous year in its history.
Greatest Surplus Earnings.	1—THE SURPLUS EARNED in 1913 was $1,709,959.66, exceeding by over $179,000 the earnings of 1912, and by a much larger amount the earnings of any previous year. The present net surplus is $6,183,278.39.
Interest Rate Increasing.	2—THE INCOME of $8,094,885.70 was greater than that of the previous year by $698,125.96, and the greatest in the Company's history. The rate of interest earned, which had been steadily advancing since 1899, was further improved in 1913. This is an important factor in producing surplus.
Assets Over $52,000,000.	3—THE ASSETS were increased by $3,860,271.32, and now stand at $52,161,794.81.
Assurances Now Over $153,121,000.	4—THE TOTAL ASSURANCES now in force are for $153,121,363.94, an increase of over $8,273,000 in the year.
Payments To Policyholders.	5—THE PAYMENTS TO POLICYHOLDERS in 1913 totalled $2,878,016.11, an increase of $415,051.31 over those of 1912. In addition to this, LOANS TO POLICYHOLDERS on security of their policy contracts were made for $1,692,248.71.
All Factors Favorable.	6—THE MORTALITY of the year was again more favorable than the expectation, and this, with a continued LOW EXPENSE RATIO, contributed to the earning of a record surplus.

The Financial Statement and Report of Directors, together with proceedings at the annual meeting, held 22nd January, 1914, are in the printer's hands and in a few days will be mailed on request.

PICTURES FOR THE DOGS.

A Cinematograph Show Only Interested the Animals in Spots.

A moving picture show was recently given in London to determine what effect a cinematograph picture had on the intelligence of animals. A series of motion pictures was reeled off in a darkened room before an audience of prize dogs. First some pictures of a dog show were run through. The dogs walked up and had a look at it and turned away, obviously bored and uninterested. Evidently the subject was too familiar.

They woke up, however, when an elephant came splashing into a pool of water and appeared to be walking into the room. A massive bulldog made a dash for the screen. With his head up and ears pricked, he got ready to attack, and the whole audience barked and bayed in blood curdling discord. Pictures of birds also irritated them, but when other animals were shown they quickly recognized that they were not looking at the real thing and in a few seconds quieted down completely.

The general result of the experiment seemed to be that dogs do not understand still pictures, but that they appreciate motion, though it very largely depends upon the nature of the thing moving.—Pearson's Weekly.

SALT A-PLENTY IN PERU.

A Natural Factory That Is Operated on an Automatic Plan.

About a hundred miles north of Lima, near the town of Huacho, is one of the great curiosities of nature, a salt factory on an automatic plan.

When the tide comes in it fills a lot of shallow basins, and the water is prevented from flowing back into the sea by closing the gates. The atmosphere is so dry that the water evaporates rapidly and leaves a sediment of salt in an almost pure state, which is scraped up, packed into sacks and shipped to market.

Within the coast a little farther the percolation of sea water through the porous rocks into pits and hollows has caused immense deposits of salt to accumulate. The salt is taken out in blocks six or eight inches square and sold in that form. As soon as the salt is excavated the water comes in again and in a year or two has solidified and is ready for the market.

Wells driven into the sand disclose strongly impregnated water at a depth of twenty-five feet, which seems to be a great deal heavier than the sea water, and is drawn off into vats for evaporation.

Did She Keep Her Temper?

Mr. Biles is a very hasty tempered man, but he is also one who keeps his promises to the very letter. Therefore Mrs. B. extracted from him a promise always to count twenty before he speaks if he feels rage coming upon him. Last Sunday he rushed into the back drawing room spluttering with fury and red in the face. Mrs. Biles rose and laid a gentle hand on his stammering lips.

"M-Mary, I—I—I"—

"Hush, dear," said the sweet woman. "Count twenty and conquer yourself, and I shall be more proud of you than if you had conquered the world."

"Eighteen, nineteen, twenty"—

"Now tell me, dear."

Too Much Sex In Literature.

Literature is oversexed. If we were to believe the fictionists and the playwrights, sex is the one morbid, absorbing and exclusive topic of thought and conversation. It is a misrepresentation of fact. When God created man he made him to the likeness of God. Male and female, he created them. The revolt against the order of being and the blurring of natural and inevitable distinctions by a would be new species of women-men and men-women is surely a melancholy sign of decadence both intellectual and moral.—From the Universe.

AFTERMATH OF THE LAST GAME IN BELLEVILLE

Park Was Not More Effective Than the Others and he Wouldn't "Lay Down" — The Petes' Chances to Land the District Honors

"What was the matter with the Petes?" has been a popular query, since the game at Belleville on Friday night. The question is a puzzler. Whatever was responsible for the reversal of form in the second half. The Review representative who saw the game, has not the slightest suspicion, that the team "laid down" as has been charged. You can figure it up this way: Maurice Park did not at any stage of the game, play up to his usual form. He had a new pair of skates, which may or may not have had an effect on his playing. But the point is that Park was at no time effective in that second half, and there isn't a "fan" in Peterboro who can say that he would not at all times, do his very best. The other players with the possible exception of Fred Kelly, were no better. Park couldn't account for it after the game, but he remarked "Every team has an off night, so let's hope this has been ours and it won't occur again."

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

The Intermediates have two good chances to win the district. The one chance, is for Cobourg to defeat Belleville in Cobourg, which with Peterboro winning from Cobourg here tomorrow night and in Whitby on Friday night, would give the locals the honors, with only two losses. Belleville would have three.

In the event of Belleville winning in Cobourg, and also in their other games, and the Petes defeating both Cobourg and Whitby, a play-off would be necessary, and there is not a player on the Peterboro line-up who is not confident that they can win from Belleville in another game.

RIFLE MATCHES IN GALLERY RANGES AT THE ARMOURIES

The 57th Regiment has decided to hold a series of rifle matches in the gallery ranges at the Armouries, commencing about the middle of February, for which some good company and individual prizes will be offered. The shooting will be carried on under Quarter-Master Sergt. Instructor Edwards, instructor of musketry, who is here holding a school of musketey in connection with the regiment. The gallery will be open every evening from now on for practice.

MERCANTILE

Bankers and Test Will Play in First Game

In the Mercantile League at Brock Street Rink tonight, in the first game, the Bankers and Test clash and as both these teams have not as yet met defeat there will be one merry old battle.

The second game between the Examiner and the Plumbers, appears to be the game to decide whether the journalist men will win a game or not, and the last game when the Tool Room and De Laval fight it out should be fast.

Peter Spratt will have a few faster men against him than he did when the De Laval met the Examiner, and just what showing he'll make, is problematic.

Mr. Fred Kelly will referee. The first game starts at eight.

A BIG NIGHT IN COLLINGWOOD

Visiting Players and Referee Sproule Were Attacked.

Members of the Orillia team notified the O. H. A. Saturday that the Collingwood players did everything they could to protect the Orillia team from the spectators in the trouble after the game on Thursday night. The referee's official report of the match is as follows:

"Regarding the Orillia-Collingwood Intermediate O. H. A. game at Collingwood last night, I desire to report on the conduct of the spectators, viz:

"At the conclusion of the first ten minutes of the extra time several dozen spectators rushed on the ice and attacked the visiting players and myself in an unjustifiable manner, and it was with great difficulty that we reached a place of shelter in the dressing room occupied by the Orillia team. The police, with drawn revolvers, and batons, experienced a hard task in preventing the crowd from mobbing us when they attempted to storm the dressing room.

"At the conclusion of the game the police were again pressed into service to protect us in the dressing room. Under police protection myself and the Orillia players were escorted to a bus outside the rink entrance, where a crowd of approximately two hundred were congregated. They hurled missles including bottles through the windows of the bus, and the fact that no one was seriously injured, is more of a miracle.

"During the game the Collingwood players, barring Cook and McKinnon, resorted to all kinds of rough-house tactics. Burns and Lawrence used the butt ends of their sticks on their opponents, for which they were penalized. Fryer was also a disturbing factor, and frequently decorated the boards.

"While the play was stopped and while skating across the rink I was hit in the arm from behind with the puck, which I was informed by many reputable persons was deliberately shot at me by Fryer, while my back was turned. On another occasion while the play was stopped, and behind my back, (according to many eye-witnesses) Fryer deliberately struck Carter on the leg with his stick, and he was laid out for some time.

"GAMEY" STRATTON HURT IN GAME

While engaged in the Brampton-Varsity game on Saturday in the Arena, Toronto, "Gamey" Stratton, a local boy, who is attending Varsity, received an ugly gash in the thigh when he tripped over a skate, forcing him to retire.

Stratton has been a host of strength to the Varsity Juniors, and his absence from the lineup will lessen the strength of the team considerably.

PETES WILL HAVE TO WIN AT HOME WITH COBOURG

The defeat of the local Intermediates at the hands of Belleville, on Friday night, makes the game tomorrow night at Brock Street Rink with Cobourg, a most important one. Peterboro has to win their remaining two games to have a chance for the district honors, for they and Belleville have lost the same number of games.

When the locals met Cobourg a week ago tonight, one of the cleanest and fastest games of hockey was played, and with the ice in a little better condition, it is almost a certainty that the game tomorrow night will be even better.

JUNIOR CITY LEAGUE BATTLE FOR CLARKE-GRAHAM TROPHY

The Clarke-Graham Cup for the Junior City League, has been brought to the city from Lakefield, the former holders. It is on exhibition in the window of the Oak Nall.

The games on Wednesday night may decide just who will hold the cup this year. The Exploits and Y.M.C.A. have gone thus far without a defeat, and when they clash on Wedensday, the honors will be at stake. The other game is between the Alerts and Wanderers. In preparation for this, the Alerts will practice from 7—8 tomorrow night on the Sacred Teart Rink.

TYPE AND TAPE.

These Names Sounded Queer as They Were Heard in London.

Here's one about an American printer whose vicissitudes took him across the ocean last year and landed him in the town of London. The printer is back in Cleveland now and tells the story himself.

This printer bethought him of starting a little paper in the heart of England. So he rented a little building, then went to purchase his type and presses. For the type he stopped at a typefounder's place and explained his needs.

"I want some type," he said.

"We don't sell type here," answered the clerk blankly. "You might get it at the draper's shop over the wye."

"How should I get type in a draper's shop?"

"How should you get it anywhere else, may I awsk, think you, sir?"

"Well, in my country type is sold at a typefounder's, not at a dry goods store."

"Aow? Did y'wish toype, sir? I thought you wisht type such as they have in type measures and typeworms. You didn't wish type to bind on the edges of frocks, then, but toype to print a paper with? Step this way, thank you, sir."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Remembered It.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, now see if you can repeat it. What is my name?"

"Brown Blockhead, sir."—Exchange.

METHODS OF THE KAISER.

When William Wants Information He Just Simply Gets It.

It is a well known fact that, after becoming interested in some subject, Kaiser William summons the greatest authority on the subject and gets the latest information in the quickest way.

The emperor, so the story goes, summoned Professor Harnack, the renowned theologian, and asked him some technical questions—say, the latest news on the antiquity of the boos of John. The kaiser is known to be a specialist in refuting higher criticism, so perhaps the question was even more technical.

He and Harnack indulged in a spirited discussion and all too soon the clock brained private secretary interrupted to tell his majesty that he had an appointment for the next half hour with Prince So-and-so. The emperor's face clouded. "Where am I tomorrow night?" he asked. "Your majesty dines with Count So-and-so." Then turning to the theologian the emperor said, "Well, I shall see you again and finish the discussion."

The next day Professor Harnack received an invitation from the count who was entertaining the kaiser, and although he was not acquainted with his host he accepted. At dinner he found himself sitting next to the emperor, who immediately resumed the theological discussion where it had been left off the day before. And this time it was finished.—Chicago News.

SPECIAL RETURN ENGAGEMENT

Mr. Tom Terris and His Dickens Players at "The Grand" Next Saturday

"The Cricket on the Hearth," which Mr. Terriss and his company will present on the occasion of their return visit to the Grand Opera House on Saturday afternoon, originally formed itself in the brain of Charles Dickens as the title of a weekly periodical. His idea had been to call the paper, "The Cricket," a cheerful creature that chirrups on the Hearth, (Natural History,) and his aim was, that the "Cricket" should put everybody in a good temper and make a dash at people's fenders and armchairs as hasn't been made for many a long day" and that he would chirp, chirp away in every number. This, however, eventuate, but the origin o the little story was Dickens' notion, that it would be a delicate and beautiful fancy for a Christmas book, making the little cricket, a household God, silent in the wrong and sorrow of the tale, and loud again when all went well and everybody was happy. It was while Dickens' was in Paris having his portrait painted by a great literary admirer of his, Scheffer, that he was prevailed upon by urgent entreaties to read to the visitors at the Aterier, "His Cricket on the Hearth."

This is the little masterpiece that Mr. Terriss has so ably adapted for the stage in which he plays the part of Caleb Plummer, a character that has gone down in history. It would be a great pity to miss this production and that of "A Christmas Carol," which will be portrayed by Mr. Terriss in a manner that should reach the hearts of all.

ARMY CANTEEN SCANDAL.

British Sensation Even More Extensive Than Was Believed.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The bribery and corruption in connection with the British army canteen supplies has on investigation by the authorities proved even more extensive than was at first believed. When the case was resumed at the Bow street police court yesterday Lt.-Col. Whittaker, who recently retired from the command of the 2nd Batt. Yorkshire Light Infantry, at Malta, was added by R. D. Muir, the prosecuting attorney, to the list of eight army men and eight civilians who were called to answer summonses.

The eight army men concerned are in the quartermaster's department, in which the officers have risen from the ranks, but Lt.-Col. Whittaker, who held a higher rank than any of the others, was an active soldier. The charges against the men are the giving and receiving of bribes in order to influence contracts and to prevent complaints against high prices.

Cause of the Roman Empire.

The reason "why the Roman empire succeeded the republic" was that there was felt to be an urgent need of a strong central power. For many years the republic had been desolated, and the cry of the whole people was for peace—peace at almost any price. Now, peace could be secured only by the ascendancy of a single man, ruling with absolute and irresistible sway. So the people acquiesced in the change. They even hailed it with joy. A few patriots like Brutus and Cato gave up in despair, but most men were pleased with the revolution which made Caesar supreme—not that they were monarchistic at heart, but that after the devastating strife they wanted peace, even though it be at the sacrifice of some of their liberties.—St. Louis Times.

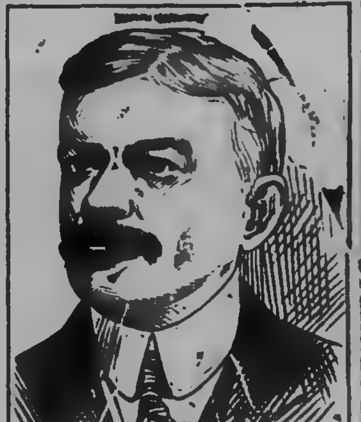
HEADS FRENCH CLUB

ARTHUR GENEST PRESIDENT OF LITERARY SOCIETY.

Ottawa Man Is a Noted Engineer, an Editor of Great Ability and Is Also Widely Known as a Literary Man Throughout Quebec—He Is a Member of Several Learned Societies.

The new president of the French-Canadian Literary Club of Ottawa, Arthur T. Genest, is one of the best known civil engineers of Canada and a prominent Dominion civil servant at the capital. He is of French descent, his family having come to Canada some 200 years ago.

Mr. Genest was born at Fermont, County St. Maurice, in 1859 and was educated at St. Joseph's College at Three Rivers and with private tutors. He had early training in railway location and construction, working first on the Q. O. & O. Railway and was engineer in charge of the location and construction of the Laurentian Railway, now a portion of the Canadian Northern. He was engineer also for the contractors in the construction of the Pontiac & Pacific Junction Railway and was first assistant engineer in the enlargement of the Lachine canal in 1896-97 and in 1897 prospected for a private company the Klondike district. He has been first engineer at the Rapid Plat and Farrans Point canal and divisional engineer on the Balsam-Simcoe lake division of the Trent canal and engineer in charge of the final estimates for the completion of the Cornwall canal enlargement in 1901-04. As engineer at headquarters, he has projected all the work in connection with the Georgian Bay ship canal, besides undertaking various survey work for the Provincial Government in northern Quebec. He is an associate member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers and a member of the National Geographical Society, of Washington, D.C., and also a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science of Philadelphia. He was elected president of the Canadian Institute in 1908 and he was the founder of The Clarion, the first daily newspaper published at Three Rivers, and has been a valued contributor in both the French and English press of Canada on literary and scientific subjects for a number of years.



ARTHUR T. GENEST.

The honorary patrons of the French-Canadian Literary Club are the Duke of Connaught, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Archbishop Gauthier. Among the honorary presidents are Hon. R. L. Borden, Premier of Canada; Chief Justice Fitzpatrick, Hon. L. P. Pelletier, P.M.G.; Hon. Louis Coderre, Hon. Senator Belcourt and E. B. Devlin, M.P.

Pioneering In Nigeria.

The difficulties attending the establishment of a terminus for the new trunk railway which Sir Frederick Lugard is to build in Nigeria have been ended by the lucky discovery of a hitherto uncharted creek by Lieut. Hughes, of the British navy. A remarkable series of cliffs, extending for three-quarters of a mile and averaging forty-five feet above high water, was found among the mangrove swamps. Opposite these cliffs soundings showed a depth of seventy feet of water. The Director of Railways, the Director of Marine, and Lieut. Hughes landed, and by means of a rope ascended the cliffs and cut through a section of almost impenetrable growth twelve feet in height. A few natives were met, who said that no white man had been there before.

How Natives Regard Drink.

Mr. H. M. Hyndman, in his "Record of An Adventurous Life," says some hard things about the drink which the Malabar natives, according to Lord Crewe, regarded as "the concrete expression of our national genius." "It is inconceivable to me," writes Mr. Hyndman, "that anybody can really like whisky. Taste, smell, effect on the health, are each and all enough to warn the judicious from having anything to do with such a direful liquor. But it has come south with its vengeance, and now all over Europe men, and even women, absorb the pestilent liver-congesting decoction called whisky and soda."

Little Nell's Cottage.

Tong, a pretty village of the Black Country green borderland, is immortalized by Dickens in the "Old Curiosity Shop." The church and village are much the same as when Dickens described them, and as when Little Nell and her grandfather tarried there. Little Nell's cottage is proudly pointed out, and the church, described by Elihu Burritt as the abbey of the Midlands because of the many monuments it contains, is made by Dickens the burial place of his heroine.

Those men who pay as they go usually find the going good.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION

H. B. Cowan Reviews the Work so Far Accomplished

MEETING TO-NIGHT

There was a large attendance at the meeting of the annual convention of the Peterborough County Temperance Alliance, held in the Y.M.C.A. this afternoon. The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. R. Pogue.

Mr. H. B. Cowan spoke on the subject: "A Review of the Past; the Next Step." He said they had an excellent organization in Peterborough. He drew attention to certain arguments that were brought forward by the liquor interests against local option. He showed that there were once 114 licenses in Peterborough and now we had fourteen as the result of the local option campaign. The bottle license has been restricted to two shops in the county. He reviewed generally the work of the year in connection with the campaign in Burleigh and said that the prospects were very bright. He wished to thank specially Mr. Gordon for legal assistance which he had given to the movement.

Dr. McTavish spoke of "Law Enforcement." He said the license holders know the conditions under which they received the licenses and they should be made to observe them. enforce the Local Option law. There is no more liquor sold illegally in Local Option territory than there is in licensed territory.

In the city of Montreal where they have a large number of licenses, they have more "blind pigs" than anywhere else.

Whatever is done in the way of law enforcement should be done by the local committee. Two members ought to go to the License Inspector or send the complaint in writing to the Inspector, give him 30 days to take action, and see that he acts upon it, and if not report him to the head of the department. Mr. Hanna had assured them that he would deal firmly with inspectors who were remiss. You could also prosecute an inspector who failed in his duty.

The convention will be continued at George Street Church lecture hall tonight.

PLEAD NOT GUILTY TO THEFT CHARGE

The two Bulgarians charged with theft from the C. P. R., appeared before Judge Huycke today and pleaded not guilty.

The trial was set for February 3rd, at 2 p.m.

Mr. Holly Shephard and Mrs. Shephard are in the city to take charge of the rehearsals for the Belmont Club Minstrels. They are registered at the White House.

Ears Are Fashionable.

Ears are coming into fashion again. The hair, which for some time past women have worn low with bandeaux, is now brushed back from the face, leaving ears clearly revealed. Earrings are consequently in great favor, the latest thing being large tortise shell rings or huge drops adorned with bells of gold.

The tiny hat is also modified. It now grips the head under the ears and has three decks, the top one consisting of a mass of supple velvet folded. The tendency is toward the tallest headgear.

Shine on the Serge Office Skirt.

For the business woman who each day presides at a desk and uses a smooth faced office chair, and who soon finds her serge skirt getting that inevitable "shiny look," which sponging and pressing never quite eradicate, there is nothing better than this simple advice:

Always keep on the chair seat a covering of thin, rough leather. This leather seat against the cane or wood will prevent all friction when turning or getting up and down, and the skirt will keep its original finish until worn out.

REVIEW WILL GIVE AWAY AUTOMOBILE PIANO AND OTHER VALUABLE PRIZES

Subscription Contest is Launched—Do You Want to Own an Automobile Without it Costing You a Penny—Nominate Your Candidates Now.

Who would not devote a little spare time to pleasant and congenial work, if they were to receive for their efforts an automobile?

Far surpassing any offer that has ever been made by a local paper The Review comes out with the astounding proposition that it will give away seven magnificent prizes, including a five-passenger touring car, one piano, two diamond rings, two gold watches and five per cent. to all candidates that fail to win a prize. This is a stupendous undertaking, but in keeping with the principle that The Review has laid down since the beginning, that nothing is too good for its readers.

How can it be done? That is the question that many will ponder over. It is easy to solve when you stop to think of the extremely gratifying reception accorded The Review in territory in which it circulates.

In order to become acquainted with every one in the territory and in order that they may have The Review read each day in every home, it has adopted this method of securing subscribers. The handsome and valuable awards offered we feel sure will interest the very best of people. The contest which The Review announces today by far surpasses anything ever attempted before.

The financial reliability and business integrity of the men responsible for this newspaper assures every entrant of just and equitable treatment and that every promise made will be carried out and every prize awarded just as represented.

Never before have the people of this section had the opportunity of winning such big awards for such easy and pleasant work. A handsome automobile such as this paper is offering is a big inducement, but in order that every one may have a chance the territory is divided into districts with separate prizes for each.

PREMIER TAKES NOURISHMENT

Sir James is Stronger as Rally Continues

TORONTO, Jan. 27.—Sir James Whitney may yet return to comparative health and strength should his progress be as continued and steady in the future as it has been during the past few days. His medical attendants are feeling very confident that they can prevent a recurrence of those strains which have jeopardized his life, which means that he may be convalescent within a few weeks. They do not yet promise that the Premier will ever be in a position to assume the cares of the leadership of the Government again, nor do they predict that he will return to any of the scenes of his former activities.

The bulletin issued last night reads:

"Sir James Whitney is doing as well as possible under the circumstances. He has been taking plenty of nourishment to-day.

JUDGE FINDS HIM GUILTY

Judgment is Deferred for One Week

"There was a guilty knowledge on the part of the prisoner therefore I must find him guilty of the charge supplying drugs for the purpose of miscarriage to this girl." Such was the verdict of Judge Huycke at the conclusion of the case of John McClay, charged with supplying drugs to Margaret Elmdale, for the purpose of procuring miscarriage. The case was heard yesterday by His Honor in the County Court. Judgment was deferred for one week.

Messrs. O'Connell and McElderry defended the prisoner, while the prosecution was conducted by Mr. Joseph Wearing M.A.

In summing up the case Judge Huycke explained why he had not held the case in camera owing to the great lesson it would teach those who had come, whether it be merely out of idle curiosity or business, pertaining to the case. His Honor also referred to the lack of manhood shown by the prisoner. Therefore he considered it a great lesson for the large gathering in the court room. The prisoner was considerably older than the girl, who was but a mere child. He was not acquitting her of the blame, but there was no excuse for him. The charge was a very serious one and therefore various elements in the case had to be proved. "I need not trouble my mind with Mr. O'Connell's able addess, remarked His Honor, the prisoner's own statement is conclusive against him. The one element which Mr. O'Connell points out as the drugs being not given with an unlawful intent. I wish I could find it so. The prisoner thought and expressed himself that the girl was in trouble when he gave her the pills. Then, why did he give the pills to help her out? He unlawfully supplied her with pills although they may not be noxious, but the evidence bears to the fact that they are drugs. When the prisoner gave her the drugs he must have had a guilty knowledge.

Mr. O'Connenl asked that judgment be deferred as he was going to appeal the case.

DOCTORS GIVE EVIDENCE

The afternoon session of the case commenced with the testimony of the medical men who gave evidence as to the character of the drugs.

Dr. Young, who said he had about nineteen years' experiencne in this city, said he could not tell the composition of the pills. The pills were very seldom used by medical men. They would not however, procure miscarriage.

Dr. Scott also gave similar evidence.

Dr. King, in his evidence, said he had been practising here a considerable length of time. The girl had consulted him on three occasions. He said, according to the form and description, the pills there were drugs. McClay had called into his office for advice. He informed McClay that the girl could be looked after at a certain place in the city, and that the child could be adopted by the St. Vincent's Orphanage of Toronto, for the sum of $50.

There was no improper suggestion made to him by the prisoner.

Judge Huycke remarked that it was too bad the pills had not been analyzed. Mr. O'Connell announced that Mr. Wearing had closed his case and therefore no more evidence could be taken.

After a minute's hesitation the objection was sustained and the witnesses for the defence were called.

The boarding mistress of the house where Miss Dale had stopped, was the first witness. She commenced to tell of other men calling at the house, but objection made to this evidence was sustained.

John McClay, the prisoner, said that he had been favorably impressed with the girl when he had met her. He admitted that he was to blame. He also admitted promising to marry the girl if anything happened. He had no intention of giving her the pills for the purpose of abortion, when he gave her the pills.

He claimed that the girl herself made the suggestion of going to see the doctor.

"Why did you not marry her, then," enquired his counsel, Mr. O'Connell. "I learned that she was not a good girl," answered McClay.

Asked by the Judge to name his objections, he, after considerable hesitation, remarked that she had been keeping company with a fellow before, that he did not like.

To Mr. Wearing he admitted the pills in question were often used for unlawful purposes.

CANADA ONLY ENJOYING INTER-GLACIAL PERIOD

Ice Age May Return Says Mr. J. W. Firth—Mr. Milligan Says the World Will be Burnt up—But Not Yet — Humanity Only Just Emerging From Savagery—Lectures and Entertainment Last Evening

"Gravitation and the Ice Age"

These were the ponderous subjects considered by the Astronomical Society, Peterboro Centre, last evening, at the Collegiate Assembly Hall.

The gravitating power of these subjects was not sufficient to attract more than a hundred people, as there were stronger attractions at other centres. But nevertheless considering the gravity and the low temperature of the topics, the attendance was remarkable and if Mr. T. C. Elliot, the president, expected to fill the Assembly Hall for an astronomical feast, he must be of a very sanguine temperament.

What Is Gravitation?

Mr. J. L. Milligan dealt with the subject of "Gravitation" in a general way, beginning with the story of Newton watching the apple falling to the ground. Many an apple had fallen to the earth before, but never before had anyone seen anything peculiar in the phenomenon. He said that all progress was the work of "the wonderer," without wonder we were intellectually and spiritually dead. Newton was a man who did not accept the obvious, to him nothing was merely obvious. The speaker said that this was not the only occasion upon which the apple was associated with a "fall." But the fall of man was not in obedience to the law of gravitation but through disobedience to the law of God.

Mr. Milligan spoke at length of the two forces that existed and acted upon all the material universe, viz: "centrepetal and centrifugal force, and endeavored to show that these two were really one.

Speaking of the Nebulae, he said that there was little doubt that this would eventually be burnt up, for it came out of the fire and will go back into it, but that was not yet. There were no signs of disintegration in nature. The world was in its infancy, the human race had scarcely emerged from savagery.

We could not see gravitation, but we knew it existed by its effects. We could not see God, but we felt the pull of "the Central Sun of the Great Spiritual Solar System." He said that all ministers should be made to pass a stiff examination in Astronomy.

Gravitation transforms gases into rock and mineral, from which we get our jewelry and our iron-clads. The silverware, crockery, and even the flowers on our breakfast table were all manufactured by this great central force. Gravitation in the moral world was WILL, or FATE; in the intellectual, REASON or INSTINCT; in the realm of emotion, LOVE or affinity. It might be that gravitation was summed up in that word "Love."

Mr. J. W. Firth of the Collegiate staff, gave a very interesting demonstration by the aid of a map of North America, of "the ice age in Canada." The lecture was difficult to report, as it was illustrated by reference to the map. The lecturer said that the first age in Canada was the granite age, but the ice age was the most recent. He described how the whole of the northern part of the American continent was at one time a vast field of ice, three million square miles in extent, and in some places two miles thick. At one time the Rockies were completely covered with ice. Iceland as it is today, represents what Canada was many thousands of years ago.

He indicated on the map how the breaking up of this ice age had formed great glacial rivers which carried enormous boulders before them and ground their way down the valleys in great rivers of ice and gouged out the soft portions of the earth which are at present our great lakes.

Speaking of the changes in climate, Mr. Firth gave the rather startling information that Canada had experienced four of these glacial periods, and that we were at present only enjoying one of those interglacial periods. The ice had advanced and retreated four times—the inference of course, is that it may advance again.

Most of us are inclined to think that it has advanced more than four times, that it comes down every year and we are at present in a mild sort of glacial period. The lecture was very scientific, but Mr. Firth made it interesting and instructive.

It will be noticed from the press of yesterday that Mr. Firth is soon to remove to London, Ont., where he is to take up an important position as science master.

The entertainment program with which the addresses were interspersed, was very acceptably rendered; the artists being at their best. Mr. John gave two recitations, "The Handy Man" and "The Kissing Cup Race." Miss Logan gave two violin solos, and an encore. Mrs. Davidson was also recalled and gave three solos.

The meeting was the first of its kind, and was an experiment and an effort to popularise the study of Astronomy, and on the whole, it was encouraging.

CALEDONIAN CLUB.

Burns' night was celebrated by the Caledonian Club, last night, in Coleman's Savoy. About sixty members were present.

THIRTY-EIGHT CHILDREN ADMITTED TO THE SHELTER DURING THE PAST YEAR

Thirty-two Others Dealt With Direct at Secretary's Office — Two Deformed Children Have Been Cured— Mr. R. W. Travers is Re-elected President— Mr. Peter Campbell Resigns as Treasurer After Fifteen Years

The annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society was held yesterday afternoon in the Bank of Montreal Chambers. The president, Mr. R. W. Travers, occupied the chair, and opened the meeting with a short address remarking on the advancement made by the society during the past year and also thanking everyone who in any way assisted.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill, secretary, reported:

At the close of the year 1912, three children were in the Shelter, and during the year the books show that in addition to these, thirty-eight children were registered in the Shelter, making a total of forty-one. Twenty-three came from the city, thirteen from the County and two from outside places. Twenty-one were girls and twenty boys.

In addition to the children registered in the Shelter, thirty-two were dealt with direct in the secretary's office without being placed in the Shelter.

The Shelter has as usual been kept up to a high standard of efficiency under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Henry, to whom too much praise cannot be given for their careful attention and care given to the children.

To the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Society is also due much praise for their active work in preparing clothing for the children.

A number of families deserted by the husbands were provided for and medical and hospital attention was given to deserving cases. In the cases of two children who had been criples, they are now free from physical deformation.

The report also referred to the question of the defective and feeble-minded children, and suggested action.

The opinion was expressed that if the Curfew law was amended and made of more practical value, its provisions could be enforced by the police, with results.

At the close of his address Mr. Goodwill read several minor reports on the condition of various children and just what progress they had made. They were all very encouraging and showed that the children who had been a trifle wayward around the Shelter had become deligent under the tutorage of their foster parents.

The report of the treasurer, Mr. P. Campbell, showed a balance of $1,263.40.

PRAISE FOR POLICE.

Mr. George Cochrane, the agent of the Society, was unable to give a full account of his work as he lost his diary a short time ago, but he gave a brief outline of his work and in conculsion highly praised the local police department for the assistance they rendered him.

Mrs. J. Scott, secretary of the Ladies' Auxiliary, reported that 189 articles of wearing apparel had been made for the children.

Superintendent's Report.

Absence of serious illness at the Shelter was reported by Superintendent Henry. All children of school age were sent to school and no complaints were received from teachers.

Thirty-eight children were admitted during the year.

He had visited the wards in the city and county and had found them well placed.

A new fence was needed at the front of the grounds.

Dr. Amy's, the physician of the Society, then gave a brief account of his work and also introduced the subject of what should be done with the feeble-minded children. He wished to see something done and thought the Provincial Government should do it. As Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., was present. Dr. Amys requested that he should say a few words on that subject.

When asked by the president if

RECOMMENDATIONS OF M.H.O. MADE TO BOARD OF HEALTH

Assistant for Sanitary Inspector —Municipal Abbatoir— Milk Delivered Only in Bottles — Small-pox Hospital—Extend Area in Which Garbage is Collected

That an assistant be secured for the Sanitary Inspector.

That the plumbing inspector be placed under the control and direction of the health department.

That the area in which garbage is collected by extended.

That the scavangers or night-soil men be licensed and work under the control of the Sanitary Inspector.

That the following licenses be issued by the Health Department:

Milk Vendors.
Boarding and rooming houses.
Scavengers.
Dog.

That the Health Department disinfect at the expense of the department all premises where infection has occurred or where it is thought necessary.

That the Board of Health recommend to the city council that they consider at an early date the necessity of having a municipal abbatoir.

That the Health Department publish a short bulletin in the daily papers once a month.

That milk be delivered to private houses only in bottles.

That a smallpox hospital be built.

Dr. Amys was elected chairman, of the Board of Health at their inaugural meeting this morning when the reports of the Sanitary Inspector and Medical Health Officer were presented. The report of the Sanitary Inspector gave evidence of great strides in sanitation during the past year. Two of the new recommendations of the M. H. O. were commented upon by Mayor Buller who said be would certainly not agree on the appointment of an assistant sanitary inspector and the milk be delivered to private houses in bottles.

However, after considerable discussion it was decided that the Board of Health and Property Committee meet to take up the matter.

The matter of an increase in salary for the Sanitary Inspector was introduced by Dr. McPherson, who pointed out the great deal of work done by the department. He asked that Mr. Spence be afforded an increase of $200. The matter of combining the positions of plumbing inspector and sanitary inspector was then brought up.

This will also be dealt with at the joint meeting of the two boards sometime this week.

In speaking of the appointment of an assistant to the Sanitary Inspector, the M. H. O. described the various and disagreeable duties of the Inspector. He expressed himself that the licensing of milk vendors, scavengers, dog licenses, boarding houses, and others be under the supervision of the Sanitary Inspector as this was in accordance with the work of the Board of Health.

It was a dire necessity that an assistant be appointed for even if the inspector worked twenty-four hours a day, it was impossible to get through the work.

He further requested that Mr. Spence have certain office hours and stay in the office during the morning. The various arrangements regarding the garbage system took up considerable time fo the inspector. The same difficulty was experienced with the systematic inspector and unless this was done one could not have an accurate inspection.

"Well, this department has increased $2,000 in two years" was the remark of the Mayor.

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, JAN. 27, 1914.

A DELINEATOR OF DICKENS

ALL DICKENS' LOVERS will welcome the return of Mr. Tom Terriss, the celebrated English actor, to Peterborough on Saturday next. Those who were fortunate enough to see Mr. Terriss on his last visit a few weeks ago will be glad of another opportunity of studying the wonderful creations of Dickens as they are presented in flesh and blood by this clever company. Mr. Terriss has gained world-wide fame as an actor and especially as a delineator of the characters of Dickens' novels. His "Scrooge" is a masterpiece of life-like representation and recalls the wonderful acting of that prince of actors, the late Sir Henry Irving, in "The Bells."

Mr. Terriss and his company have come to Canada as considerable expense and as his plays and his acting are of the highest moral order he ought to receive the patronage and encouragement of every member of the community. There is nothing about any of Mr. Terriss' productions which would exclude them from being produced in connection with any of our church societies, they are purely literary and moral in tone and execution, and keep close to the spirit of that greatest of all English novelists, Charles Dickens. Let the people of Peterborough show their appreciation of first-class and clean acting by supporting this company on Saturday next. There is one sure way of uplifting and purifying the stage and that is by encouraging good clean plays and the best actors. There is one sure way of degrading the theatre and that is by neglecting these higher artists and thus encouraging the lesser and questionable stage productions which pander to the lower tastes of the habitual theatre-goer. The Hamilton Spectator recently remarked that Mr. Terriss was the best actor that had appeared in that city for many a day. Those who saw Mr. Terriss when he was here a few weeks ago said the same in respect to Peterborough.

THE PLEASURES OF HOCKEY.

THEY APPEAR to have had a "good time" at Collingwood in connection with the Orillia-Collingwood intermediate O.H.A. game the other evening. The referee's report makes very interesting reading, he says:

"At the conclusion of the first ten minutes of the extra time several dozen spectators rushed on the ice and attacked the visiting players and myself in an unjustifiable manner, and it was with great difficulty that we reached a place of shelter in the dressing room occupied by the Orillia team. The police, with drawn revolvers and batons, experienced a hard task in preventing the crowd from mobbing us when they attempted to storm the dressing room.

"At the conclusion of the game the police were again pressed into service to protect us in the dressing room. Under police protection myself and the Orillia players were escorted to a bus outside the rink entrance, where a crowd of approximately two hundred were congregated. They hurled missiles including bottles through the windows of the 'bus, and the fact that no one was seriously injured is more of a miracle.

"During the game the Colingwood players, barring Cook and McKinnon, resorted to all kinds of rough-house tactics. Burns and Lawrence used the butt-ends of their sticks on their opponents, for which they were penalized. Fryer was also a disturbing factor and frequently decorated the boards.

"While the play was stopped and while skating across the rink I was hit in the arm from behind with the puck, which I was informed by many reputable persons was deliberately shot at me by Fryer, while my back was turned. On another occasion while the play was stopped, and behind my back (according to many eye-witnesses) Fryer deliberately struck Carter on the leg with his stick, and he was laid out for some time."

That is a slight improvement upon a Tipperary wedding or Muldoon's picnic.

TEMPERANCE AND PARTY POLITICS.

THE PETERBOROUGH COUNTY Temperance Alliance held its annual convention yesterday, and the reports and speeches, both at the afternoon and evening sessions, show that the temperance movement in the County is really moving. There are movements that do not move at all, some move at a tremendous rate and perhaps do a good deal more in the way of destruction rather than construction. Every public movement should be constructive, it is not enough to abolish everything that is evil, but the object should be to replace the evil by the good. It is to be feared that in many places where Local Option has been passed that the tree of intemperance has been cut down and a large ugly stamp has been left in the ground, the roots of which have much life in them. "There is hope of a tree if it be cut down that it will sprout again," this is true in regard to the "abolition" of all these radical evils.

There was much discussion at the afternoon session on the question of "the best policy" for the local temperance Alliance to adopt. There was a strong feeling at the meeting that the temperance question should be kept out of party politics. Rev. James Rollins warned them of the danger of being tied up to any one party or following a party cry, like a donkey follows a carrot that is dangled in front of him. We agree with Mr. Rollins that temperance is such a broad issue that the operations of temperance people should not be confined to one party, or, for that matter, to one policy. They should be ready to work hand in hand with the present powers. Not to be for ever grasping after some visionary thing in the future which may or may not come to pass, and which is too often merely a scheme to catch votes.

It all depends upon the practicability of the policy, not the "best" policy. The best policy is after all the policy that can be brought into practice. The Dominion Alliance should give up its alliance with party politics and get down to practical politics. There are many good temperance men who are estranged from the temperance movement simply because they are Conservatives and can see that the Liberal Party is only using the Dominion Alliance as a pawn in the game of getting into office.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

SIR JAMES WHITNEY has had a long and critical fight with the "last enemy" and he seems to be coming out on top. The latest reports are very bright and hopeful, this may settle the matter between Mr. Hanna and Mr. Beck. Not another word on that subject, please.

MR. J. W. FIRTH said, at the Astronomical meeting last night, that it is possible that the North Pole may have been located in Canada at one time. Some of us think it comes back home once in a while when we get those cold snaps.

THE CHINESE are becoming interested in Canada flour, which they prefer to any other kind. Its popularity is attributed to its high percentage of gluten—what is gluten? It may be that they make starch out of it for the collars—but of course there are no Chinese laundries in China, we forgot that for the moment.

IT IS NOT GENERALLY known that ""eugenics" has been attempted in some of the States of America. The results of the application of this foolish doctrine have been what anyone might expect. To try to regulate the marriage market by arbitrary laws and regulations is about as mad a proposition as ever was made. Make the best of the present generation, the next will take care of itself.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

A New Member for the Commission.

Ottawa Journal.

A man in New York state has been discovered keeping his family of three on a salary of $200 a year. By the way, is there a vacant place on that high cost of living commission?

A New Hybrid.

Montreal Herald.

A French experimenter claims to have crossed the potato and mushroom with gratifying results, but the real triumph awaits the man who can produce an onion with a strong flavor of beefsteak.

Depression and Governments.

The News.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and some of his lieutenants, together with certain of their newspaper supporters, have virtually charged the government with responsibility for the present slowing down in commercial and industrial enterprise. At the least they have hinted that things would have been otherwise if the late Liberal Administration had remained in power. In taking this stand these party critics neglect the fact that the check to business is world-wide, and that conditions are worse in the United States than in this country.

Nor does the public forget that under the Laurier Government in 1907-8 Canada passed through a severer depression than that which we are experiencing to-day. One has only to turn up the newspaper files to find the records of unemployment which brought much suffering in this and other communities six years ago. Several of the Toronto papers raised large relief funds, and the charitable organizations faced the heaviest task in their history in furnishing the needy with food, fuel, clothing and other necessities.

The Familiar Cry.

Intelligencer.

That the wish is father to the thought is apparent in the cry of "blue ruin" which the Liberal press has lately adopted in a discreditable attempt to embarrass the present government. It is nothing but a revival of the old Liberal tactics with which the Canadian people are quite familiar. According to the Grit press the moment the Conservative party came into power the country began to go to the dogs, etc. All this has a very familiar ring. The same hue and cry was indulged in all that time that Sir John A. Macdonald was in power. Yet today the Liberals admit his administration did marvellous things for Canada and that the country prospered as never before.

It was "blue ruin" then, and it is "blue ruin" today. The same old game.

But what are the facts as regards the present?

The truth is that Canada is more prosperous now than in any period of her history. Not only that but the growth of the prosperity is swifter than ever before.

Early Friendship.

The half seen memories of childish days,
When pains and pleasures lightly came and went;
The sympathies of boyhood rashly spent
In fearful wand'rings through forbidden ways:
The vague, but manly wish to tread the maze
Of life to noble ends,—whereon intent,
Asking to know for what man here is sent,
The bravest heart must often pause, and gaze,—
The firm resolve to seek the chosen end
Of manhood's judgment, cautious and mature,—
Each of these viewless bonds binds friend to friend
With strength no selfish purpose can secure;
My happy lot is this, that all attend
That friendship which first came, and which shall last endure.

—Aubrey De Vere.

COMIC SONGS

By Walt Mason

Could anything, my friends, be sadder, than is the modern comic song? Of sense or taste it has no shadder, in sound and fury it is strong. Its humor is a thing distorted, its chorus treats of "spoons" and "moons;" it's time the authors were escorted to some stone hatch designed for loons. At eve I wind my phono-grammar, and then a "comis record" start; the music gives me katzenjammer, the words just rend and break my heart. It always has the same old burden: "Come out and spoon beneath the moon;" the sickest rot that e'er was heard on this globe since Adam hummed a tune. Oh, Ada Jones and Billy Murray, and all who sing for graphophones, suppress this nuisance, in a hurry, and sing good songs in dulcet tones! So many songs with truth are gleaming, so many touch the heart and please, there's simply no excuse for screaming such idiotic things as these. Kill off the "spooning" and the "mooning," of which the loud voiced warbler tells; one song you heard your mothers crooning was worth ten million modern yells.

Should Go To Holland.

The Headmaster of Harrow, with his drastic anti-tobacco regulations, is evidently badly wanted in Holland. A census of smokers taken the other day among the boys attending nine elementary schools in a suburb of Amsterdam reveals that among the six-year-olds they number 10 per cent.; among those of 7, 16 per cent.; and 32 per cent. among those of 8; while in the sixth schooling year, at which the average age is 12, the percentage has risen to 53. As it falls rapidly after the limit of compulsory attendance, the early use of tobacco would not appear to be an incentive to learning. It is the cigar, not the cigarette, which these Dutch mannikins affect.—London Daily Chronicle.

A Troublesome Tower.

She was a good servant, was Jennie, and Mrs. Wanderfarr never wished for better. But in the matter of pictures Jennie was weak. There was one in particular, which showed the leaning tower of Pisa. Every day Mrs. W. hung it straight, and every morning Jennie put it crooked.

So Mrs. W. watched.

"Now, look here, Jennie," she said, "you've hung that picture of the tower crooked again! Just look at it!"

"That's just what I say, mum," returned the domestic dolefully; "look at it. The only way you can't get that silly tower to hang straight is to hang the picture crooked."

Outgrown It.

Sunday school had just opened, and the new teacher was taking the boys' names and ages. After questioning half the class two boys gave the same name and age and explained that they were brothers. The teacher asked if they were twins, confidently expecting an affirmative answer, but was much surprised when one of the boys replied that they were not. Slightly bewildered, the teacher gazed at them, trying to figure in his mind how that could be, considering the remarkable resemblance, when the other boy solved the problem by explaining:

"We used to be twins when we were small!"

He Was a Chump.

"I will confess to you," she said, "that I am older than I look. I will be thirty-one my next birthday."

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

TUESDAY, JANUARY TWENTY-SEVENTH

G. M. Bosworth, vice-president of the C.P.R., familiarly known as "Boss" Bosworth, was born fifty-six years ago to-day at Ogdensburg, N.Y. He is the supreme head under the president of the traffic department of the big system and as such has to look after the transportation of something like sixteen million passengers and thirty million tons of freight every year. Yet he bears his heavy load without complaint and is always ready to assume added duties. Everything that troubles anyone also is usually shouldered off on "Boss" Bosworth, whose capacity for work seems to be limitless. Steamships, hotels and telegraphs, one after the other, were shifted to his department and are now operated under his supervision. He is a most unassuming man and does each day's work quietly and effectively.

SENSITIVE PLANTS.

Sunshine at Night Doesn't Fool the Flowers in the Arctic.

The sensitiveness of plants is a never failing interest to all lovers of the woods and fields. Like a human being sensing a fall in the barometer and the coming of a rainstorm, so the clover in the meadow feels and shuts its leaves. A close observer says that a field that was white with blossoms has suddenly become quite changed by the approach of a heavy cloud or the falling of a light shower.

The common chickweed opens its blossom only when the sun is shining and counts on only the bright hours. When it closes its blossoms rain invariably follows. The sea purslane has the same habit. It never opens in cloudy weather and closes when the sun is low, about to sink. The scarlet pimpernel never exposes its flowers to a shower.

One of the naturalists in an arctic expedition noticed that, although the summer sun shone through the nights, the plants made no mistake, but when the sun got round to the west they closed up as if the sun had really set.

The common "four o'clock" almost always closes its flowers at that hour, and so many plants have that instinct that Linnaeus made a floral clock of flowering plants, each of which had its time for closing. The wood sorrel not only drops its leaves and shuts its purple veined flowers when it rains, but does the same if the ground near by is struck with a stick. The family of the oxalis has the same habit.—New York Sun.

Plays Mother to Duck.

Mr. Woodrow, head keeper at Nuneham Park, the residence of the Rt. Hon. Lewis Harcourt, has a fox terrier which is mothering a duck. From the day it was hatched the duck has been under the constant care of the dog, and they are always together. The duck will not associate with or take any notice of the other ducks near the cottage, but it is always with the terrier. When the dog barks at strangers the duck runs and quacks. It is now about five months old.

Money Teaching Tango.

Money is flowing into the pockets of teachers and experts as the result of the Tango craze. Indeed, so great is the demand for professional Tango dancers that there is a difficulty in supplying them, and it is stated that chorus girls, who used to feel rich on $10 a week, have now learnt the Tango, and grumble if they are offered less than $75 a week. Some girls are actually earning as much as $150 a week.

Shackleton Stories.

Some amusing stories of his lecturing experiences are told by Sir Ernest Shackleton, the Antarctic explorer.

One day when in Scotland golfing, after his first expedition, he received a letter from Harrow School asking him to give a lecture. He did not want to go, so he wrote fixing a prohibitive price as he thought—a fee of $150, exclusive of expenses. To his amazement the offer was accepted, and he gave the lecture. On the strength of that he wrote to the authorities at Eton and offered his services at an equal rate. The reply came back, "Dear Sir,—This is five times as much as we pay to really first class lecturers."

His audience at Leith was once so small that he went to the cabman he had left outside and said, "I will pay for some one to hold the horse, and you can come in and hear the lecture." "Oh, no, thank you," said the cabman; "I am all right where I am." Afterward, with his wife, he was counting his losses and said, "Twenty-five people at 1s. a head — that makes a total receipts £1 5s." "But," said his wife, "you must deduct 2s. from that. I sent the cook and one of the maids."

Wanted Ugliness in Olden Days.

Some bygone housewives appear to have regarded ugliness as a quality to be desired in their servants. When Eliza Coke, daughter of Coke of Norfolk, was about to marry, she wrote to her prospective mother-in-law: "Pray have the goodness to decide as you think best about the pretty housemaid. I wish she were less pretty and less fond of dress; but if her conduct and principles are good neither are really objectionable faults. I think our establishment will be a pattern of morality, particularly if Mr. Stanhope engages the squinting butler and the terrible housemaid he mentioned to me." — London Daily Chronicle.

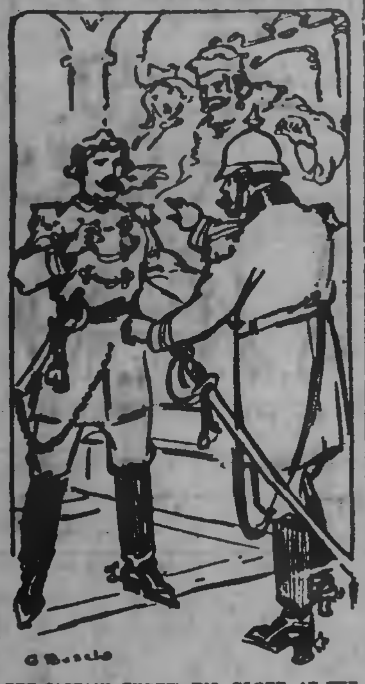
A Great Feud—It Was Between Workers in Wax

By F. A. MITCHEL

More than half a century ago there was a craze for modeling in wax.

Among these waxworkers one became so much more skillful than the others that she at last found herself an object of jealousy to the other workers and their friends. This lady was the young Countess Hildegarde, a person of great modesty, who was not pleased in finding herself in such a position. When it was reported to her that she was an object of envy, that she was exciting antagonism among those at court, she was quite at a loss what to do in the matter.

Her nearest rival was the daughter of Prince Lichtenstein, who ruled over a territory some ten miles square. This princess, Sofia, being heiress to a large fortune, was a person of influence and much sought after by the marriageable young aristocrats attached to the court.



THE CAPTAIN THREW HIS GLOVE AT THE PRINCE.

The king heard of the quarrels of the adherents of the two ladies and, naturally taking the part of a princess of the blood, treated Hildegarde with marked coolness. The poor girl was at her wits' end. To be brought into a contest with one so far above her in rank was sure to result disastrously to the weaker vessel. She was not permitted to leave the field, and if she remained in it she would surely come to grief.

To make matters worse, a young officer of the garde du corps, Captain von Helmsmuller, must needs fall in love with the countess and advocated her claims to superiority in waxworking so loudly that he called forth the antagonism of Prince Herbert, the king's youngest son, who was devoted to the Princess Sofia. What had before been a gale now became a hurricane. The king, who deprecated quarrels among his courtiers, strove to quiet the contending partisans, but failed. It seemed to Hildegarde that she must retire from court.

But when she mentioned this plan to her partisans they one and all intimated that they would consider such action an acknowledgment of defeat, a desertion of her supporters. The countess, unwilling to leave them in the lurch, after long deliberation finally hit upon an expedient which would show the folly of the war that was being waged and, she hoped, would end it.

She induced one of her friends to offer a suggestion that the two rivals each make a wax peach; that the models be exhibited for a time, at the end of which a vote be taken as to which was the better work, the artist receiving the higher vote to be considered in possession of the field, the one receiving the lower vote to refrain from further waxwork.

The suggestion, being talked about, reached the ears of the king, who, seeing in it a possible way to end the war, seized upon it eagerly, issued a command embodying it and adding to it an important feature. He decreed that the artist whose work was voted to excel the other was to be appointed waxworker to his majesty for life.

There was now nothing for it but that the contestants should give their whole attention to the work in hand. The princess took two weeks to do hers, while Hildegarde took but one. When the models were ready for exhibition each contestant put her peach in a glass receptacle provided for it and sent it by her own maid to be placed on a stand in the room of the palace provided for the exhibition. A silken cord stretched across the room, ten feet from the works to be voted on, kept those inspecting from going too near them.

Alas for hopes of peace! The very first day of the exhibition Prince Herbert and Captain von Helmsmuller met in the room where the peaches had been deposited and got into a quarrel over which peach was the better production.

"No one ever saw a peach," said the prince, referring to the countess' work, "of a hue like that—a yellowish brown. And look at the specks on it—they are unnatural."

"I grant, your royal highness," retorted the captain, "that the other peach is a representation of better fruit, but as to naturalness, why, any one can see easily that it is made of wax."

"Do you mean to tell me," retorted the prince, "that shrunken thing is a more perfect work of art than the luscious fruit beside it? You are a fool!"

"Were I of the same rank as your royal highness," the captain retorted angrily, "I would teach you that you cannot call an officer of the garde du corps a fool."

"I waive my rank."

"Very well; I will send one of my comrades to your royal highness immediately."

There were but two other persons in the room at the time, and the prince gave them the choice between keeping the matter secret and incurring his royal displeasure. Both persons promised not to tell, but the affair leaked out and was soon the talk of the court. The prince and the captain were regarded respectively as the champion of the princess and the countess.

Never before was such a hubbub raised in a court of Germany. The king was furious. He at once issued an order confining both his son and the captain in a fortress till he could be assured that they would not fight. He visited the room where the peaches were on exhibition and, seeing that the one that had been made by the princess was a far more beautiful fruit than that made by the countess, felt sure it would be pronounced so by an overwhelming vote and the controversy would be ended permanently. So he gave orders that the next day at noon the election should take place and that Prince Herbert and Captain von Helmsmuller should be present.

From 9 till 12 the next morning the room where the peaches were deposited was thronged with members of the court. The princess stood near her work and the countess near hers. Just beyond the cord before the princess stood Prince Herbert, and in the same relative position on the other side stood Captain von Helmsmuller, each champion glaring at the other. At 12 o'clock the voting commenced. There was not the slightest doubt as to which would win, for the admiration for the Princess Sofia's work was unbounded, while Hildegarde's was pronounced a miserable, shriveled little thing of no merit whatever.

At 12 o'clock the king ordered the two champions to act as tellers, and, taking their hats in their hands, they collected the votes. The chamberlain counted them and when he had finished announced the result:

"Her royal highness' work has received eighty-seven votes and the Countess Hildegarde's one."

The prince turned and greeted the captain with an insulting laugh. The captain threw his glove at the prince and struck him squarely in the face. The king, seeing his son thus attacked, indignant at such an affront to one of royal blood, gave his royal sanction to the meeting and was about to leave the room when the Countess Hildegarde advanced and, kneeling before him, said:

"It has been decided, your majesty, that I retire from the field of waxmaking. It only remains to assure these hotheaded champions that they have no cause for quarrel. Will your majesty deign to inspect the fruit that I have produced?"

Receiving the royal assent, she rose and, going to her work, raised the glass cover and took out the peach. Then, advancing to the king, she broke it in two halves, juice dropping on the floor, and, putting one half in her mouth, she gave the other to his majesty.

"Why, it's not wax at all!" he cried. "It's a real peach."

Then, putting the fruit in his mouth, he smacked his lips. "It's good, too; better than it looks," he exclaimed.

For a few moments the assembly stood gazing at one another shamefacedly. Then those nearest the door began to slip out, followed by the others, till none were left but the king, the prince, the princess and the countess.

"My son," said the king, "give the captain your hand."

The prince hesitatingly did as he was bidden, and the captain, delighted that his beloved Hildegarde had shown a higher skill than in working wax, grasped the prince's hand warmly. Then the king said to Hildegarde:

"I am convinced that by your wisdom and adroitness you have ended a feud which if it had continued would have spread over my whole kingdom. What can I do for you to show my appreciation of the service you have rendered?"

"A boon, your majesty!" cried Von Helmsmuller. "Let me receive the reward."

He looked at the countess, who, blushing and laughing at the same time, by a nod assented to his request.

"I ask your majesty," said the captain, "that I be rewarded with the lady's hand."

Hildegarde bowed her head and said nothing.

"Be it so," said the king.

The Princess Sofia swept haughtily out of the room. Within a few days the court circular announced her betrothal with Prince Herbert.

And that was the last of the feud of the workers in wax.

Whips at Weddings.

At Swedish weddings among the middle and lower classes the bridegroom carries a whip. This is an emblem of his authority in the domestic circle.

If people censure you unjustly try to feel as charitable toward them as you would if they praised you too highly.

THE SERVANT'S ROOM.

Maid's Quarters Should Be Comfortable and Cheerful.

Before the new maid arrives see that her room is comfortable and cheerful. Bear in mind that you have a whole house to live in, but her room is the only place to which she can retire when she is exhausted from her day's work. See that the furnishings are bright and pretty and, above all, see that the mattress is soft and easy. The maid needs a soft mattress more than any member of the family, for her labor is harder and she cannot work well if her rest has been broken and disturbed.

Any conveniences for the work which you can afford buy for the girl. Rest assured it will be appreciated and the money will be well spent, for she will give cheerful and willing service if she knows that her comfort is just as important to her mistress as the comfort of the members of the family.

Some women are very neglectful of their servants' comfort. They keep up a constant stream of new maids and wonder why none of them remains, when no care is taken of the servants' quarters whatever. One woman told a friend an incident that happened in her own home—told it as a joke on herself. She has a palatial country home in a fashionable resort and she keeps a dozen servants. She said that in July the waitress told her that her room would have to be done over. She could not sleep in it any longer. The employer said, "Nonsense, Mary; you have slept in it since June, and it would inconvenience me greatly to have it done over now." So the maid let it go a few days and then came again with the same complaint and said she would have to leave if the room were not done over. The mistress became angry and told the maid to leave then. She sent to town immediately for another girl.

No Retail For Him.

Fry's THE Cocoa
FRYS

FRY'S Cocoa—"Good For Building With"—

DELICIOUS in flavor, and tempting for little folks, FRY'S Cocoa undoubtedly is. But its goodness more than matches its taste—for FRY'S is all nourishment. For instance—nearly one-fifth its bulk is albumen, and albumen is only another form of flesh. Fat, it has, in large proportion—for the making of energy. Little bodies thrive—cheeks bloom with health—when FRY'S is used regularly. Made from a selection of the world's choicest growths of cocoa beans—and by methods matchless after 200 years' experience—FRY'S has no peer amongst cocoas.

UNION LIFE OFFICIALS TO FACE CONSPIRACY CHARGES

Harry Symons, K.C., is Arrested and Admitted to Bail in $15,000, But H. Pollman Evans Has Left the Country and Dr. Millichamp is Ill in Sanitorium.

TORONTO, Jan. 27.—Following a prolonged investigation into the affairs of the defunct Union Life Assurance Co., instituted some time ago by Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, at the request of the English shareholders, who had suffered heavy losses, the Provincial Attorney-General yesterday ordered the issuance of bench warrants for the arrest of four directors of the Union Life Assurance Co. and the National Agency Co., on separate charges of conspiring to defraud. Those included in the indictments were: Messrs. H. Pollman Evans, president of the defunct company; Dr. George E. Millichamp, vice-president and medical director; Harry Symons, K.C., of Toronto, and F. G. Hughes of Galt, managing directors.

No sooner had the warrants been issued than the city police, acting in conjunction with the county authorities, promptly started out in pursuit of those involved. The proceedings were carried out with such great secrecy that only a chosen few were permitted to participate in rounding up the quartette indicted; in fact, the whole proceedings were enshrouded with such mysterious movements that information respecting the operations of the police was withheld as far as possible.

Shortly before three o'clock yesterday Detective Montgomery walked into the office of Harry Symons, K.C., in the Crown Life Building, Queen and Victoria streets, and calling him aside, informed him that he had a warrant for his arrest. Mr. Symons was [illegible] to police headquarters, where he had to stay several hours before bail was arranged for. Bonds for $15,000 were advanced and Symons was released.

While the local police were taking care of Symons the authorities were in communication with outside points in the hope of apprehending at least two others indicted by the grand jury in conjunction with Symons, all former directors of the defunct Union Life Assurance Co. At the home of Dr. Millichamp, whose name was frequently mentioned during the investigation held under the direction of Mr. George Kapelle, K.C., the official referee, it was learned by the authorities that he was at the Homewood Sanitarium at Guelph, suffering from a nervous collapse.

It was stated at police headquarters last night that the authorities at Guelph had been instructed to place Dr. Millichamp under arrest, but if his physicial condition did not permit his leaving the institution he was to be allowed to remain there until such time as his health improved.

The authorities at Galt notified the local police late last night that Hughes was not at home, and they had been unable to get any definite information as to his whereabouts. No effort was made to locate H. Pollman Evans, as it was learned that he had taken his departure for Europe about two weeks ago. It was stated at his office, 49 King street west, where he was doing business since his return from London to give evidence before the investigating commission several weeks ago, that he had gone to France to recuperate.

AN INQUIRY BY BISHOPS

They Will See if Suffragettes Are Being Tortured

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Rt. Rev. Arthur Foley Winnington Ingram, Bishop of London, last night promised a deputation from the Women's Social and Political Union, that if he can obtain the Home Secretary's consent he will, in the course of a few days, visit Holloway jail, accompanied by the Bishop of Kensington, in order to investigate the allegations that three suffragettes imprisoned there suffer excruciating torture while being subjected to forcible feeding. If official permission is obtained the two bishops will witness the operation.

This projected action on the part statements made at a meeting of the Militants' Union by Miss Florence Ansell, recently released from Holloway, that while there she heard shrieks and moans twice daily proceeding from the opposite cell occupied by Rachel Peace, who is serving an eighteen months' term.

At the same meeting Miss Barbara Wylie, referring to the purpose of the militants to call on the King, as announced by Mrs. Dacre-Fox, a week ago, said that the deputation would not prostrate themselves before the throne as Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, said the Ulsterites would, but would stand before his Majesty erect. She did not think that the deputations would find any difficulty in obtaining an audience with the King. If nothing came of it, the women still had the same right to fight as Ulster.

JAPS WONDERFUL SWIMMERS.

Can Strike Water With Chest Uninjured, Carrying Weapons on Head.

The Japanese are fond of swimming, and it is the custom for students of the universities and schools to go to the seaside during the summer months and there train systematically.

Among the coast population there are found many long-distance swimmers. E. J. Harrison in his book on "The Fighting Spirit of Japan," tells of some remarkable feats performed by these swimmers. For example, they can jump into deep water and maintain a position with the water no higher than the loins while firing a musket, shooting with bow and arrow, writing on a slate, painting a picture on a fan with a brush or moving freely in every direction as though walking on solid ground.

The expert, while he rarely emulates the graceful high dive of the European, can leap from a great height and strike the surface of the water with his chest, without striking or wetting his face and head. In some mysterious way he contrives to escape the painful consequences which the impact would inevitably cause to the foreigner who should try this feat. It is said that the old-time samural frequently made use of this trick when crossing a river or stream. In such cases they carried their armor and weapons on their heads.

In illustration of the antiquity of swimming in Japan, it may interest foreign readers to be told that the famous "crawl" stroke, which Occidental swimmers first acquired not very long ago, has been known and practiced in Japan for hundreds of years, in addition to several other methods of progression in the water that would come as a revelation to Europeans.

CASGRAIN IN THE DARK.

Has Never Heard of Suggested Waterway and Will Not Discuss It.

MONTREAL, Jan. 27.—E. Chase Casgrain, K.C., chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Waterways Commission, has heard nothing of the proposal said to have been broached by members of the American section for the construction of an ocean-going ship channel from Montreal to the head of the Great Lakes, and at present declines even to discuss the proposition.

The subject has never been brought up at past meetings of the Waterways Commission when both Canadian and American sections met together, Mr. Casgrain said, and he has no further intimation that Chairman Tawney of the American section intends communicating with him on the subject than what was appearing in the press.

Ancient Egyptians Ahead of Us.

The announcement is made by a British scientist that he has discovered how the ancient Egyptians incubated chickens to the number of 120,000,000 a year. He has found incubators which he declares were used in Egypt 5,000 years ago.

The secret has been well guarded, but it is laid bare at last. They had no oil stoves or gas or electric heated incubators, but they had ovens which worked much better, even through they required more constant tending. Each oven was calculated to hold 7,000 eggs, and the fuel by which it was heated consisted of chopped straw and dung, but for the last 10 days of the hatching the energy was supplied altogether by the chickens themselves.

It is the commonest error of those operating our modern incubators to use too much heat, especially toward the end of the period, and now we may learn from the old Egyptians how not to do things as well as how to do them. The use of the straw and other light fuel shows that the Egyptians were most careful to avoid too intense heat at any stage. We thought that we were the first to use incubators, but we are 50 centuries behind the times.

Out of Her Head.

The class was studying the division of decimals. The teacher had taught her pupils that when they had a sum in division it is sometimes necessary to add ciphers on the right of the decimal point to carry the process out far enough. The little girl at the board wished to divide 20 by 5.5, and she did not know how to proceed.

"The teacher says to put some nothings after the 20," spoke up one of the class.

"Where does the teacher get the nothing?" asked the girl at the board.

"Out of her head," spoke up the informant, with no thought of the hidden meaning of the words.

For a "Grouch" Eat Eggs.

Fish may make you brainy, but it's eggs that make you amiable, at least if we can believe the claims made for this particular article of food by a German scientist of note.

"Cranks, grouches, nervous wrecks of all kinds, should eat all the eggs they can possibly digest," says Prof. Stiegletz. "Eggs are the best thing in the world for those whose ill tempers make themselves and every one around them uncomfortable. They should be soft boiled preferably and eaten four times a day for four weeks on a stretch. Then the diet should be stopped and not commenced again for four or even six weeks."

The young man who has been watching the game for quite a while says he believes the only solution of the high cost of living is to marry a widow with a million.

FOUR PERISH IN FIRE.

Woman and Three Children Burned When Clothes Caught Fire.

MONTREAL, Jan. 27.—Mrs. Napoleon Rodin and three children were burned to death yesterday morning at Notre Dame des Rosaire, Quebec.

Mrs. Rodin was starting the fire with kerosene and the flames jumped to the clothes of her little girl, who was present. Mrs. Rodin tried to extinguish the flames and her own clothing caught fire. Two other little girls in the room, one of whom was the daughter of a neighbor, were panic-stricken and ignited their dresses by attempting to put the flames out.

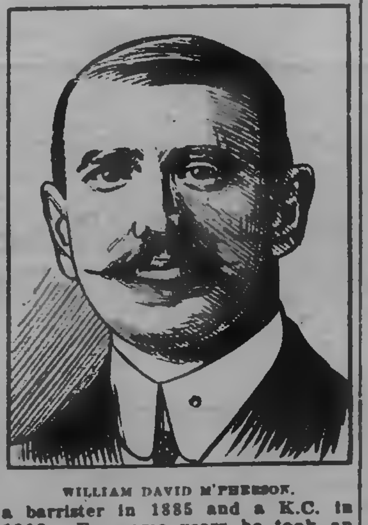
Mrs. Rodin tried to get out of the house but was unable to open the door. In her terror she tried to open a window and the curtains caught fire.

In a few moments the house was a mass of flames, and though the husband tried to enter the burning building he was forced back by the smoke and fire. He desisted in his frenzied efforts only when badly burned.

W. D. M'PHERSON HOLDS HIGHEST GIFT OF MASONS

Toronto Lawyer and Member of the Provincial Legislature Has Worked His Way From the Side Benches in the Craft to the Head of the Order in Ontario—Comes From Lambton County.

The present Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Canada is Mr. William David McPherson, lawyer and legislator. There has been nothing spectacular in Mr. McPherson's career, but rather it has been one of steady and definite progress. He was born in the County of Lambton, educated at Strathroy Collegiate and the Ontario Law School; became a barrister in 1885 and a K.C. in 1908. For some years he took an interest in the educational affairs of the city of Toronto, and in course of time became chairman of the school board. Once he competed unsuccessfully for the mayoralty. In 1908 he was elected to a seat in the Legislature for one of the Toronto constituencies.



WILLIAM DAVID M'PHERSON.

As the head of one of the leading law firms of Toronto, Mr. McPherson has been connected with many important cases and is highly spoken of as a legal advisor. Patient and methodical, he accomplishes much of private work as well as public service. Even in temperament and modest in speech, he has all the qualifications of a Chief Justice or a Lord High Chancellor.—Canadian Counrier.

Stage Fright.

Very few people are really free from liability to stage fright, and the veteran in public life is just as likely to be affected as is the novice. Attacks, moreover, frequently come when they are least expected. Hence no speaker or artist can face an audience and feel sure that he will not have to suffer from the tortures of this particularly painful form of nervousness.

Sometimes, instead of confusing the performer, stage fright serves as a wonderful stimulus. Once, just before Canning was to move an important measure in the House of Commons, a friend remarked to him: "Why, your hands are cold and clammy! You are nervous."

"In that case," replied the great statesman, "I shall make a good speech." And on this occasion Canning even excelled himself.

Musicians, of course, are the worst sufferers. The performer on a stringed instrument is helpless if his hand trembles; whilst the clear enunciation of a singer can be ruined by that "catch in the throat," or that twitching of the lips, which are perhaps the two simplest and most common manifestations of stage fright.

The Man in a Hurry.

The busy man chased a street car for three squares because there would not be another car along for one minute. A trolley wire was down, and the conductor told the busy man it would take three minutes to fix it so the car could start. The busy man hailed a passing taxi and paid $1.75 rather than wait three minutes. Then he dashed into a cafe to get a drink before he went up to his office. One hour and forty minutes later he was still arguing politics with an absolute stranger, who had remarked to the barkeep that Sniggs would surely defeat Miggs for mayor.

Points for Mothers

A Birthday Party.

Frequently there is a little invalid or convalescent is the home who must spend her birthday in bed or propped up with pillows in a large easy chair.

For the party make attractive invitations from fine grained water color paper and tint them. If the child is not too ill this will prove a pleasant diversion. If you cannot draw pretty sketches you will find plenty in the magazines which can be transferred to the paper by means of carbon paper. Write the invitation in rhyme and have the child seal and stamp the envelopes.

Decorate the bedroom with branches of evergreen, flowers or crape paper, and against the wall, opposite the bed, where it will be in direct view of the child, place the table.

For the centerpiece make a large shoe from black cardboard and line it with pink, blue or red crape paper. Cut several small windows in the sides and form the small, square panes by pasting narrow strips of white cardboard over the openings. On the inside of these windows paste a piece of the colored crape paper to represent curtains. You will find it a simple matter to fashion the shoe if a paper pattern is first cut and used for a guide. The top can be sewn to the sole with strong black thread. About the opening at the top paste a plaited frill of the crape paper. Bank the base with flowers and place in it small dolls to represent the "Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe" and her many children.

The dressing of the dolls will also interest the child, for she can select the patches from the scrap bag with which they are to be clothed, and if not too ill can assist with the sewing. The smaller dolls can be purchased for 10 cents, but the "old woman" doll should be several sizes larger.

Supply as many small dolls as there will be guests, and after the refreshments are served carry the shoe to the invalid and have her distribute the dolls as souvenirs. The "old woman" is retained for the invalid.

Suitable refreshments consist of:

Sandwiches.
Fancy Cakes. Fruit.
Ice Cream. Bon Bons.
Cocoa.

Make the sandwiches of digestible ingredients. Chicken sandwiches are always nice for children. Decorate the cakes attractively. If you have small round cakes form a flower on top of each by taking six blanched almonds and radiating them from the center in petal fashion.

The large birthday cake is, of course, the crowning feature of the party and, unless the little invalid is placed on a diet, should be her "special kind" of cake. Place the candles in rosebud holders about the rim and in the center arrange an appropriate ornament. Have the child cut the cake after the portions have been marked on the icing.

Have the ices molded in attractive forms and select bonbons that are not too rich, for naturally the children will eat a great many of the sweets.

The entertainment should consist of games which the birthday child can play.

Christening Wear For Babykins.

Baby at his earliest appearance in society wears a robe decorated after the manner of his mother's white wear. The embroideries are as fine as clever fingers can make them, for there is no striving after effect at the expense of delicacy.

True lovers' knots support bunches of forgetmenots and fairy-like rosebuds, and in between a simple device of broderie angiaise may find a place.

Scalloped hems are permissible, and in some cases the center panel, devoted to the main motif of embroidery, is finished with an upstanding hem daintily scalloped and buttonholed.

The baby of this century has a much curtailed length of robe, but the christening one is longer than the rest. The tiny bodice and long sleeves are marvels of embroidery, and the waist line is indicated by a half belt of white satin ribbon rosetted at the sides and given long, flowing ends. Only beneath the hem of the robe at the neck and wrists lace appears, and now, as ever, real fine valenciennes is, as a rule, preferred, unless there is some very precious heirloom edging or insertion to display.

The little cap that matches fits the head quite closely and is imitated in softest and finest materials to accompany the modern frock. It more daintily completes the toilet than any other form of head covering, for, alas, the hats and bonnets given to some infants sadly lack the becoming qualities the tiny faces need. It is too often imagined that any style suits any babe, whereas the individual needs of the small being differ enormously.

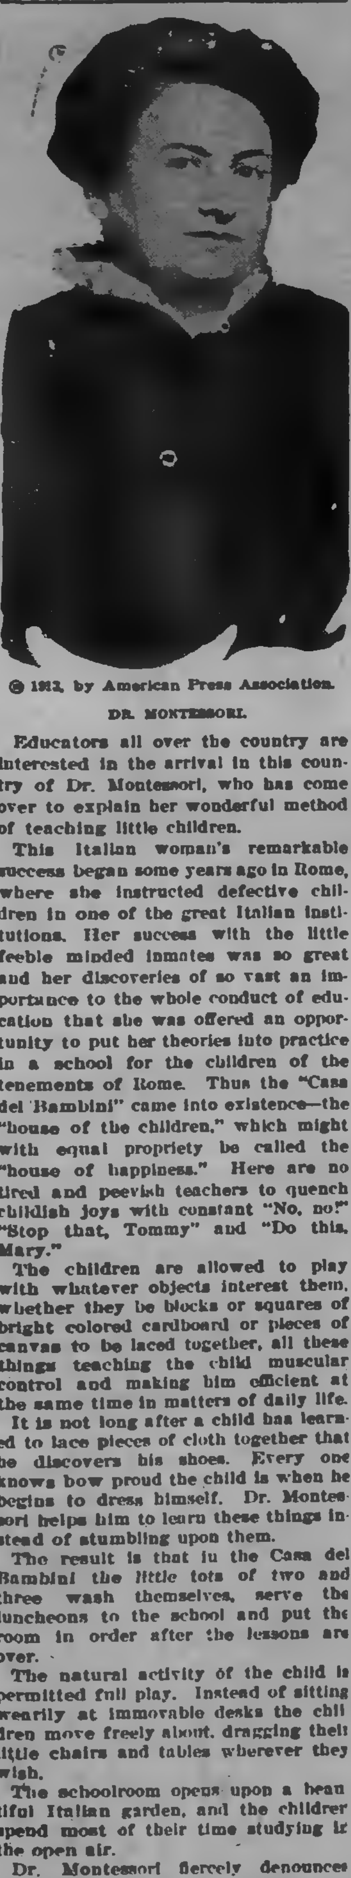
The shawl-like christening cloak is a copy of the soft wool shawl in which the tiny babe is enveloped, as a rule. It has a pointed cape and the under part is pointed also. Rich ribbed silk for a boy and the more feminine satin of closely woven white silk for a girl are appropriate with silk embroideries.

Narrow fringe is used a good deal for the modern cloak's adornment, but lace is very lovely.

If plants are washed in soapsuds, they will not have insects on them.

Woman's World

Dr. Montessori Arrives to Explain Teaching Methods.



© 1912, by American Press Association.

DR. MONTESSORI.

Educators all over the country are interested in the arrival in this country of Dr. Montessori, who has come over to explain her wonderful method of teaching little children.

This Italian woman's remarkable success began some years ago in Rome, where she instructed defective children in one of the great Italian institutions. Her success with the little feeble minded inmates was so great and her discoveries of so vast an importance to the whole conduct of education that she was offered an opportunity to put her theories into practice in a school for the children of the tenements of Rome. Thus the "Casa del Bambini" came into existence—the "house of the children," which might with equal propriety be called the "house of happiness." Here are no tired and peevish teachers to quench childish joys with constant "No, no!" "Stop that, Tommy" and "Do this, Mary."

The children are allowed to play with whatever objects interest them, whether they be blocks or squares of bright colored cardboard or pieces of canvas to be laced together, all these things teaching the child muscular control and making him efficient at the same time in matters of daily life.

It is not long after a child has learned to lace pieces of cloth together that he discovers his shoes. Every one knows how proud the child is when he begins to dress himself. Dr. Montessori helps him to learn these things instead of stumbling upon them.

The result is that in the Casa del Bambini the little tots of two and three wash themselves, serve the luncheons to the school and put the room in order after the lessons are over.

The natural activity of the child is permitted full play. Instead of sitting wearily at immovable desks the children move freely about, dragging their little chairs and tables wherever they wish.

The schoolroom opens upon a beautiful Italian garden, and the children spend most of their time studying in the open air.

Dr. Montessori fiercely denounces the system which compels little children to sit at desks until their spines are bent. She advocates freedom in study and play. Her methods are being watched with great interest, especially by kindergartners who have been brought up on the Froebel teachings.

Concerning Women.

Collapsible baby carriages have almost gone out of use in Christiania, Norway, owing to the agitation against them started by a local physician, a specialist in children's diseases.

Mrs. Winifred Harper Cooley, president of the Associated Club of Domestic Science, recently undertook to live on 9 cents a day and is said to have succeeded beyond her expectations. The report does not say that she has concluded to keep it up.

A New York magistrate said the other day that if a woman could earn money dressed as a man there was no law to prevent her using male attire. Dr. Mary Walker, who always wears man's clothing, has a special permit from congress to do so.

Queen Wilhelmina had a very pretty part to play at the inauguration of the palace of peace recently at The Hague. She conferred the grand cross of the order of Orange-Nassau on Andrew Carnegie, and a similar decoration was conferred on Abraham Pieter Cornelis Van Karnebeck, president of the Carnegie foundation.

Has Private Picture Show.

Mrs. George J. Gould entertained her guests in rather an original way recently, treating them to a picture show in the spacious casino of Georgian Court. The screen upon which the pictures were shown cost $1,000. It is the intention of Mrs. Gould to have reproductions of the latest plays, and she has special orders with film companies. She will use the apparatus for the benefit of charity during the winter.

If corns are rubbed daily with toilet pumice, they will disappear.

THIRTY-EIGHT CHILDREN ADMITTTED

anyone had anything to say on the reports, Mr. Peck arose and after congratulating the Society on their work of the year, especially in dealing with the deformed children, he dwelt considerably on the subject introduced by Dr. Amys. Some people imagine that the Provincial Government can spend as much money as they like, but they cannot, for their limit is $10,000,000, which is rather small when compared to the amount the Dominion's expenditure reaches, which is one hundred and fifty and two hundred million dollars. The bill, re the care of feeble-minded people, that was introduced some time ago into the provincial legislathree counties going in together and the lack of funds. He urged the meeting to consider the idea of two or three caunties going in together and erecting a building for the feebleminded children and through time the Provincial Government may do something, as they would now, but they have not the funds.

Mr. P. Campbell then handed in his resignation as treasurer of the Society in which office he has officiated for the past fifteen years. It was accepted with regret. The meeting concluded with the election of officers with Fire Chief Howard in the chair. The officers for the ensuing year were:

Honary-President—Mayor Buller.
President—Mr. R. W. Travers.
1st Vice-President—Mrs. Birdsall.
2nd Vice-President—Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A.
Secretary—Mr. E. L. Goodwill.
Treasurer—Mr. Horace Walkey.
Physician—Dr. Amys.

The officers for the Ladies' Auxiliary:

President—Mrs. Wm. Gibbs.
1st Vice-President—Mrs. W. Stocker.
2nd Vice-President—Mrs. Westlake.
Secretary-Treasurer — Mrs. Jas. Scott.
Treasurer—Mrs. Hopwood.

Food of Other Days.

Few persons ever stop to think about it but it is a fact that there are changing fashions in foods just as in clothes. For instance, way back in the Middle Ages in England many vegetables were eaten which have long since disappeared from the table, such as violet leaves mixed with young nettles, thistles and green wheat, and boiled hemp seeds.

Salads were made of mallow leaves, celery roots and purslane mixed with salt and pepper, for oil was almost unknown. Olive oil was considered to smack of effeminacy and Italian luxury. Horse-radish sauce was used instead by those who craved strength and good, red blood.

The potato revolutionized the fare of the poor, who had formerly to rely on the roots of wild plants. The variety of meats was larger, including beavers. Spices and aromatics were much sought after and far more used for cooking in olden days than they are now.

Ginger and nutmeg were used to flavor many dishes that have now vanished from our tables. And fortunately the dishes of small birds of all kinds that were an essential feature of a dinner have also gone out of fashion. We no longer bake blackbirds and finches in pies.

New York has a club where women may leave their children while they go to a matinee or shopping.

DISASTER ON AN OIL SHIP

An oil ship caught fire recently in Tuticorin Harbor, India. While discharging petroleum into a lighter, the steamer Bharata suddenly burst into flames. The crew of about 50 and a large gang of coolies rushed to the lifeboat which was moored to the side of the vessel, but only a certain number were able to escape that way. One of the ship's dinghies was lowered in such haste that it capsized and the crew were precipitated into the water, which was covered with flaming oil. The captain's wife and her twelve-months-old baby were among them. They were rescued but the captain's three-year-old daughter perished. The Tuticorin port officer's son, aged nine, was in the vessel at the time of the fire. The boy was last seen in the arms of the second engineer struggling in the sea. The boy had been left in the burning ship, but the engineer went back and rescued him. He jumped into the sea with the boy, but both were drowned.

A Few Facts for All Who Want To Make Money

Wise and rich men advise their friends to buy Lots in the way of a growing city. Plain common sense endorses that advice.

All must acknowledge that Peterborough is growing rapidly south and west.

It is generally known that I own a very desirable block of high land half a mile south and west from C.G.E. Works, overlooking the south-end churches and schools, the C.P.R., G.T.R. and street car line, also all the big factories. I have subdivided this land into blocks of two lots, 50x123 ft. to a lane, 12 feet wide. Each lot containing 3,075 square feet. Those lots would be excellent value at $200 each, but because of my desire to be freed from business I have decided to sell for $175, and accept deposits of $5 on one or two Lots to which I will add a bonus of $5, giving a receipt for $10. No interest nor any further payments required until May, when official plan will be registered. All lots properly staked and balance of streets, Cottsmore, Ford avenue, and Western Avenue graded to the Gravel Road.

RESTRICTIONS:—BRICK, BRICK VANEER, CONCRETE, OR STONE HOUSES ONLY PERMITTED.

Other lots 30x127—3,810 square feet for $150, and $200, on same terms. Free deed and perfect title.

This offer will never be repeated.

DISTRESS LIMITED TO CITIES SAYS BRODER

Assimilation of Huge Influx of Immigration Responsible for Unemployment and Lavish Spending is Direct Cause of High Cost of Living Says Veteran M.P.

OTTAWA, Jan. 27.—Andrew Broder, the veteran Conservative member for Dundas, dealt sharply with political cant in the Commons yesterday when he showed that the high cost of living was not a defect in the fiscal system but a sheer matter of extravagance and carelessness on the part of the people. Unemployment, too, was only to be expected at times in a country which had to assimilate 400,000 immigrants in a single year.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, the other speaker of the day, followed the traditional course and heaped responsibility for the world-wide financial depression the Borden Government.

The debate was resumed by Mr. LaFortune, the Liberal member for Montcalm, Que., who spoke in French. He was followed by Mr. Broder (Con., Dundas), who discussed the reports of financial stringency and unemployment throughout the country.

Mr. Broder said that while there might be some distress in the cities, farmers were never more prosperous than at present. It was much to be doubted whether 100,000 people were out of employment in Canada, but if they were it should be remembered that Canada was receiving immigrants at the rate of 400,000 a year, and it took time for all these people to find work.

"The people are making more money now and they spend it more freely. The Opposition urges the Government to reduce the cost of living, but the Government cannot make that hen running around the barnyard lay one egg more, and it cannot make the cattle any fatter. It is the man who feeds them who can do that. The solution is with the farmer."

Mr. Broder said he could not view the question of free wheat from the same point of view as the western man. He added: "The future of the west depends on mixed farming, and it needs the bye-product of the wheat. Without it dairying will suffer severely. We now grind enough flour in Canada for 14,000,000 people, but should grind enough for 50,000,000."

Mr. Broder then referred to the decrease in the number of milch cows in Eastern Canada, and the increase in the west. In Ontario, in the last four years, owing to lack of the right kind of hired help, the number of milch cows fell from 30,000 to 26,000, while the non-milch cows increased from 13,000 to 19,000, and from 1901 to 1911 the decrease in milch cows in Ontario was 32,784.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux followed Mr. Broder. After touching upon the Georgian Bay Canal, ocean freight rates, civil service reform, and redistribution, the ex-Postmaster-General dealt with the present financial situation.

Three years ago, he said, Canadian trade was buoyant, Canadian credit was good, and prosperity and progress were abroad in the land. To-day there was industrial unrest and unemployment, credit was impaired, and hard times were making their presence felt in almost every centre of population.

It was not the business of Parliament to sit idle and wail "let bad enough alone." Neither was it well to degenerate into mere calamity howling. The situation called for action. "The old order is passing under Lloyd George in Britain, it is passing under President Wilson in the United States, and it is time to speak the plain and honest truth to the privileged classes in Canada, who since 1879 have enjoyed the fruits of protection and monopoly," declared the ex-Postmaster-General.

He submitted to the House the program asked for by the Dominion Grange, by the Western Grain Growers, and by the Trades and Labor Council. "I know all this cannot be granted in one fell swoop," said he, "but speaking for myself I believe the time has come to take a forward step, to join the international procession of advancement along the path of public weal."

Speaking for himself, Hon. Mr. Lemieux said he believed the time had come to remove all taxation on foodstuffs, on wheat, and on agricultural implements, to regulate exorbitant profits by middlemen, and to wage zealous and effective warfare on all combines and trusts.

At the conclusion of Hon. Mr. Lemieux's speech, Hon. Mr. Pelletier moved the adjournment of the debate. The division is expected to-day.

ROYAL DIVORCE ADVANCED.

Special Commissioners Will Settle Affairs In Sweden's Scandal.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Jan. 27.—The divorce proceedings pending between Prince William of Sweden and his wife, who, before her marriage, in 1908, was the Grand Duchess Marie Pavlovna of Russia, have been advanced a further step by the appointment of special commissioners who are to meet in St. Petersburg to arrange various matter arising out of the dissolution of the royal marriage.

King Gustave has commissioned Dr. Otto Hack Roland Printaskoeld, chief marshal of his court, and Dr. Harmarskjoeld, Governor of Upsala, to proceed to St. Petersburg to discuss with the representatives of the Emperor of Russia, the question of financial arrangements and of the custody of the one child of the marriage, Prince Lennart.

PORT AU PRINCE, Jan. 27.—An extraordinary session of the new congress which was elected on Jan. 10 last, was held yesterday, 72 members—more than sufficient to constitute a quorum—being present. Organization was completed and the acts of the executive ratified.

Conditions both here and in the south are for the moment quiet. In the north, Gen. Bellard having withdrawn his candidacy, Senator Davilmar Theodore, who is in command of the rebel troops at Cape Haitien, remains the only serious candidate for the presidency.

RADIUM FAILS CANCER PATIENT

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—After a successful race against death from Iowa, by his daughter, and while the rays from $11,000 worth of radium were working their mysterious way, Elhanan Zook, one of the superintendents of the Panama railroad, died in the Hahnemann Hospital at four o'clock yesterday morning, not from cancer which the radium was obliterating, but from operative pneumonia.

As it had been observed that the cancer in Mr. Zook's throat had progressed so far as to render a surgical operation useless, the surgeons, as a last resort, turned to the gift of mother earth, and last Wednesday inserted the $11,000 worth of radium crystals within the growth.

The crystals, which in the aggregate would not cover half the nail of a matured little finger, were encased in capsules of glass and lead, and inserted into the cancer by Dr. I. G. Shallcross, Dr. Frank Benson and Dr. Frederick Smith.

Carson Prepared To Co-operate.

LONDON, Jan. 27. — Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Ulsterites, in a speech at Lincoln last night, said that he was ready to join John Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, in an attempt to extend real local government to Ireland, or to remove any abuses or injustices, social or religious.

Referring to Mr. Redmond's speech at Waterford on Sunday, he declared: "If this is the last word from his side we are in a lamentable and critical state of affairs. I am a man of peace, but not of peace at any price."

In his speech Mr. Redmond said that if any change was made in the home rule bill it would be to buy the good will of the opponents of the bill, and he added that he saw no prospects of their good will being purchased at any price whatever.

Workman Meets Death.

ST. CATHARINES, Jan. 27.—While engaged on the water tower at the Pilkington Glass Works at South Thorold yesterday afternoon, Floyd Keller, a structural iron worker, met death.

Keller, who was about 26 years of age, came from Conneaut.

Would Break Monopoly.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27. — Secretary of the Interior Lane told the House mines committee yesterday that Congress should break up "the monopoly that keeps radium at a fabulously prohibitive price," and enact legislation to put the curative mineral on the market cheaply for large numbers of sufferers.

MOTHER OF EXILES.

Mme. Breshkovskaya Has Shown Splendid Heroism.

The recent attempted escape of Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, the "mother of the Russian revolution," as she is called, from exile in dreaded Siberia, has again attracted world wide attention to this brave woman, now nearing her seventieth year, who is undergoing her second or "perpetual" term. She was sentenced to exile in March, 1910, after a trial, whose proceedings were followed with intense interest. The charge against her was conspiracy in conjunction with Nicolas Tchaikovsky, the "father of the revolution," who had been active for reform since 1870. The man was acquitted.

Because she would not plead for the Russian Emperor's clemency Mme. Breshkovskaya has been incarcerated at Kirensk, a penal settlement 420 miles northeast of Irkutsk.

At the time of her recent attempt to gain her freedom she went to dinner under police escort at the lodging of a fellow exile, Vladimiroff, and remained there till evening. Then a companion, Andreeff, dressed in Mme. Breshkovskaya's clothing, emerged from the house supported by Vladimiroff, and, pretending to be a sick woman. Accompanied by the police escort the accomplice hobbled to the lodging of Mme. Breshkovskaya and crawled into her bed, where he remained.

Constabulary intercepted a conveyance speeding on the way to Yakutsk, on the river Lena, and recognized among its occupants Mme. Breshkovskaya, dressed as a man. She had in her possession a counterfeit passport and a sum of money.

In one of her letters to the outside world she tells of changed conditions in the opening of the exile's mail since the days of her first banishment, but adds that the habit of persecution and espionage is so old that the guards are never tired of indulging in it.

"During the festivities of Christmas," she continues, "when here many young persons disguise themselves and go through the town with their masks, my keepers are afraid I will escape in that manner, and they run about like mad men, searching and looking after every one, intruding themselves into every house suspected to be the place of my visit.

"Every path I make is surveyed by a gloomy figure shrouded in black furs from head to foot and standing immovable near the house I visit.

"Without permission I cannot place my foot on the frozen river, for it would be regarded as an attempt to escape. All the night they are looking into the windows of my cabin."

In another letter to a friend she says: "I did not receive or hear of the money you sent me. Often my heart overflows with sorrow, for there is need of help here, where many boys have their feet frozen for want of a suitable booting. I feel I am responsible, for I consider the young people as my own children, my grandsons."

Another of the exiles in Siberia writes, "She cares for and mothers a thousand exiles, giving them heart and courage."

Million Bequest For Peace.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—The continuance of the work of the World Peace Foundation, established by Edwin Ginn in 1910, is assured by a provision in his will made public yesterday. Mr. Ginn, who had contributed $50,000 annually for the support of the foundation, bequeated one million dollars for the same purpose, the income to be administered by the trustees of the foundation. The abolition of war through education in the advantages of peace is the object of the foundation.

THIS RABBI LIKES TANGO

If Well Done, it is Beautiful, if Not it is Vulgar.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 27.—Rabbi Jacob Nieto, addressing the congregation of Sherith Israel yesterday, warmly commended the tango and kindred dances.

"The old padres in the early days of the California missions were wise men," said the rabbi. "Every Sunday afternoon they let the people dance, and watched them while they did so. In the middle ages the Jewish rabbis had the young people dance every Sunday afternoon, in the presence of the parents, and all enjoyed it.

"What we need is more common sense and less theology. The tango, danced by cultured persons, is beautifully pleasing; by the awkward it appears vulgar. You can take a religious ceremony and make it a farce."

Radial Plans Near Completion.

LONDON, Jan. 27. — Hon. Adam Beck is expected in London on Wednesday or Thursday, and as soon as possible a meeting of the London and Port Stanley commission will be called to discuss important matters.

The report of the engineers will be practically completed by that time and the purchase of supplies will be authorized.

The appointment of a manager will be the first matter undertaken. There are eight men in sight for the place. Confidential reports on all of them have been received and these will be presented when the question comes up.

Forger To Be Hermit.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Jan. 27.—F. E. Murray, convicted forger, was sentenced yesterday by Superior Judge Beasly to serve two years as a hermit in the mountains forty miles from here.

Because Murray is 58 years old the judge was not inclined to give him a jail sentence.

One of the conditions of the sentence is that Murray may accept employment, but he must not visit a city or town in two years. The court will keep in touch with him during that time.

BIG STRIKE FEARED.

General Walkout of British Building Trades Threatens.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The executive council of the Building Trades Federation yesterday adopted a resolution calling upon the plumbers smiths, fitters, electricians, painters and allied trades to join in a strike More than 100,000 men are affected

In addition to calling out the foregoing the federation has decided in favor of bringing about a national building strike and the United Kingdom is face to face with a grave situation.

Should the recommendation of the executive council be ratified, London's building industry will be brought to a standstill. Work has already ceased on a dozen big buildings in the course of construction involving the expenditure of $50,000,000 These include London's new county hall and several Government buildings.

There is no sign of a settlement of the coal carriers' strike, and the employes of several big street transport companies threaten to support, the coal men. Trouble is also brewing in the shipping world on the eight-hour question and higher wages.

Tom Mann, formerly president of the International Transport Workers Federation, in a speech at Dublin last night, predicted a general strike in England in March, involving engineers, boilermakers and shipwrights.

The Isle of Wight is to be connected with the mainland by a four-mile subway containing an electric railroad.

Mr. Carnegie makes himself happy by announcing that up to date he has given away about $365,000,000 and is now down close to the paltry $15,000,000 which he needs for his old age.

Forty-four per cent of the letters handled in Chicago have faulty addresses, and it costs Uncle Sam $75,000 a year to doctor up the worst ones. New York has tried night schools with some success.

Selecting a Wife

By Competitive Examination.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

When old man Skinner died it was understood that his only child, Billy, would be very rich. Indeed, a newspaper stated that the estate would round up $1,000,000. Scarcely had this item appeared than all the girls Billy had ever known began to show him attention, and those who hadn't his acquaintance sought introductions that they might enter the race for Billy and his million. It was not long before he counted ten pairs of embroidered slippers arranged in a row on a shelf in his closet and twelve dozen handkerchiefs with the letter "B" worked in one corner that had been sent him by aspirants for his hand.

One night after coming in from the theater Billy sat down to look over his engagement book and found that for the coming week he had invited three different girls to go to the opera with him on the same evening, was to take out four in his car on one afternoon and was equally entangled as to his calls. Throwing the memorandum book on his desk, he pushed back his chair and sat in deep thought.

"This thing has gone far enough," he said to himself. "All the girls I know want to marry me, and those who don't know me would want to marry me if they did know me. It's got to stop, that's all there is about it—it's got to stop. But how am I going to stop it? I might have an item published that my fortune hasn't panned out as well as was expected and instead of $50,000 a year I'll have to get on with a beggarly $5,000. This would throw off the girls who want an establishment, but there are lots of them who would argue that a tenth of a loaf is better than none. Besides, I doubt if they would believe the statement, especially if I spend my income. No, that plan won't work.

"Suppose I marry one of these girls—that'll settle it. And I might as well marry now as later. It would save me a lot of temptation. I'd have a home to loaf in instead of a club, and I'd be fulfilling the natural requirements of a properly constituted existence. The beasts and the birds mate—why not man? I'll do it. I'll marry one of these girls, and that will head off all the rest.

"But which one shall I marry? There's Lou Clarke, and Hattie Allen, and Bessie Trask, and Helen Warfield, and a lot of others. Lou would love me dearly, I know, but she's not very bright, and I might tire of her. Hattie, I'm afraid, is too smart. She would get ahead of me every time. Bess is a scatter brained creature, always joking. She's delightful as a companion, but I'm afraid that if my fortune should slip away from me she'd pawn the clock and go on with her jokes. Helen is too confoundedly serious. She'd always be looking at things in a matter of fact way.

"What a fine thing it would be if I could find a girl that should have a fair amount of all the desirable traits without having too much of any one of them. She should be jolly, but serious at the serious times. She should be fairly intellectual, so that I might be able to talk with her on ordinary topics of the day without her telling me every few minutes that she knew more than I. She should be fond of children, as I am. Amiability I should place as her first requisite.

"I know a way that I could find out something about these qualifications in the woman who would make me a good wife, but I'm afraid the girls wouldn't chime in with it. When a congressman is loaded down with applications for West Point or Annapolis what does he do? Why, he submits the matter to competitive examination and gives the appointment to the boy whose papers are the best. It would be just the thing in my case, but girls are so uppish that they wouldn't submit to it.

"Yet I'm not so certain about that where there is a million dollars at stake. A girl will knuckle down to a good deal where she has a choice, on the one side, of hammering a typewriter all day or cramming knowledge into the heads of children, who hate knowledge and love candy, and, on the other, of spending her share of $50,000 a year. I have a mind to try it."

Taking a pencil, he amused himself, writing out some questions suitable to his matrimonial purpose. He wrote down a number of them, scratching out some and substituting others or changing his wording, and at last threw down his pencil, apparently quite satisfied with his work. This was his examination list:

First.—State what you consider the first duty of a wife.

Second.—Write something humorous.

Third.—Are you a new woman or an old one?

Fourth.—Have you many or few relatives? State their ages and sex.

Fifth.—What is your age?

Sixth.—If your husband should come home tired and cross, what reception would you consider it your duty to give him?

Seventh.—State the main features in the constitution of the United States. Explain the proper use of "shall and will" and "who and whom." Does North America rightfully belong to the American Indian or the white man? How many square feet are there in a 12 by 18 foot room?

Eighth.—If the cook were found intoxicated at 6 o'clock p. m. and no dinner prepared, what would you do?

Ninth.—Give an instance of amiability in woman. If your husband should abuse you while making pies, what would you do with the rolling pin?

Tenth.—Are you a suffragette?

Eleventh.—Do you approve of the present fashion in dress for women?

Twelfth.—Do you object to the word "obey" in the marriage service?

The idea of marriage by competitive examination having got into Billy's head, he couldn't get it out. He knew a dozen girls to whom he would like to propound these dozen questions; but, being a modest chap, he shrank from announcing to them that he would marry the girl whose average replies were the most satisfactory to him. Then it occurred to him to put it that he would propose to the winner. That didn't sound so bad.

It took him a week to get up his courage to send out his examination papers. The first surprise he received after doing so was an enormous number of letters from young ladies to whom he hadn't sent the questions, asking for them. This convinced him that he had not made a guy of himself. However, he sent out no more papers, confining himself to those girls he knew personally.

He concluded not to open any of the replies until they were all in. To his surprise, he received answers to every examination paper sent out. When he counted a dozen missives he locked himself in his room and opened them. At the first he turned pale. One of the questions, No. 9, concerning amiability, was answered, "If you came upon me while making pies, even with a smile on your face, I would bring the rolling pin down on your head."

The second letter was more quiescent. The writer evidently took the submission of an examination paper in good part. She gave her ideas of the duties of a wife, gave something humorous (copied from Mark Twain) and failed completely on the educational questions. The others she answered meekly. Five examination papers were sent back with "None of your business" written in the space for reply to No. 5, "What is your age?" One girl replied to No. 10, "Are you a suffragette?" "Yes, and I have no use for a husband either; at any rate, not for you."

One question was answered by every girl who was not too hot to give a courteous reply and at length. It was No. 11, "Do you approve of the present fashion in dress for women?" Seven young ladies wrote replies to this ranging from ten to twenty-four pages.

Billy was very much cut up at the replies to question No. 3, "Are you a new woman or an old one?" noticing for the first time that he had not been careful in his phraseology. Some of the replies were: "What impudence!" "Old or young, you're not a suitable age for me." "I'm of the new woman kind, but am still young enough to hope for a husband without submitting to a competitive examination."

Finally Billy struck a reply that came upon him as refreshingly as a cool breeze after a ninety-nine in the shade day. It was from Bessie Trask. She filled out every question, as follows:

First.—The first duty of a wife is to be loved devotedly by her husband.

Second.—I can't write anything funny.

Third.—I'm a new woman, but I won't be after my next birthday.

Fourth.—No mother-in-law on my side. How about yours?

Fifth.—Concerning my age, see No. 3

Sixth.—It would depend on whether I was tired and cross myself how I would treat a tired husband.

Seventh.—Never happened to see a copy of the constitution. There's no use knowing the correct use of "shall" and "will" because no one else does. Can master "who" or "whom," but can't give the rule. America rightfully belongs to the Indian and wrongfully to the white man, possession being nine points of the law. There are 12,000 square feet in a room 12 by 18.

Eighth.—With a drunken cook and no dinner my dear husband would undoubtedly dine and wine me at a first class restaurant.

Ninth.—An instance of amiability in a woman is my own sweet self in replying to these questions. Rolling pins are for pies, stickpins for woman's defense.

Tenth.—Not interested in the suffragette movement.

Eleventh.—I should dress to please hubby.

Twelfth.—Don't object to the word "obey" in the marriage service in the slightest or any other promise.

"By Jove," exclaimed Billy; "that's the girl for me! Now, I come to think of it, I've been more than half sweet on her for some time."

After mature deliberation he concluded that a proper course for him would be to give all of the twelve girls an opportunity to refuse him. He felt safe in being refused by all except Bessie Trask, of whom he was uncertain. But he was thrown on his beam ends by being accepted by every girl except Bess provided he would make a suitable apology for sending her the examination papers. Bess declined him unconditionally.

But Billy, who was not so great a fool as he may be taken for, made no apology for sending the examination papers and began a matrimonial pursuit of Miss Trask. Bess joked him, but wouldn't marry him. At last he threatened to send out another set of examination papers.

"Don't, Billy!" she pleaded. "If I didn't love you I would be willing to have you make all the women in the world hate you. As it is, I give in."

Her Only Concern.

Sir David Baird, the first baronet, was a famous Anglo-Indian soldier who early in his career had the unpleasant experience of being thrown into the black hole of Calcutta during the mutiny.

Like a number of other eminent soldiers, he was not blessed with too sweet a temper, and when his old mother was told that the prisoners in the black hole were tied together her only comment was:

"Heaven help the poor man that's tied to our Davie!"

Where Shall We Hang Him?

Mr. Lloyd George, the British statesman, has been telling some stories bearing on his own unpopularity with his political opponents.

One the chancellor tells relates to the recent unveiling of his portrait, the gift of some Welsh admirers.

In the course of his speech the chairman of the meeting artlessly remarked that for some time past the attention of the subscribers had been occupied by the problem, "Where shall we hang Lloyd George?"

Ostrich Farming.

The existence of wild ostriches in Southern Rhodesia has been known ever since the occupation of the country, but except in one instance, where the experiment has hitherto met with indifferent success, on a private farm, no systematic attempt has been made to introduce ostrich farming into Rhodesia. Recently, however, says The London Times' Buluwayo correspondent, a Cape farmer from the Eastern Province has been making inquiries on the invitation of the Chartered Company, and his report, which has just been submitted, is unexpectedly favorable. The Chartered Co. is in consequence arranging for an enclosure of 10,000 acres on the banks of the Shangani river, where the finest specimens of wild birds have so far been found, and where 400 acres of irrigable land will be put under lucerne.

Careful of His Voice.

Brignoli, the famous tenor, was very careful of his voice and was terribly afraid of drafts. It is said that during the winter it always took him three-quarters of an hour to get from his room to the street. First he would on leaving his room pace the hall for ten minutes to get acclimatized. He then descended to the lobby, where the temperature was a little lower, and spent twenty minutes there. He then ventured to the vestibule, which he would parade for fifteen minutes, occasionally opening the door to let in a little cold air. Being now accustomed to a cool temperature, he would button up his coat and sally forth.

China Wants Herring.

The Chinaman is breaking out in a new place. He is getting fond of Canadian salt herring. He has ordered 2,000 tons for the Christmas festivities, along with 2,290 tons of flour. When Hon. George E. Foster was in the Orient last year, he made speeches about Canadian herring and Canadian flour. The Chinaman bit.

THE MARKET

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Evidence that Australia and Russia were underselling the United States, had a bearish influence here today on the price of wheat. Each of the other principal staples, too, showed a net decline—corn ⅝c to ¾c, oats ⅛c to ¼c, and provisions 5c to 12½c.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Jan. 26.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, receipts of live stock for the week ended Jan. 24 were 1550 cattle, 550 sheep and lambs, 1650 hogs and 300 calves. The supply for sale today amounted to 1100 cattle, 450 sheep and lambs, 850 hogs and 150 calves.

The trade in cattle was very slow, owing to the fact that both packers and butchers generally bought pretty freely last week and they all have fair supplies on hand. Prices declined 25 cents per cwt., but even at this reduction the few buyers present showed little disposition to operate any way freely, and the trade on the whole was unsatisfactory. A few small lots of choice steers sold at $8 to $8.25 per cwt.

A feature of the trade in small meats is the weaker feeling in the market for lambs, prices having declined, owing to the liberal supplies coming forward at this season of the year.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $8 to $8.25; medium, $7.25 to $7.50; common, $6 to $6.50; canners, $2.75 to $4; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $7 to $7.25; medium, $5.75 to $6; butchers' cattle, bulls, $4.75 to $7; milkers, choice, each, $80 to $95; common and medium, $60 to $65; springers, $70 to $75, sheep, ewes, $5.50 to $6; bucks and culls, $5 to $5.25; lambs, $8 to $8.25; hogs, f.o.b., $9.40 to $9.75; calves, $3 to $15.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 14,000; slow; ewes, 25c higher; lambs, $5.50 to $8.25; yearlings, $6 to $7; wethers, $5.75 to $6; ewes, $3 to $6.50; sheep, mixed, $5.50 to $6.00.

CREATURES OF NIGHT.

Strange Characteristics of That Little Known Creature, the Bat.

Of the more common animals about us the bat is probably the least well-known. This is because of its nocturnal habits and the consequent difficulty in observing it. Indeed, all that most people seem to know about bats is that they fly at night and are "awful things to get into your hair." As a matter of fact, there is no authentic instance of a bat ever alighting upon a woman's hair, and they are no more in the habit of doing so than are humming birds.

The fact is, very little is known concerning the habits of bats. The order comprises 450 species, but it is safe to say that three-fourths of them are known only by their dry skins and skulls. They exhibit differences in form that are fairly bewildering. They range all the way from the beautiful to the fantastic and hideous. The great majority, however, are useful to man in destroying insects which, without the aid of birds and beasts, would very soon overwhelm him. The harmful species are those which destroy fruit, and a few which suck the blood of domestic animals.

One of the strangest characteristics about the bat is that it cannot fly from the ground. When it finds itself upon terra firma it crawls painfully to some wall or tree, and, clambering up to a suitable elevation, launches itself into the air. Once upon the wing all awkwardness of the bat disappears as if by magic.

To be as "blind as a bat" is not to be blind at all, but rather to possess powers of vision that are uncommonly good in semi-darkness, or at night, and fairly good even in broad daylight. When disturbed at midday bats will fly to places of safety as briskly and as successfully as so many swallows. Their eyes are small, having the appearance of tiny beads, and in this respect they are an exception to most night animals. They all possess teeth, but here they show a wide variation.

The bats have been divided into two natural sub orders—insect-eating bats and fruit-eating bats. There is only one family of fruit-eating bats, namely, the flying foxes, so named on account of their having faces like a fox. This is the largest of all bats. Specimens have been found measuring as much as four feet from tip to tip of extended wings. They inhabit India, Ceylon, the Malay Archipelago and eastern Australia. Some of the fruit growers of California are so apprehensive of this creature, and so fearful that they might be "introduced," that they have secured the passage of a law by which the importation of the flying fox is prohibited so rigidly that not one specimen can be imported, even for exhibition in a zoological garden.

The bat goes into hibernation in the late autumn, coming out again in the early spring. Its hibernation is very complete. It is an astonishing fact, which has been scientifically proved, that respiration absolutely ceases. Such a state is almost unthinkable to a creature like man, who cannot survive the cessation of the action of his lungs for more than a minute or two at a time.

These creatures of the night have often been tamed, and though one would instinctly somewhat shrink from making a pet of a bat, yet all who have ever kept them are unanimous in giving them an admirable character, saying that they will become so attached that they will fly out of the open window, hawk for insects all night, and be found in the morning hanging by the same window waiting to be taken in.

Lived on Autographs.

Autograph hunting sometimes proves a profitable pursuit. A Frenchman of the last century, Ludovic Picard, made a steady income out of it for some years. His most successful coup was accomplished with a letter in which he posed as "one of the unappreciated who is meditating suicide and seeks for counsel and aid in this hour of sore distress." This effusion drew a number of celebrities, including Beranger and Heine. Lacordaire sent ten closely written pages, which were promptly converted into cash. Dickens also fell a victim and took the trouble to answer in French. Eventually Picard was shown up and had to seek another occupation.

Virginia, Minn., has equipped its police department with an automobile patrol wagon.

EGGS THAT CROAK.

Young Crocodiles Are Heard Before They Are Hatched.

That young unhatched crocodiles utter an audible croaking cry within the eggs in which they are laid is averred by Knowledge, and it adds the cry is so loud and distinct that it can be heard when the eggs are buried under one or two yards of sand.

Dr. W. A. Lamborn tested the fact at Lagos on the West African coast. He heard a croaking noise from below a dry path, and, digging in the path to investigate the cause, he discovered thirteen crocodile's eggs at a depth of about eighteen inches. All the young crocodiles hatched out within half an hour of being dug up.

So far back as 1899 Dr. Voeltzkow noticed that unhatched Madagascar crocodiles uttered a cry from the egg at a depth of two yards and that any shock, as of a heavy tread, near the egg caused the baby crocodiles to produce this sound "with the mouth closed, as we produce hiccup sounds." In this way they inform the female crocodile when she visits the nest that they want her aid, whereupon she scrapes the sand away and they emerge.

Apples With Worms.

May it not be that we get a keener pleasure out of eating an imperfect apple than a perfect one? It is neither the best possible apple, which would be perfect, nor the worst possible apple, which would have a kind of negative perfection; it has a worm at the core. But I wonder whether we do not enjoy it more because we have to eat the more carefully to keep from eating him. Besides, he arouses in our mind all sorts of questionings. Why is he there? What kind of worm is he? How did he get in? How would he have got out if we had not ousted him? And—note this—what sort of apple would it have been if he had taken up his residence elsewhere? The perfect apple could have roused no queries which the defective apple does not. The same subtle influences went to make both—the same elements, the same forces, the same chemical processes. But the defective apple has in addition to all these—the worm.—Robert M. Gay in Atlantic.

Cocaine and Crime.

Police authorities have come to regard cocaine as one of the recognized sources of crime. The cocaine fiend seems to have his moral sense destroyed. The morphine devotee is often a man of refined and elevated thought, with delicate perceptions and with a keen sense of honor and obligations except that he will always lie and deceive to get possession of his needed "dope." In his sober moments the alcohol fiend is often a man of conspicuous honor. The cocaine fiend seems different. It is believed that cocaine directly stimulates to evil passions and evil deeds.—Family Doctor.

Criminals of Manila.

"Criminals are practically unknown in Manila," observed an official of that city. "I mean by this that there is no criminal class in the islands, as there is in European countries and in the United States. The yeggman, the professional pickpocket and sneak thief do not exist there. Of course we have to deal with high crimes, and there are a considerable number of murders. Doubtless this is due to the mercurial temperament of the people. The Filipinos are much like the Spaniards. They are easily angered and commit murder in a moment of passion. The spirit of revenge also is pronounced among the Filipinos. I have found that most of the murders committed are traceable to that old motive—the eternal triangle. I don't recall any murders in the Philippines that were committed with guns. The weapon ordinarily used is the knife or bolo."—Washington Post.

CANADIAN LEAGUE TEAM FOR ERIE MUST BE THERE WITH THE GOODS

Fans Have Been Used to High Grade of Baseball — Last Season's Team Would Compare Favorably With International League Teams

Meeting of Peterboro Baseball Club is Adjourned to Next Friday

Owing to counter attractions, there was only a small attendance at the baseball meeting last night and adjournment was made to next Friday night at eight o'clock, in the Bank of Montreal chambers.

The officers and shareholders present did not like to proceed with important business, although it would have been possible to do so. They preferred to have as many of the shareholders present, as possible, so that all may have an opportunity to hear and take part in the discussions relative to the movements of the club.

The following is from the Erie Despatch:

Larry Quinlan, newly signed leader of the Terre Haute club of the Central league, and former boss of the Sailors, stopped off in Erie yesterday on his way to his Staten Island home from Chicago, where he signed his 1914 contract. Quinlan will visit friends in Erie.

The manager of the squad which brought the double header pennant to Erie in the curtailed season of 1913, is planning his campaign for the Central flag, and he has some proposition before him, for the ball patrons of Terrier town want a banner team and incidentally a getaway gang. If they don't get it, patronage slumps and the several score directors begin dictating the policy of play.

But Larry in his campaigning through the cities of the Heilbronner circuit, has a knowledge of conditions gained from seasons of play, and if he is given a free rein the Terrier club will be among those present from gong tap. Larry has only one regret. He is sorry he couldn't return to Erie.

Incidentally he believes that the Canadian league will dish up a pretty fair article of ball to tickle the Gem City bugs, if the league eventually gains a foothold here.

"I don't know a whole lot about the league," he said last night, "but from what I have heard, they play a pretty decent brand of baseball in that Canuck circuit, and if all reports are true the fans will see some good games. But Erie's team will have to get away good and the first games will have to be snappy if the fans are to remain interested."

"Erie fans have been used to a high grade of baseball, that team we had last year could have given a hard battle to any International league club," interrupted Tom O'Connor.

"It will be worse than useless to place a team here if it isn't a good outfit and going well," resumed the former boss of the Erie Tars. "There are some good towns in the Canadian league and some good baseball heads are leading the teams. If the salary limit is right you will see baseball that will satisfy the fans, but if their limit is $1,400 exclusive of manager, it ought to be raised, for Erie fans have been used to seeing some well known players, and the Canadian league, as I understand it, caters to the younger players.

"I would like to have played in Erie again this season, but I haven't heard from Mr. O'Neill, who owns this franchise, and so I signed to manage the Terre Haute team."

The Whitby juniors have defaulted to Oshawa juniors, who thereby win the championship of O. H. A. group No. 3.

The Oshawa Intermediates will play their postponed game in Whitby Wednesday night.

Port Hope juniors today defaulted their home game with Kingston Frontenacs Thursday night. Frontenacs are the group champions.

The accident to "Gamey" Stratton, the Varsity junior, Saturday at the Arena, is the worst which has occurred in Toronto this year. Ingoldsby's skate cut the big muscle of Stratton's leg from side to side, and to the bone. Stratton fell and Ingoldsby fell over him. It took ten stitches to close the wound.

1500 FANS WILL BE IN CRITICAL MOOD TO-NIGHT

Petes Have Got to Show Them by Winning From Cobourg

GAME STARTS 8.30

It looks like a big night to-night. Cobourg Intermediates will be seen at Brock street rink, with the strongest team that can be brought from the lakeshore town. They gave the locals a battle royal in the first game and another hot argument may be expected from them to-night. Peterborough fans have always been assured of a good game with a seven from Cobourg on the battle line.

All the fans must know that the Petes must win. The unexpected happened at Belleville and it is now a case of look alive and get into the game. Careless playing by the locals to-night, will not be forgotten and the players evidently realize this situation, for those who were seen today, said as much.

GAMES IN THE MERCANTILE

C.G.E. Test Defeated the Bankers 3-2

EXAMINERS WON

The Toolroom Had Victory Against the De Laval by 4-2

The Mercantile League games last night in Brock Street Rink were one of the fastest sets of games handed out on that ice this season. Every game was fast and clean, which is indicated by the very small scores.

At eight o'clock when Referee Len Dobson called for the first game there was a delay of fifteen minutes caused by waiting for some of the Test players. The result was that the management of the club was fined $2.00 by the league and this money will have to be paid to the Secretary before they play again.

The Bankers gave the C. G. E. boys one awful go and it was hockey from the first face-off till the final gong. McCrostie put the money men ahead a few minutes after the game commenced by slamming a rebound past Dwyer. It was only a matter of a few seconds till "Nick" Carter evened it up. The game wore on for a few minutes with the score 1—1, and then Minorgan broke away and a score was the result. "Dick" Boone retaliated in an instant and for the last ten minutes of the first half the score stood 2—2. Immediately after half time the pace was terrific and only the good condition of the Test saved them from defeat. For a while it looked as though the game was going to end in a tie, but McDougall drove al fears away when he tore up centre ice and scored from close in. Although the Bankers had the puck around the Test goal, they could not beat Dwyer, and the game ended with them peppering "Red" for keeps.

Examiners 1, Plumbers 0.

There is something strange about it nevertheless it's true. The boys from the Examiner ably assisted by Cook of The Review, won their first victory of the season. The most striking feature of the win was the fact that their manager was not on hand. It was rumored he had been released, but it is to be hoped that such is not the case, and that any little trouble in The Examiner camps will blow over since they captured a game.

The boys deserved a win as they were on the aggressive all the time.

It was only a few minutes before full time that The Examiner's ran in their counter from a scrimmage in front of the nets. Clancy, Swanston and Lees were the pick of the newspaper men, while Reynolds was the shining light for the Plumbers.

Tool Room 4, De Laval 2

The last game of the evening between the Tool Room and De Laval resulted in a win for the former by a score of 4-2. The half time figures read 2-1 for the Tool Room.

The cause of the defeat for the De Laval was the ability of the Tool Room outfit to watch Pete Spratt.

THE LIGHTHOUSE.

The Sailor's Best Friend As It Is To-day.

Is a lighthouse a "revolving," an "occultating," or a "flashing" light? It is a very simple matter to determine. With a "revolving" light the illuminating beam seems to increase gradually in strength, and then die away into darkness.

An "occultating" light shows a steady beam of light, interrupted suddenly at regular intervals by short periods of total darkness. With occultating lights the period of illumination is always longer than the intervals of darkness.

"Flashing" lights are of two sorts. They may show a swift flash of light at regular intervals in the darkness, or they may give a steady light with frequent intervals of darkness. What makes a light a "flashing" light is that there is more dark than light, while with an occultating light there is more light than dark.

The correct word for a lighthouse's period of darkness is "eclipse."

Lights differ greatly in their strength. The Gt. Orme's Head light, for instance, beside Llandudno, is visible twenty-four miles off in clear weather. The Flamborough Head light shows for twenty-one miles, the Cromer light for twenty-three. The Cape Wrath light, looking out on the stormy water round the north of Scotland, shows clear for twenty-seven miles, the longest distance at which any British light can be seen. The Eddystone can be seen for seventeen.

Some of the newer fashions in lighthouses are very curious.

The great Cape Wrath lighthouse, for instance, is to be rebuilt. At present it stands on a mighty cliff four hundred feet above the sea, and is frequently hidden in fog. The new light will be a quarter of a mile further out on a low-lying storm-swept reef. The waters there are so dangerous that the usual steam-tender is out of the question.

So a great shaft is to be dug of the cliff-head. From the foot of this shaft a covered way of reinforced concrete will run out along the top of the reef to the new light, the gaps being crossed by steel girders enclosed in concrete to keep them from being eaten away by the spray. A lift at the land end and a narrow-gauge line for supplies will make the new Cape Wrath lighthouse the only one in the world with a tube of its own.

A new idea in lighthouses that has caught on greatly of recent years might be called that of the "fake" lighthouse. Its technical name is the "apparent" light. It is used for economy's sake, where a light is wanted on a dangerous sunken reef, and where the building of a proper lighthouse would be a very risky and a very expensive job.

A small size lighthouse is fitted up instead. But the lantern has no light of its own. It only collects and reflects by means of a mirror and lenses the powerful beams of a hidden light on shore.

A still newer idea that the Elder Brethren of Trinity House (the lighthouse authorities) are experimenting with is the use of wireless in time of fog. By the use of what is called the radiocompass bewildered ships can get their exact bearings by wireless messages from lighthouses.

Another new idea is submarine signalling. Sound signals, travel far better under water than over it. These submarine bells can be heard ten miles away in rough weather and twenty in smooth.

The bells are struck by powerful clappers being worked by electricity. As showing the spread of submarine signalling, it may be mentioned that eight years ago only one ship was provided with submarine ears, while now there are over nine hundred.

A ten per cent. pay increase for Cleveland hello girls, making an average weekly salary of $9, may send phones up there.

ROADS OF THE ROMANS.

How the Famous Highways of Antiquity Were Made.

If we had no other evidence than that afforded by the method of Roman road building we should be obliged to adopt the belief that that people at least were opposed to doing things in a superficial way. Compared with the roads built during the centuries immediately preceding and following the Roman era the best modern constructions are flimsy and temporary affairs. It is not necessary to resort to descriptions of contemporary writers to learn of the enduring character of Roman roads, for many of them, despite centuries of neglect, still exist in good condition.

A Roman road was built by digging ditches on either side, and then the whole loose surface earth was removed until a firm subsoil was reached, and when practical the stripping was to bedrock. If the ground was swarmy, piles were driven. On such a basis the road was built of several strata. First large stones were placed, then nine inches of still smaller stones, broken brick or pottery, bound together with cement, were laid and carefully smoothed, and over the pavement thus formed were laid flat blocks of stone, the hardest that could easily be obtained, which were nicely fitted to each other.

The cost of a road built along these lines would be prohibitive in these days. Opulent cities provide themselves with thoroughfares which equal the excellence of the best Roman roads, but there are few instances of road building in localities away from large centres of population which are remotely comparable with the best of antiquity.

NO PARTY POLITICS FOR THE TEMPERANCE ASS'N

Convention Speakers Give Their Opinions as to the Law Enforcement in This City—The Officers Elected

The convention of the County Association was brought to a close at the lecture hall of George Street Church, last night. The convention will not go into politics, it being decided to remain independent with the Dominion Alliance.

The officers were elected as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Joseph Taylor; Pres.—H. B. Cowan; vice Pres.—S. Armstrong, Indian River; G. A. Brethen, Norwood, and S. Carver, Peterboro; Secretary, Richard Lees, Peterboro; Treasurer, A. G. Kennedy, Lakefield.

Afternoon Session

In the course of the discussion on "New Business," Mr. G. W. Powell said that he thought there had been more drunkenness in the last two years than ever before, and he feared that the officials were not enforcing the law as they should. He believed that liquor stores were the curse of our city. He thought that the committee ought to take steps to enforce the law.

Mr. Peever said that it is a fact that there was a great deal of rowdyism and drunkenness on George St., as he lived on George St., the same as Mr. Powell.

Mr. Moss thought that the law was very loosely administrated in Peterboro, he thought that a Vigilance Committee ought to be appointed to see that the law was enforced.

Mr. A. B. Cunningham said that he was a Conservative in politics, but he was prepared to vote for Mr. Rowell or anyone else who would get rid of the three-fifths clause.

Mr. Cowan said that he would be glad if a committee could be formed and the Alliance would give it every support.

Mr. Cowan commended the proprietor of the Oriental Hotel for voluntarily doing away with the license and he believed that the business had not suffered thereby, and that it would considerably help, when they entered upon their next Local Option Campaign in the city. As to the future, Mr. Cowan thought that the next Provincial campaign would be on the temperance issue. The first step should be to get the officials of each party in the ridings to put temperance candidate in the field.

Alliance and Politics

Rev. Jas. Rollins led the discussion on the question as to whether the temperance alliance should go into politics. He said he would rather not speak upon the topic, as he had not been consulted and had not given the matter sufficient thought. He could not speak in any authoritative way. He had not studied as to what the parties had on in temperance. No party can go the country with one plank in the platform.

Not One Plank Only

A person should look at the whole platform and not merely one plank. No party is going to stay in power forever, and if we tie ourselves up to one party, when that party is out of power temperance legislation would be turned out.

He thought that they should as temperance people, try to get temperance legislation into Parliament apart from party issues. He was not enthusiastic to tying up the party, as when a party is turned out we are turned out.

Mr. Cunningham thought that going into politics was not necessarily going into party politics. He personally was tide up with the Rowell policy although he was a Conservative in politics. He would only hold to that party while they had the best policy. The day is past when it could be expected that a man should stick to his party through thick and thin. He thought that a section of the Liberal party adopt this policy, merely as a policy.

Mr. Armstrong said that he had been a party man all his life, he had been a Grit through and through. He knew of good temperance men who had denied their temperance principles for party considerations. He believed in party government.

The Independent Voter

Mr. Brethen of Norwood, believed in educating parties in the question of temperance legislation. He thought that the abolish the bar policy of Mr. Rowell was an advance but when you tie up to a party there is a danger of being flopped over. He believed it was the independent voter that was going to do the most good in temperance legislation.

Would Not Argue Politics

One delegate thought that if you do away with the bar you would have to do away with the liquor stores. He said he had made up his mind that he would not argue politics for five minutes.

Mr. Rollins wanted to know if they adopted the Rowell policy, they did not tie their hands in the matter of approaching members of the Conservative convention on any temperance issue.

Your Move First

Mr. Conners thought they should maintain their independence irresponsible of party and let the parties come to them.

Mr. Rollins thought that both parties should unite in the thing. We should have some one on both parties' conventions.

The conclusion of the discussion was that the policy of Dominion Alliance should be adopted by the Convention, and that they would do their best to carry it into effect.

GALICIAN SETTLEMENT IN ALBERTA CONTAINS 30,000

Their Homes, Nestling In the Half-Cleared Country Near Edmonton, Are Picturesque

Forty miles northeast of Edmonton, and extending many miles to the north and southeast of the north branch of the Saskatchewan river, lies a settlement of over thirty thousand Ruthenians, or Galicians, as they are often called. Naturally, such a large mass of people do and will play an important part in the politics of Alberta, says J. H. Hardy in Toronto Saturday Globe. Already the elections in several constituencies are swayed by their votes, and at the last provincial election one of these sent up to Parliament a member who was a Ruthenian by birth. Twenty years ago these people were brought out from Galicia, a province of Austria, bordering on Russia, where seven million of the same stock still live.

Fully one-half of the section of Canada now inhabited by them is still wooded; an abundance of small game, such as rabbits, prairie chicken, grouse, etc., lurk in the willows and second-growth poplar; deer are sometimes seen in the fields, and often in the evening the short, sharp "yap" of the coyote and the plaintive howl of the timber wolf may be heard in the distance. The picturesque thatched and whitewashed buildings of these people from central Europe nestle in the bush, surrounded by clearings of various sizes, to which they usually add a few acres each spring. The lack of engineering ability shown by the Galicians in respect to their roads is indeed surprising. They are not only primitive and rough, but almost as winding as an Indian trail. Instead of crossing a small pond or a mud hole, they usually make a wide detour in order to avoid the necessity of bridging the obstacle. Some of the best sections are still unbroken wastes, and on inquiry one finds that they are either school sections — that is, land set aside for educational purposes—C.P.R. or Hudson Bay Co. land. Farms are valued at from $10 to $15 per acre. The soil is a rich loam and yields well. The greatest enemy the farmer has is the early frost. As the Galicians say: "Dis counthry goot if not for frost. But frost, frost, all e time frost. Some time we haf no grain; fro.. take all; we haf to buy seed."

The Galicians have been in the west for only twenty years, and, as their settlement is to a great extent isolated from Canadian influence, they still retain many of their old customs. Though the men dress more or less like Canadians, the women still cling to their national headgear, which consists of a kerchief thrown over their heads and tied tightly under their chins. Footwear is deemed unnecessary in the summer months. Women work at all kinds of outdoor labor, and it is no uncommon thing to see a man and his wife, or "jinka," hoeing side by side. In the majority of homes the huge out-of-door earthen bake-ovens are still used for cooking; their ancestral well, a long pole suspended in mid-air, to the shorter and heavier end of which is attached ballast of some kind, to the other a pail, is still a familiar sight.

On approaching one of their dwellings, one is in dire danger of being torn to pieces by a pack of wolfish, hungry-looking dogs. Should he escape these and open the door, several chickens start out noisily under his feet, and he beholds an old hen and her brood nestling under the stove. In another corner a turkey is mothering her brood, and kittens are playing on the earthen floor. Young Galicians may be seen perched on the bed; three or four, unkempt and unwashed, cling to their mother's skirts and stare at the newcomer. The whole establishment reeks of a strong, peculiar "Russian" odor. If it is about meal time, the home-made table is freighted with an unlimited supply of hard-boiled eggs, some brown rye or barley bread, and a copious supply of murky tea. The most noticeable feature of the dwelling and its occupants is the lack of cleanliness everywhere in evidence.

Though hospitable to a stranger, in their dealings with each other they display remarkable shrewdness and thrift. A neighboring physician narrates a good story relating to this side of the Galician character. On one occasion a Ruthenian's wife lay very sick. Not wishing to leave her alone while he took the trail to the doctor's, the husband requested a neighbor's wife to stay with her. The neighbor, however, first drove a bargain and was paid a sum which she regarded as adequate for the time she lost staying with the sick neighbor. It is said that the Galicians even levy toll for giving a neighbor a ride, but the writer cannot vouch for the truth of this statement. Business men attest that they are fairly honest, but all alike agree that if a "Russian" does not pay cash, but informs you he will pay on a certain day, it may be assumed he has no intention of keeping his promise.

Religion plays an important part in the lives of this simple people, as the church supplies not only their religious but also their social life. All their holidays and festive occasions are "holy days," days sacred to some of their numerous saints. On these days all work comes to a standstill, and children who on less auspicious occasions remain at home then invade the schools. The most bitter feeling exists between their two religious factions, "the Orthodox," who acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope, and the Greek Catholic Church, or "Juniats," who do not.

FISHING CONTEST

For the last few years the well known sporting men's magazine, "Field and Stream," New York, have carried on a fishing contest open to anglers in North America. The competition in this contest was very keen and many of the best prizes have been secured by sportsmen and tourists who have fished in Canada. The winner of the grand prize for lake trout caught his fish in Ragged Lake, Algonquin Provincial Park, of Ontario. The fish measured 33 inches in length, 17 inches in girth, and weighed 17 lbs. It was caught by Dr. Skinner, Guelph, Ont.

The ladies' grand prize for maskinonge was won for a fish caught near Stanley Island on the St. Lawrence River, a short distance from Brockville, Ont.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE M.H.O.

"I suppose you will have to have an increase also," remarked Ald. Duncan to Dr. McPherson.

The present salary of the inspector is $700, while that of the M.H.O. is $800.

The subject of combining the offices of the plumbing and sanitary was discussed, but the Mayor was of the opinion that a practical man was the most satisfactory for the position of plumbing inspector.

Ald. Duncan spoke of the good work of the Inspector and M.H.O. during their term. He was of the opinion that the incinerator should also come under the supervision of the inspector.

Mayor Buller threw cold water on the discussion by announcing they had better wait and look into matters before supporting any increases.

"Go easy on this expense, was the strong opinion expressed by the Mayor at the reading of the reports. You will chase the people to the rural districts. There are reasonable and unreasonable things. I certainly don't see anything in this bottle business," he concluded.

The report of the Queen Mary Hospital was very satisfactory, as presented by the M.H.O.

The subject of recommendations again cropped up and was pounced upon by the Mayor, who said there was no use going crazy over these fads.

The report of the M.H.O. was ordered to be sent to the Provincial Board with the object of the Mayor noted.

This was done in accordance with his Worship's suggestion, who remarked that if the report was sent in without any comments upon it, the other Boards would take it that the various recommendations were to be accepted.

The Chairman suggested that a Central Bottling system in the city would be a good idea. Thi milk men could take their milk from this point and this would cut down the expense. "What we want to do is to give the milk to the people at a mere cost," concluded the Chairman.

Another suggestion made by Dr. Amys was that it would be more economical to have the various departments in one laboratory. Both the M.H.O. and Ald. Duncan expressed themselves as being in favor of this suggestion.

The system of giving away free medicine was explained to the Mayor also to the Board, the M.H.O.

An apron made with a bib of table oilcloth is a great saver to wear when washing dishes.

If grease is well rubbed on the stove before polishing the polish will not burn off so quickly.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

LET'S GO TO CHINA.

To the Editor of The Review.

Dear Sir,—The newspapers seem to take it for granted all over the Dominion that the Quebec revelations are true. It is the grand climax of rottenness in a country that does not seem to judge by the Farmers' Bank, etc., etc., to know the difference between rottenness and cleanness. The people are fed on low ideals. They are told everywhere that business is business and they do not seem capable of understanding the necessity of being honest. Hooray for China. Any old country is better than this it would seem.

Yours,
Right O.

CHARITY BOARD IN SESSION

Will Not Pay for Upkeep of Albert Standing.

No action was taken in the matter of the city paying for the upkeep of an inmate of the Protestant Home named Albert Standing, by the Charity Board, last evening. Standing was sent here under rather strang circumstances a few months ago, by Dr. Bruce Smith. No satisfaction could be obtained from the Provincial department regarding this man so the Home communicated with the Charity Board.

The balance of the Board is $144.22. City Relief Officer Miller reported on the number of cases supplied with groceries, wood and other necessities of life.

The matter of giving a ticket to a daughter of a Mrs. Longdo for Michigan, was left in the hands of the Relief Officer. The mother and one daughter had tickets but were without a third ticket.

The Salvation Army were granted $2 a week for the care of Jas. Wilson.

One Law Against It.

"There ought to be a law against aviation," said the humane citizen.

"There is one," replied the cold blooded man. "The law of gravitation is continually interfering with it."

Costly Magazines.

The new high explosive magazines on the Gosport side of Portsmouth Harbor, which are protected against bomb-dropping, have been taken over by the Admiralty. The cost $500,000 to construct.

However, last year's total was $4,702,439 greater than any other previous total, so that the result for the year is satisfactory. LEGAL PHANTOMS.

Many Statutes That Exist Only In the Imagination.

EXAMPLES OF "NO SUCH LAW"

Popular Beliefs Which Have Sprung Up, No One Knows How, and Become Fixed Ideas, Yet Have No Foundation In Legislative Enactments.

Many people have the idea that if one owes a bill and goes to his debtor and tells him that he is willing to pay and then offers some trifling sum on account, say $1 or even less per week or month, the creditor is obliged to take it, utterly regardless of the fact that if creditors were obliged to receive payment in that way it would put most of them out of business in a very short period.

There is no such law.

In the minds of very many people, especially in the country districts, there is another firmly fixed idea that if one person strikes another first the person assaulted may then all but pound the other to death.

There is no such law.

A person assaulted has the right to defend himself, but he may not use any more force than necessary to do that. To use more than necessary force completely turns the tables, and the assaulted becomes the aggressor and liable for his excess of zeal in damages commensurate with the damage done. A person has the right to order an undesirable person from his premises and to use sufficient force to eject him if he does not go when so ordered, but he has no right to accelerate his movements with one or more well placed kicks.

Many people who owe bills labor under a strong impression that it is the duty of their creditors to come to them for their money.

There is no such law.

There is a proverb which says, "The borrower is servant to the lender." The bank will not come to you if you owe a note which it holds for collection. Out of courtesy it will send you a notice that your note is due (it is not compelled to do that), but you must go to the bank to make payment.

In the country frequently and in the city sometimes one is told that, if a person dies leaving children and grandchildren, the children of a deceased child, the grandchildren, are not entitled to the share of the estate which their parent would have taken, as the father or mother having died there is no way whereby the inheritance can pass over from the deceased to the grandchildren—in other words, the line is broken.

There is no such law.

The statutes expressly provide that the children of deceased heirs take the share that would have gone to their parent.

A person owns a fruit tree and its branches overhang the land of his neighbor. Many think because of that the neighbor is entitled to the fruit on the overhanging branches.

There is no such law.

If the tree sat upon the line between the estates the neighbor would be entitled to one-half of the fruit, but being wholly on one side the owner is entitled to all the fruit and may go upon his neighbor's land and gather it without being guilty of trespass. If the neighbor does not like this arrangement he may take his ax or saw and cut the limbs off at the line between the estates, but he must throw them on his neighbor's land, as the wood of the tree belongs to him. The owner of the tree may not like to have his tree treated thus, but he cannot help himself.

Two men own adjacent lots of land. One wishes to have a fence between them; the other does not. Many people think that one may build the fence and compel the other to pay for half of it.

There is no such law.

In such a case one owner may call in the fence viewers and have them ascertain the line and designate which part of the fence each shall build. Neither party, however, can compel the other to build any particular style of fence. The mover in the matter may want a fancy fence, but the other may build his half of any material satisfactory to himself, and so long as it is a legal fence he cannot be compelled to build any other.

Many shopkeepers demand that finders of lost money or valuables in their stores shall deliver them over to them, as they own the articles because they were found on their premises.

There is no such law.

The finder of money or other valuables on the floor outside the counter in a store is the owner of the same against the whole world except the loser, but it has been held that if the owner left the money or goods upon the counter or on a table in the store they were practically in the care of the storekeeper and he had the right to their custody, while he could not make such a claim to goods which were found on the floor.—Boston Globe.

Young, Inexpert Fish.

Tommy, new to the country, went fishing in the creek with Luke, the hired man. Tommy returned in the late hours in true fisherman's style, empty handed, but with an excuse.

"It wasn't our fault," he said. "We had some bites and got three fish right up into the air, but they were little ones and didn't know how to hold on."

THE TOBOGGAN SLIDE AT JACKSON PARK

CARLYLE AND CABBY.

How the Medical Students Tricked the Jehu Into Losing a Patron.

The famous Dumfriesian was a favorite with jehus in several towns. Of all the literary celebrities of the last century few were better known to London drivers. For some years the philosopher engaged a particular man from the rank and insisted on having no other. The "whip," however, "put his foot in it," and lost the sage's custom in a singular manner.

A number of medical students getting to know of his preference for this particular man, and finding the driver inquired if he knew who his regular fare was. On receiving a reply in the negative the students informed him that he was one of the most famous and eccentric authors of the day. They then gave him a book with the advice to have it open and to appear to be reading whenever he approached the rank.

The cabman, without any suspicion of a trick, acted on their advice and kept a good look-out for the prophet, and seemed to be deeply engrossed in the pages of a pretentious volume when he came along the cab rank.

"Hillo, what's that 'er readin', man?" inquired Carlyle critically. "A most hout-an'-hout, tip-top, splendid book about that er- bloomin' French Revolushun," was cabby's gushing reply.

"Eh! What dae 'e say? Will 'e show it to me?" said the famous fare as he held out his hand. "Oh, certainly, sir," and the driver put an edition of his own "History of the Revolution" into his hand.

"Well, ma man," said Carlyle, after turning over the volume, and with apparent delight, "are 'e sure that 'er readin' this work intelligently?" Pulling himself up and with an air of great confidence, the man replied, "O, certainly, sir." Then, thinking that he ought to say something in praise of the book, he added, "Why, sir, it's halmost as good as 'The Newgate Calender'."

The grim old Ecclefechanite glared at the cabby, fixed him with a look that he never forgot, and after grunting something, turned abruptly on his heel and engaged the next cab.

The driver got time to repent of his folly, and was often like to "eat his fingers off" for having been led into such a trap. Carlyle would not even look at him afterwards, but stuck to his second man, who had had the honor of driving some of the most distinguished men of the day.

Cabby number one had something emphatic to say to the budding doctors when they came along to learn the result of their suggestion. His "langwidge" wasna canny.—G. M. R., in Border Magazine.

Woman's Influence.

It is at the foot of woman we lay the laurels that without her smile would never have been gained. It is her image that strings the lyre of the poet, that animates the voice in the blaze of eloquent faction and guides the brain in the august toils of stately counsel. Whatever may be the lot of man, however unfortunate, however oppressed, if he only love and be loved, he must strike a balance in favor of existence, for love can illumine the dark roof of poverty and lighten the fetters of the slave.—Disraeli.

Ringless Weddings.

A wedding without a ring seems incongruous, but in some parts of Spain no ring is used. After the ceremony the bridegroom moves the flower in his bride's hair from left to right, for in those districts to wear a rose above your right ear is to proclaim yourself a wife.

Soothing the Bride.

"I told Maud that Jack was simply crazy to marry her, and she took offense."

"Why was that?"

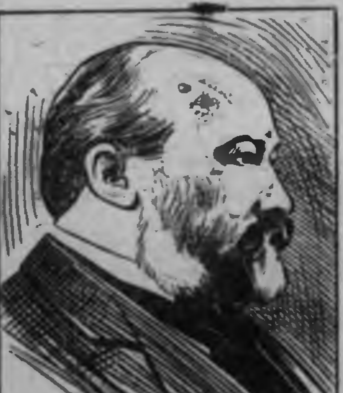
"Don't know, unless it was that when I said it they had just been married."—Boston Transcript.

VAN HORNE IS AN ARTIST IN A SECRETIVE SORT OF WAY

The Breakfast Room of His Sherbrooke Street Residence in Montreal is His "Chamber of Horrors," As He Calls It, Because There He Hangs the Pictures He Paints in the Small Hours of the Morning

Every Canadian has heard of Sir William Van Horne and the Canadian Pacific. Both the man and his work have long been accepted with that same customary complacence with which we accept all great things from sun-down on the Laurentian Hills, to the British North America Act. Further many Canadians also associate Sir William's name with a cigar. Moreover, there are a few, who know that he built as a pastime a railway through Cuba; and a few others, perhaps, recognize him as a great agriculturist, an owner of tobacco and sugar plantations, and an architect. But how many know that this familiar face is the face also of an artist, that Sir William is also a great painter?

Yet so it is. All his intimates, no doubt, know his wonderful art collection on Sherbrooke street, Montreal; but not even all of them know, that Sir William paints himself, and that he is never happier than when he has a paint brush in hand. In such a myriad-sided life as his one may well wonder when he finds the time to accomplish his pictures.



SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE.

"It is not," he said, "until everyone except myself has gone to bed, that I can begin to paint and then I go on until the early hours of the morning. But come, if you must, and look at my chamber of horrors."

The chamber of horrors is the breakfast room of his Sherbrooke street residence. It has acquired this name from Sir William himself because it is hung with his own pictures—which he calls quite without cause—his horrors. As Sir William explained, his own works are kept in this room, so that the rest of the house might be free of them. Yet looking around one in this room, there was no doubt in one's mind that if the Canadian Pacific bust up, if Sir William's various farms failed him, he could still earn a living and a very good living, too, as a painter.

Indeed if one is anxious to solve the riddle of this wizard of the railway world, perhaps there is no room in all his magnificent Montreal mansion which will so help you to arrive at a conclusion, as this breakfast room of his, hung with his own paintings. The rest of the house is full of the wonderful paintings, curios, tapestries, rugs, lacquerware, precious woods and stones, models of Viking dragon ships, and Spanish galleons, and lateens from Venice, strange books, and Japanese weapons, and old world statues; but it only expresses one part of the man, the sumptuous tastes of an artistic merchant prince. But here, in the room, hung with his own paintings, you have certain clues before you, which, if patiently followed up, will lead you to discover those forces which have made this man the great man he is.

First of all, there is a touch of Bohemian in him. His own personal appearance, the arrangement of his collar do not worry him. Secondly he has the sublime faculty of burying himself in his work. Then he can understand, realize and say in half an hour, what an average man would spend a year over. Further he speaks once and for all. He speaks so that he has no need to retract anything, for he has understood everything before he speaks. His mind once made up he goes straight to the point. There is no loitering for him. The faculty of clear vision, concentration, incisiveness and intuition have made him Sir William Van Horne, as they have also made him a painter.

For think of the concentration that must be necessary for a man after a strenuous day to sit down in his studio, after everyone else has gone to bed, to paint. Remember he generally finishes a picture at a single sitting.

"How long does one of these horrors take me? Generally a sitting. For I always have to say what I have to say at once. I don't like going back to the same thing twice. Perhaps sometimes, however, I'll add a few touches here and there to bring out my idea."

"Was I ever taught painting? Oh, dear me, no!"

"No. I don't have time to paint from nature. I let an impression soak in and later on when I am in the mood I'll paint it out. Look at that picture over there. That is my farm at Selkirk, Manitoba, I painted it here from memory in Montreal. And there's an impression of the Dominion Iron & Steel Works at Sydney, N.S. That is how it appeared to me by night. Look at the reflections on the water."

"Oh, no, it doesn't take long. That three-footer over there was done under the hour. It's dreadful—isn't it."

Made Room For Somerset.

Some people would ascribe the old history of Somerset House to its association with sacrilege. To make room for the great home he planned for himself, the Duke of Somerset cleared away the palaces of the Bishops of Worcester and Chester. He pulled down the church which stood on the present site of St. Mary-le-Strand, in order to secure building materials, and further he demolished the cloister on the north side of old St. Paul's Cathedral, so that he might use the stones for the erection of his mansion. But there is a modern touch in that opposite Somerset House was the first stand for hackney coaches in London.—London Daily Chronicle.

Origin of Name.

A correspondent signifies gratitude for the information that the Australian mining town of, Bendigo was named after the prize-fighter, confessing that he has always had a hazy belief that the man was an Australian who took his name from the place. The topsy-turviness is more venial, perhaps, than that of the lady Imperialist who thought Lord Melbourne set such a good example by taking his title from the capital of Victoria. It would only be going one better to imagine that the Queen was named after the colony. — London Daily Chronicle.

HOMES OF THE SYRIANS.

Where It Is Little Trouble to "Take Up Thy Bed and Walk."

On the right as you enter the house stands a small structure of sun dried brick, called mekhdaah. It is about five feet high, six feet long and a foot deep. On the inner side it is divided into openings of different sizes and serves the cosmopolitan purpose of a china closet, kettle cupboard, a place for father's Turkish pipe (nargile) and tobacco and whatever other little articles it may be convenient for the moment to thrust into it.

The maukedah (fireplace) is at the forward end of this structure. It is such a fireplace as you would build at a picnic—square, open at the top for the kettle to set in and at one side to admit the fuel. It is built of clay mixed with straw and fine quartz. There is no chimney. The smoke floats in the house with the sufferance of public opinion. The ceiling is black and shining, as if it had been varnished. The earthen floor is painted frequently with red mud and rubbed with a smooth stone until it shines. It is furnished with straw mats, cushions and in the winter season soft and fluffy sheepskins.

There are no chairs, no bedsteads. The family sit and sleep on the floor. The bed consists of a thick cushion for a mattress, stuffed with wool or cotton, a pillow of the same material and a quilt for a cover. So when Jesus said to the man he had healed, "Arise, take up thy bed and walk," the man did not have very much to carry. In the daytime the beds are either rolled up, each one, in a heap and left on the floor next to the wall or put in a recess in the wall, constructed for the purpose.—Atlantic Monthly.

TACT OF EUGENIE.

Diplomacy of the French Empress on a Question of Dress.

A curious instance of the diplomatic methods of the ex-Empress Eugenie is worth recalling.

When Queen Victoria, Prince Albert and the princess royal were about to visit Napoleon III, and the Empress Eugenie it was feared at the French court that the young princess royal would not be dressed in a style that would harmonize with French taste. The question was how to beguile her royal parents into dressing the child in a suitable manner.

In this difficulty the empress had a really brilliant idea. The height and other measurements of the princess royal were obtained and a doll of exactly the same size procured. The doll was provided with a large and exquisitely finished trousseau, and it was then dispatched to Buckingham palace as an imperial gift to the princess.

The expected happened. Queen Victoria, enchanted with the doll's wardrobe, transferred most of the outer garments to her daughter for use during their visit to the emperor and empress. The result was that the princess appeared at her best, and everybody was pleased!—London Spectator.

Nicknames for Fighters.

There was a time when nearly every prominent prize-fighter had a nickname more generally used by admirers than his real name, and some of these were picturesque. William Perry, a famous fighter of early Victorian days, was "the Tipton Slasher." William Thompson, who won the championship in 1835, was known as Bendigo. The Australian mining town was named after him, and although some of the inhabitants managed to have it rechristened Sandhurst, the new name never caught on. Other nicknames borne by heroes of the ring were "the Gasman," the Sailor Boy," "the Chelsea Snob," "the Bold Smuggler," "the Great Gun of Windsor," and "the Pride of Westminster."—London Daily Chronicle

STAGE GHOST.

Interesting Facts About the Making of Theatrical Spooks.

Although the ghost is no longer the main feature and attraction of stage representation, as it was fifty or sixty years ago, it is still an important character, said the manager of a London (Eng.) theatre the other day. In very small theatres where stage mechanics are conspicuous by their absence, ghosts are often as solid and unrealistic as they were in the days of John Kemble and Mrs. Jordan, and it is not unusual for the ghost of Hamlet's father to be attired in a suit of real armour. One such "apparition" tripped up while coming on the stage, and, falling down with a very metallic thud, rolled slowly towards the footlights, causing a spectator to shriek out, "Old iron!"

The spooks that haunt the London stages to-day are fairly "realistic," and when Sir Herbert Tree produced "Macbeth" at His Majesty's Theatre the other year he gave his audience ghosts which were really vaporous and unearthly, gliding, transparent, mysterious. Macbeth wilted in terror at the appearance of Banquo's spook, and everyone declared that the entrance and general "get-up" of this member of the spirit world was the most ingenious and impressive ever seen at a theatre.

I think it was Charles Kean who first resorted to illusion to make a stage ghost a little transparent. When he produced "Macbeth" at the old Princess's Theatre, he manufactured a contrivance which allowed Banquo's ghost to appear through a transparent column.

Later on, when Mrs. Ann Radcliffe's "Romance of the Forest" was staged at Covent Garden Theatre, those responsible for its production arranged that the spook in the piece should be seen by the audience through a gauze of bluish-grey color, so that the too corporeal effect of a live actor might be removed. Follet, the clown, "celebrated for his eating of carrots in the pantomimes," was the shade, and he wore a closely-fitting suit of grey material, sewn together in the form of armor, and in this he floated across the stage like a shadow behind a sheet of gauze, much to the delight of the spectators.

When the old playhouse in Drury Lane opened, in 1794, with a performance of "Macbeth," Banquo's ghost was omitted. Although Mr. Kemble's acting was fine enough to make the audience almost believe that they really did see the ghost, the people were not satisfied until the system they had been used to was re-adopted, and Banquo's shade allowed to trot bodily across the boards. In those days theatre-goers would have a spectre, notwithstanding that the spectre was a "super," in a white sheet with a streak of red paint on his brow, who thrust himself through a trap-door or rose from behind a card-board tomb when a blow was struck upon a tin can and a spoonful of blue fire ignited in the wings.

Reflecting mirrors and the cinematograph are coming in general use at the theatres, and with them it has been found possible to manufacture ghosts capable of striking terror into the hearts of all followers of the occult. It is interesting to know that at the Autrion Theatre, in Paris, when Gerald Hauptmann's "Hannele" was acted, in which the men are spirits seen by a dying child, all the phantoms were the reflections of actors cast from mirrors behind the stage on to the bed. In much the same way the ghosts in "Richard III." have been brought into being. Quite an assembly of apparitions are supposed to rise up and address themselves alternately to Richard and to Richmond. The spirits of Prince Edward, Henry VI., Clarence, Rivers, Grey, Vaughan, Hastings, the two young Princes, Queen Anne, and Buckingham have to denounce with curses the tyrant and bless his opponent.

Edmonton has $16,000,000 invested in its municipal street railway system.

SACRED LAKE IN OLD BOLIVA

Over a Billion In Treasure Said to Be Sunk In Its Muddy Bed.

Legend has it that for more than 500 years the lake of Guativita, at an elevation of 10,000 feet in Bolivia, has not only been held sacred to the gods of the Indian tribes, but into its waters the natives, with solemn ceremony, used to cast their gold and silver ornaments, gems and other valuables as an offering to propitiate the evil spirits. It has been estimated that in this manner treasure to the amount of $1,500,000,000 found its way to the bottom of the lake.

Many attempts were made to recover the treasure. The first was by the Spaniards 250 years ago. They tried to drain off the waters of the lake, but their engineering skill was not equal to the task. When they had drawn off all but ten feet of the water they were compelled to give up their project and take to dredging instead. They did succeed in recovering a small part of the treasure in this way.

The most modern attempt was made twenty years ago by a company of Colombians and Englishmen. By digging a tunnel 1,100 feet long down the side of the mountain they succeeded in draining the lake, but then they found to their dismay, instead of a clear bottom, twenty-five feet of mud covering the treasure. In all this company spent $75,000 and recovered but $10,000 worth of gold and jewels before they, too, abandoned the search.—Argonaut.

Japanese Fashions.

A Japanese woman of fashion is by no means a drain on her husband's finances. The cost of her wearing apparel is very small indeed when compared to her sister of the occident. She wears $13.80 worth of clothing under her kimono, the latter costing about $25. The obi costs another $25. Numerous tying paraphernalia sum up to $17.25, and a set of footwear amounts to about $9. Combs and hairpins ornamented with gems cost $245, a shawl $7.50, a diamond neck clasp $150, a total of a little more than $900 for a season. This is a very modest outlay when compared to the enormous cost of apparel for the woman of fashion in New York and Paris.—New York Sun.

A Lesson in Spelling.

The lawyer was Scotch, and the judge was English. The case in argument concerned certain water rights, and the lawyer had frequently to use the word "water," which he pronounced very broad.

"Mr. So-and-so," at last interrupted the judge, "do you spell water with two t's in your country?"

"Na, na, my lord," quickly retorted the lawyer, "but we spell manners wi' twa n's!"

It is predicted that Western yellow pine will furnish an excellent source of turpentine as the Southern pine becomes exhausted.

MR. BURNHAM'S FINE SPEECH IN THE HOUSE IN DEBATE ON SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

In the debate on the speech from the Throne at the opening of the Dominion Parliament, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., made a very effective speech and the following report of his remarks are taken from Hansard:

"I am sure it will be a cause of astonishment that I rise at this juncture but it is not altogether my fault. It arises, I presume from a desire on the part of some people to take advantage of this hour in the evening to take a nap. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, in opening, that I should like to join my humble voice in the congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the Address for the manner in which they carried out that pleasant duty. The strength of argument, the breadth of view, the fluency and finish of their diction, excited general admiration. It is a great pleasure to see that the Government benches can do something of which the Opposition approve. We all wish to join our voices also in the universal praise of the pluck displayed by Her Excellency after her severe ordeal of illness in returning to preside in Canada. It is very gratifying to us to find that the Opposition unite with us in discering the good qualities, the very brilliant qualities, of the new Solicitor-General (Mr. Meighen.)

"I cannot understand why so much time is wasted by the Opposition in denouncing the statements made by their own provincial Prime Minister. We are told that, through the inaction or mistaken action, the ignorance or otherwise of the Conservative Government, Canada has failed to measure up to the standard as she should have done; and yet in the face of that, in the face of the great problem a country like this has before it, we have the universal testimony of the provincial Prime Ministers, that Canada is exceedingly prosperous. Logically what justification can there be for taking a fling at the conditions in this country at the present time? I think I may safely say, without being considered impertinent, that it is not only illogical and inconsistent, but distinctly improper to fly in the face of the provincial Minister, who is the best exponent of local conditions. Are we to suppose for one moment that the Prime Minister of Alberta or the Prime Minister of Saskatchewan, is anxious to place a feather in the cap of the Conservative Government at Ottawa? We know that he is more likely—being human and a Liberal—to minimize the conditions in Alberta and Saskatchewan than to magnify them. We must surely be allowed to rely upon the statements made by these men, and we do rely upon them more than upon the statements of those whose duty it is to find fault and endeavor to resume their places on the treasury benches where they committed homicide by misadventure in 1911.

"It must be remembered that the Naval or Imperial policy of the Conservative Government springs from the fact that first and foremost—first, last and all the time—they desire to remain within the British Empire. The weakness of the Conservative position unquestionably is—admittedly is—that $35,000,000 or thereabouts will be expended, to a certain extent outside the country. It it admitted that half of that, under the divine management of the Liberals, would have to be spent out of the country, because they simply could not build all portions of their navy here. I confess that is the weakness of our position; we do not say—or I presume we do not—that our position at all points is invincibly strong; we do say that, in comparison with anything that has been suggested our position is incomparably strong. But, who wants to embark upon a great military policy such as the Liberal party is? Who wants to unfurl the Canadian flag of practical, if not nominal, independence, and sail the seas provoking conflict and disaster? The Liberals are either sincere or insincere. If they are insincere we do not wish to have anything more to do with them, not does the country. But if they are sincere, then they propose to develop a policy which would place us alongside of such nations as Germany and France, who are now making a mad rush to complete a naval policy such as will be suitable to their station. I am told that Canada must do likewise. Now there is no force in the argument of building a tin pot navy. There is no such idea on the part of Liberals. Their desire is to build and develop a great naval force. I am free to acknowledge that while that is an exceedingly extravagant and unwise proposition, I am sufficiently imperialistic and sufficiently loyal to wish to adopt that plan rather than nothing at all. But we find no reciprocity of spirit exhibited by our friends. They will not have the Conservatice policy and, not having that policy, they will throw down their arms and wreck the whole scheme; they will sneer at emergencies and let everything, to use a common phrase, go to the devil. We are not like that. If these gentlemen were on the Treasury benches we might disapprove of their policy and say we had a much better one, but we are not so narrow, so stupid, so unloyal, if I may not use the word disloyal—so unloyal, so entirely anti-imperialistic, as to decline to do anything to help the empire which we are supposed to adorn, if we cannot have our own way. It is well to talk about sheep and cattle, but we had better see if we cannot develop some sort of a manly spirit as well. What kind of an education did they give in Newcastle to the Leviathan of Alberta? Is it absolutely impossible for us to develop an independent spirit, a loftiness of conception, along with the material advantages of the world? Has the hon. gentleman never heard of Athens? Does he not know that twenty-five hundred years ago there was developed the spirit of freedom, of independence, of philosophy and of science the like of which the world has never seen? The whole history of Athens simply teems with the spirit displayed by her people. Many and many a time she might have sacrificed herself to material advantage, but she preferred to bequeath to posterity a noble name and a noble example. This we should never forget. Canada is in danger of becoming very materialistic. From one end of this country to the other we hear talk about free food, about dear food, about the high cost of living, and about the tango. That is all that is going on in the country now. Theories of Government are not being worked out; they are not working themselvs out, and the Liberal politicians will not allow them to be worked out. The hon. member for Red Deer is deluded by baits; he sees a fish flashing by, with sparkling scales, straightway, makes a bite at it. He would say: 'Why do you seek fish in the South Sea, when you can get them right here? He has no broad conception of things. The evolution of government has brought us to the time when the freedom of the people allows them and prompts them to manage their own business, but, strange to say, there are so many anomalies in the twentieth century, and we are now confronted with a vicious paradox. Over-supply produces scarcity; over-production produces starvation, and surplus of material produces stringency. It would be difficult indeed to unearth anything more absurd than this illogical point. Why is it that we do not set ourselves to find out why these things are so? Is it that we must devote ourselves to something sentimental: to some esoteric theory such as free trade which exists only in the imagination of the hon. member for Red Deer, the gentleman who voted for our bounties? He despises tariffs, yet he overlooked the tariff which collects money for the public treasury and voted for bounties that put money into the private pockets of individuals."

Mr. Michael Clark: I rise to a point of order. If my hon. friend is stating this as a fact, I may say that I have never conspicuously voted for the imposition of a tariff or the payment of a bounty. I do not think my hon. friend has the information as to when I gave such a vote.

Mr. Burnham: "I do not wish to be in the slightest degree inaccurate, and I was particular to make my assertion when the hon. member was present. I refused to vote for the lead bounty last year, but the hon. gentleman, on one occasion at least, I think, voted for it. If, however, he did not vote for it, if I am not misinformed, he certaininy spoke in favor of it."

Mr. Michael Clark: "I rise again to correct my hon. friend. I made as good a speech as ever I could against it."

Mr. Burnham: "All I have to say, then, is that I am utterly unable to understand the English language as spoken by the hon. member for Red Deer. I could a tale unfold, but I will not unfold it. However, as the hon. gentleman said in the course of his fine speech that he has a conscience, I will leave the matter with that conscience.

"No branch of industry, and I must be excused for being, perhaps, a little irrelevant — could possibly thrive if it were not given proper attention; if the stock were not taken and a balance struck; if there were not some intimate control and supervision exercised in regard to it. And yet, notwithstanding the fact that this House and the people generally and concerned most intimately with everything that takes place in this country, they are reproached in the most scathing language by the hon. member for Red Deer for failing to know all about the conditions of industry in Canada. He reproaches us with our ignorance, but would not allow us a commission which would find out why we do not know these things. And yet he says we are inconsistent. There are some very striking passages in the hon. gentleman's address, but I would direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to this fact, that whilst government ownership and government control, that is to say, public ownership and public control, are spreading the world over, there seems a haphazard condition here, so that they are neither one thing nor the other, and we are confronted with that extraordinary fact that we decline to provide a decent living wage for the working man, and yet demand that he shall live in a decent manner. We also decline to deal with the problem of unemployment and wonder that a starving man is inclined to strike. The injustice is done on both sides. We fail to regulate and provide for the employer those peaceful conditions which would enable him to develop his industry and we decline to provide conditions which only a government can provide for employees which will enable them to provide for the present and for the future in some respectable and certain manner. These things of course are extremely obvious. Books galore may be written upon them. Every president of every university in the world has written a book or two last year upon that subject. Every man of prominence in every government has dealt with the question. Commissions have found out causes and commissions have failed to find out causes, and yet here we are in Canada, industrious as we are, painstaking as we are, capable as we are—and I think I may be forgiven for saying so—and yet we are not endeavoring to bend our energy to the solution of the most obvious and most pressing problems. It is useless to say that free trade is a powerful or effectual buttress against such a thing as the unduly high cost of living. It is admitted by the very speaker who lauds free trade in this connection that it has not had the effect of lowering or preserving the cost of living in Great Britain. That cost has risen by fifteen per cent. or thereabouts. Well, all we can say about that is that it is not a question between free trade and protection. It is a question of comparative effect of economic policies under the conditions that exist. It is idle to suppose or to assert that the logical conclusion is that one is right and the other is wrong because they are diametrically opposed when, as a matter of fact, they both run in the same groove. We must be consistent. There is no use listening to great statesmen and the enunciation of tremendous principles if those propositions and the enunciation of them do not bear out the conclusions.

"I would like to deal just for a moment with one or two statements made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). He scoffed at an emergency. Are we to understand that there is no emergency in the British Government at this minute over the navy question. I do not wish to meddle in other people's affairs, but the cables all tell us that at this present moment Great Britain is convulsed with an emergency and yet, because the hon. member for Red Deer has not had it proved to him in black and white so that everybody would laugh at him if he did not admit it, he will not provide for an emergency, he will do nothing, he will throw his arms down and let it all go. He follows only too well the motto of the free traders, laissez faire, let everything go, let well enough alone, that is what that means. There are 4,500 millionaires by the last census in Great Britain, and who has the audacity to tell us there is no poverty there? Why are people fleeing from Great Britain? If the people are leaving this country as they are leaving Great Britain wages would be high and there would be no unemployed; but the fact is they are leaving Great Britain in such tremendous numbers that they themselves consider it a reproach that the people should leave Great Britain for another country under the conditions. It is not fair to argue in that way, it is inaccurate.

One half of the magnificent speech of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) referred to the very bad business of the Prime Minister in calling the House on the 15th of January instead of the 15th of October. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) knocked that all on the head in one minute but all I can say is that if the Opposition are going on like this, fighting each other in mortal combat, we will have to put a ring around them and charge an admission fee. Strange to say in criticising the Highways Bill the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), admitted that five-sixths of the Bill was perfect, five clauses out of six were all right, the Senate admitted that. The sixth clause, which refers to the administration of funds under the Bill being apparently the key to the position and referring to what the hon. member considered possibly a political advantage, was so distasteful to him and to the Senate that they decided to throw it out. That is to say, rather than undergo a political advantage they would throw the material advantages of the people of this country to the four winds of Heaven. Are they aware that this Government is not responsible to the Senate? This is not oligarchial government, notwithstanding the fact that they are trying to make it so; we have still popular government in Canada, and if the government passes a bill against which the Opposition think it their duty to make a protest and preserve their position without prejudice if they like; then, when this Government go to the country on this record, if the people disapprove they will turn the Government out. But the hon. gentleman opposite knew that the people would not disapprove and that is the reason why they burked that Bill. If that Bill meant that the Government were committing suicide, does anybody tell me that the hon. gentleman opposite would not have provided a halter? Not at all, they would have said: certainly we disapprove of the Bill, go to the country; go further if you like, that is where you will end. But they did notn do that, for they knew that with that Bill and other Bills of first importance and advantage to this country, they were not only out of the Treasury benches but hopelessly out, and that they might never see them again in their lifetime. That is what affected them and that is why the Senate was called upon to be so judicial.

Let me say one thing which convinces me although it may not convince gentlemen opposite. Living is cheapest in the world in that country which has the highest measure of protection, namely, France. Of all the countries on the face of the earth the country that is the cheapest to live in is France. She, two years ago, so approved of the policy of protection that she raised her whole system of protection by 20 per cent. If that is not a direct argument in flat contradiction of the statement of the hon. member for Red Deer I do not know what is—and it is not borrowed from theory but frm practice and fact. I was very much upset,—although I may recover—by a statement of the same hon. gentleman about free wool from Australia. Why, Australia is a protected country the same as Canada. Why does he not treat the question in a logical way? and treat free wheat from Canada the same as Australians do their wool from Australia. But that unfortunately is generally his failing. He is very quick, very picturesque, very defiant and very polite, but as to being cogent we must allow to having our reservations. He said the price of Canadian flour was higher in Canada than in Great Britain. Is he aware that quality for quality it is not so. Flour is flour, he thinks. Well, I can tell him it is not. There are several brands of flour and that makes all the difference in the world. If he wants an analogy, a small one it is true, let him take the case of the old country tailor who sends his goods out to this country, pays the tariff and yet sells them at the same price he charges in England. How does this happen? I do not buy these clothes myself, I make my own, but if we are to have these monstrosities of trade brought up before us all the time, why are they not dealt with in a fair manner? There can be no question that the Conservative party has made mistakes in the past and has profited by them. It is admitted that different conditions are suitable to different countries and to argue at large as if Canada were Britain and Britain were Canada, but shows the ineptitude of the hon. gentleman on these questions. However, I fancy that a due regard to patriotism and a certain virility which we have inherited from our ancestors both Gaelic and British, will enable us to weather the storm. I know that the Americans do not start to howl as if everything had gone to bow-wows. When they get into bit of a slough, they set to work to get out of it, and they have set an example to the whole world. They cannot be excellent for strength of mind, and body and character, and surely we are not going to throw our doors open and howl as if the country was something we should be ashamed of. Let us bend our energies together. Let us find out by commission and cease to draw our illustrations from impossible and irrelevant conditions. Let us face the facts in a scientific manner and deal with them accordingly, and then we shall be much more edified than by a tissue of sarcasms, and, I am afraid, absurdities."

"CHRISTMAS EVE."

Dr. Bridges' First Offering Is Published In London.

The Poet Laureate, Dr. Robert Bridges, has revived the ancient custom and like a remote predecessor has assumed the functions of "Versificator Regis." He has availed himself of the right to address the sovereign not on a state occasion, but at the time of the Christian festival. He has sent a poem which is the first fruit of his official appointment, to the King and which The London Times published recently at His Majesty's express desire.

The London Times in a foreword says: "To the period of his first predecessor whom we hear of at least as early as 1340, Dr. Bridges appears to have reverted with much grace and felicity for the form in which the poem is cast. It is not improbable that the court minstrel of the early 14th century would have used the same germanic rhythm based upon alliteration and central pause which is best known to us now from "The Vision of Piers Plowman'."

Dr. Bridges therefore sought one of the earliest founts of English inspiration and has attested to the continuity both of the inspiration and the office. The poem which is entitled "Christmas Eve," follows in part:

"CHRISTMAS EVE."

"A frosty Christmas Eve, when the stars were shining,
Fared I forth alone, where westward falls the hill,
And from many a village in the watered valley,
Distant music reached me, peals of bells aringing:
The constellated sounds ran sprinkling on earth's floor;
As the dark vault above with stars was rpangled o'er.
Then sped my thought to keep that first Christmas of all,
When the shepherds watching by their folds ere the dawn
Heard music in the fields, and marvelling could not tell
Whether it were angels or the bright stars singing.
Now blessed be the towers that crown England so fair,
That stand up strong in prayer, unto God for our souls.
Blessed be their founders (said I) and our country folk,
Who are ringing for Christ in the belfries to-night,
With arms lifted to clutch the rattling ropes that race
Into the dark above and the mad, romping din."

Shot Plum Pudding In Cannon.

When the Boers advanced on Ladysmith in the Transvaal war the late Melton Prior was one of the twenty newspaper correspondents who threw in their lot with the British army, instead of making the hurried retreat that was still possible. In his book, "Campaigns of a War Correspondent," he tells many interesting incidents of the siege.

The enemy succeeded in placing thirty-two guns on the heights above the town, and kept up such an incessant fire that the troops and civilians were soon engaged in digging bombproof shelters.

In spite of the havoc that these cannon worked, the soldiers soon grew accustomed to the shelling. One day the 2nd Gordon Highlanders were playing football when a shell plumped in among them. Fortunately no one was hit and they went on playing. The Boers were so interested, apparently, that they gave up firing and actually sat on the edge of the hills, watching the game. Then, when it was all over, the firing started afresh.

But this was not the only courtesy the enemy showed. On Christmas Day they saluted the happy morn by salvos of shells. The first two that fell into the camps of the Carbineers and the Imperial Light Horse did not burst. When the shells were picked up it was found that wooden plugs had been inserted in place of the fuses, and inside the shells were plum puddings. On the outside were the words, "With the Compliments of the Season."

Shakespeare's Name.

It has often been a puzzle to students of Shakespeare why his name is spelled in so many different ways. Shakespeare himself is said to have signed his name on different occasions "Shakspeare" and "Shakespere," and learned disquisitions have been written to prove which is the proper spelling. None perhaps was more amusing than the "weather" reason given in 1851 by Albert Smith, who averred that he had found it in the Harleian manuscript. It was as follows:

How dyd Shakspeare spell hys name?
Ye weatherre mayde ye change, we saye,
So write it as ye please;
When ye soone shone he mayde hys A;
When wette he took hys E'es.

HE SAVED HIS FACE

By DOROTHY BURNS

While amusing myself over some old letters from India, written by my grandfather about half a century ago, I came across one to his mother, in which he announced his engagement and gave an account of how he came to marry:

"You know, my dear mother, that I have always contended that neither clergymen nor soldiers should marry. The first should always be ready to fight the devil under the banner of the cross in any land, however barbarous, and the second to fight the enemies of his country under its flag. And it seemed to me that if a soldier should take a wife she should have about her something of a soldier's nature. I do not mean that she should be expected to march to battle like a man, but that in moments of great danger she should retain her self possession.

"You remember that I came out here the year before the great mutiny and was assigned to the —th Bengal cavalry at Meerut, where it broke out. I saw enough of the terrors a soldier's wife is liable to among the Englishwomen, who were obliged to fly for their lives, many of them being butchered and some burned in their houses while their husbands attended to their military duties, to confirm my opinion that a soldier should not be encumbered with a wife, or at least if he has one she should be a marvel of courage.

"A few months ago, dear mother, I was invited to the quarters of Colonel Crocker of the fusiliers. The colonel has been in India twenty years and has a daughter, Cynthia, born just after his arrival here, so that, never having left India, she has never seen England. At my first meeting with this young lady I felt that she was to prove a strong temptation to me to desert my principles. After being constantly at her father's bungalow for three months the first part of my resolution—never to marry so long as I was a soldier—was completely broken down. I was passing an intermediate stage between that resolution and my second—if I did marry while a soldier to mate only with a woman of such remarkable nerve under danger as I had seen among the officers' wives and daughters at the breaking out of the mutiny at Meerut—when an episode happened that broke down all my scruples against marriage.

"I was dining one evening with Colonel Crocker and his family. The colonel sat at one end of the table, Mrs. Crocker at the other, while one of the younger children and Cynthia sat on one side and the other child beside me. A servant was pulling on the punkah; another, an Indian girl, was serving us at dinner. In these days one seldom talked about anything except the adventures of the mutiny, and the colonel, who was at the time it broke out at a cantonment about two miles from Delhi, was telling how he tried to induce the mutinous sepoys of the regiment to which he was attached to remain faithful to their duty when he was interrupted by Cynthia quietly telling the waitress to place a bowl of milk on the floor. The colonel gave over his narration and looked at his daughter anxiously, her mother doing the same. I saw at once that she was moved by some powerful emotion. But she neither moved nor spoke. We all sat waiting while the maid placed the bowl of milk on the floor not far from Cynthia's chair and in a position where I could see it. What was my surprise and horror to see a cobra slowly creep from where Cynthia sat to the bowl.

"The snake had been wound around her leg and uncoiled to get the milk.

"Suddenly Colonel Crocker seized a carving knife from the table and, darting to the snake, with one blow severed it in two parts.

"And now, dear mother, I have come to the other important statement contained in this letter. This brave woman has consented to be my wife. I can keep, at least, my resolution not to marry a woman who is unfitted to be the wife of a soldier. Colonel and Mrs. Crocker have consented, and Cynthia and I are very happy. To crown all, the colonel is to be retired in a few months and will use his influence to have me ordered to England, so that we shall doubtless all sail for home together. Cynthia and I shall not be married till we reach England, and you, dear mother, will be at our wedding."

This is the end of the story as given in my grandfather's letter to my great-grandmother. All turned out satisfactorily. Colonel Crocker was retired as expected and had influence sufficient to secure an order for his intended son-in-law to report at the war office in London about the same time as he himself expected to reach there. So they all went home together, and the wedding was celebrated at Twickenham, where the Crockers took up their residence after their return.

There is a sequel to this story which goes to show that my grandfather had saved his face by not telling the whole of it. The truth is that in the exuberance of youth be had talked very loudly about remaining a celibate so long as he was in the army. When be gave in he must needs have an excuse. He had a very good one, but he did not state the case in full. In another letter giving the same story the writer said that the moment the cobra was killed Cynthia Crocker fell over in a faint.

Since Taking "Fruit-a-tives" And Feel Like A New Person"

DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th, 1913.
"I am a general storekeeper at the above address and, on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a most terrific pain at the base of my skull. This pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

A VERSATILE MONARCH.

Peter the Great of Russia Was a Real Jack of All Trades.

All historians agree that Peter the Great of Russia was a man of various accomplishments. After he became emperor he worked as a shipbuilder in Amsterdam. His object was to study the construction of ships that the information gained as an ordinary workman might aid him in establishing a first class navy in his own country. He also studied anatomy and seemed to delight in dissecting human bodies. He is said to have acted as executioner on several occasions, one being when, after the siege of Narva, certain soldiers disobeyed orders, whereupon he sentenced them to death and killed them himself. He was also wont to flog criminals with his own hands.

He practiced as a surgeon in his own country, where he was accustomed to perform amputations as well as to bleed persons and draw teeth. In his pockets he usually carried a case of surgical instruments. His versatility is indicated by the relics preserved in Peter's museum, St. Petersburg, where there are ship models, a chandelier and other iron articles and ivory figures, all his own construction. In the same place there is at present on exhibition a wax model of the great emperor wearing a pair of shoes and a wig made by himself.—London Standard.

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy No. 69879, for $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

The Porcelain Tower

Or How Two Americans Were Saved

By CLARISSE MACKIE

Dick Evans sat up in bed and sleepily rubbed his eyes. Again came a cautious knock at his door.

"Come in!" he called impatiently, and as the sleek head of his Chinese house boy appeared in the aperture he added, "What's the matter, Fan Soo?"

Fan Soo closed the door softly and tiptoed to the bed.

"Him Smiss man boy bring chit fully up!"

Evans took the note and read the brief cipher message it contained.

Then he manufactured a very successful yawn and dismissed the beady eyed Chinese.

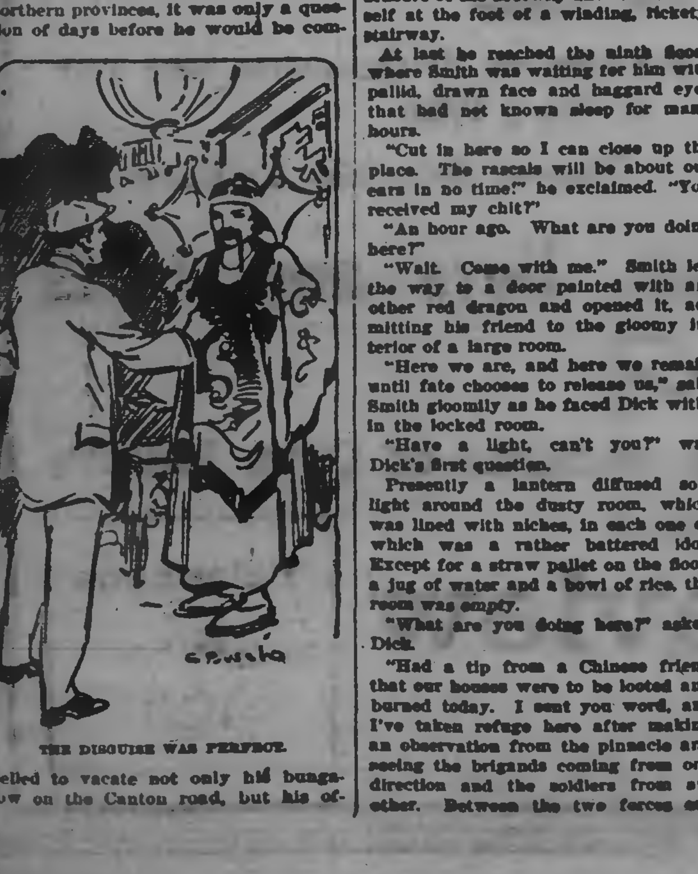
"Breakfast quick! Sabe, San Foo? Just out of here now!"

Fan Soo dusted out, or it might more aptly be termed as "melting from there."

Alone, Dick Evans worked with lightning rapidity. He was in and out of his bath in a jiffy, quickly dressed in fresh white linen and packing a few valuables in his pockets. When he left the room there was nothing that he valued contained therein, not even a scrap of paper.

After a hasty breakfast he left his bungalow and went down the Canton road toward the city. As the agent of a large importing house in Canton he preferred to live in the suburbs of that rather unfriendly and seething city. His position was very uncertain. Five times had the agents of his house been driven away by the hostility of the natives and each time had they with customary English doggedness returned to the scene of battle.

Now things were rather different. With the country in a state of revolution, south China warring against the northern provinces, it was only a question of days before he would be compelled to vacate not only his bungalow on the Canton road, but his office in the city as well.



THE DISGUISE WAS PERFECT.

The blow had fallen this morning. The "chit" or note that Smith had sent him had contained a few words of warning. A company of soldiers bound north would leave the city at 9 o'clock, and that meant that their passage would be marked by robbery and perhaps worse.

Dick Evans was going to the house of his friend, James Smith, and together they might escape if they could reach the city, although it was whispered that all the traveled roads were infested with murderous bandits.

It was a good three miles to the Smith place, and when he reached it he found it quite deserted save for a fat comprador sunning himself in the gateway of the compound. He gave forth surly answers to Dick's questions.

Five hundred yards beyond the compound gate Dick came to the old porcelain tower that is a historic feature on the Canton road. Built many centuries before as the private retreat of a rich mandarin, the exquisite porcelain paintings that adorned its inner walls are still admired. Now the tower was deserted save by bats and rats, and it was whispered among the Chinese that devils haunted its many stories.

As Dick passed the old tower there came the sound of a familiar voice—it came in a whisper—that voice of James Smith, and it hastened Dick's steps toward the tower until he was standing in its tall shadow.

"Dodge in here. I'll tell you when I see you. Come up to the top floor!"

Dick cast a swift glance around the countryside and saw not a human being. He darted into the deep embrasure of the doorway and found himself at the foot of a winding, rickety stairway.

At last he reached the ninth floor, where Smith was waiting for him with pallid, drawn face and haggard eyes that had not known sleep for many hours.

"Cut in here so I can close up the place. The rascals will be about our ears in no time!" he exclaimed. "You received my chit?"

"An hour ago. What are you doing here?"

"Wait. Come with me." Smith led the way to a door painted with another red dragon and opened it, admitting his friend to the gloomy interior of a large room.

"Here we are, and here we remain until fate chooses to release us," said Smith gloomily as he faced Dick within the locked room.

"Have a light, can't you?" was Dick's first question.

Presently a lantern diffused soft light around the dusty room, which was lined with niches, in each one of which was a rather battered idol. Except for a straw pallet on the floor, a jug of water and a bowl of rice, the room was empty.

"What are you doing here?" asked Dick.

"Had a tip from a Chinese friend that our houses were to be looted and burned today. I sent you word, and I've taken refuge here after making an observation from the pinnacle and seeing the brigands coming from one direction and the soldiers from another. Between the two forces our bones would be picked quite clean."

"After they pass we can get away?" asked Dick thoughtfully.

"Maybe," smiled Smith, "provided they don't take it into their heads to level the tower to the ground."

"Wish we could give them a stiff scare. You know they are rather suspicious of this place."

"I know it. Give me time to think."

For a long time Smith sat on the floor with his head in his hands. At last he arose and uttered a triumphant whoop.

He darted to a carved chest thrust in one corner and from it dragged stiff robes of yellow brocade, soiled and dusty and almost falling to pieces with great age.

"If they linger along till dusk I think I can scare them stiff with this priestly garb," he chuckled. "You know one of the traditions connected with this place concerns an old priest of Buddha who starved himself to death in the tower in order to attain celestial rewards. The superstitious say that sometimes the spirit of this old priest comes back to the tower, hungry and forlorn, and cries for food and drink. I shall be that old priest for awhile. Watch me!"

When Smith's tall, gaunt frame was wrapped in the yellow robe and a black satin cap was stuck on his dark hair Dick confessed himself amazed at the resemblance to a Buddhist priest painted on one of the porcelain panels of the stairway. The disguise was perfect.

The two men sat and talked beside a tiny window that gave a view of the road to the city.

"If they only wait until dusk we can scare 'em off, and then we can get away," Smith repeated over and over again.

The day wore on, and, although they caught occasional glimpses of approaching soldiers, they did not make much progress, for there were much halting and disputing. It was almost twilight when a company of ragged soldiers stirred the thick white dust of the road near the porcelain tower.

"They're going to halt there, just as I thought. They're taking pot shots at the tower. See the ancient cannon they are dragging along."

Dick looked out and saw all the things Smith described. He saw more, for he noticed that they were preparing to load the cannon and gunners were pointing it toward the porcelain tower.

"Deuce take it, we're in for it now!" muttered Smith.

"Get into your robes. Scare 'em off, man. You can do it. I know the Chinese like a book. They'll streak it if they see that old yellow back on the balcony of the tower." Thus Dick encouraged his friend while he helped Smith into the yellow robe.

While the gunners were loading the cannon there came the sound of fierce cries from the south, and a band of tattered brigands came racing through the dust of the road.

At the same instant Smith stepped through a door that led to a small balcony that encircled the tower and, lifting his arms in their flowing sleeves, shrilled down at them a mixture of American slang and bad Chinese that hushed the riotous crowd below.

How long he stood there he never knew, but his arms grew stiff and useless and his neck cramped with its rigid attitude.

The long silence of the crowd below was broken at last by a shrill screech of terror from a brigand. That was the signal for panic. In ten minutes the long dusty road was empty and a full moon smiled wanly over the place where superstition still held sway.

"Ten years from now this could not happen," said Smith as he entered the city that night with Dick beside him. "The last remnants of superstition and ignorance are flying northward this very moment lashed by their own fears. China has awakened, yawned and nodded off again for another forty winks. After that—well, we'll all have to keep pretty wide awake to keep up with her."

Dick Evans, who saw a very profitable business going to the dogs, nodded ruefully. "There's just one consolation in the whole affair," he murmured, "and that is that it forms an excellent excuse for getting back into God's country again, and I'm going."

Willing to Oblige.

Brilliant sunshine made the garden party enjoyable. The garden really was a garden, and, though most of the guests clustered on the lawn, one or two wiser people sauntered around the rose bordered paths.

Two of these were seated in a quiet part of the garden enjoying the scent of the flowers and the solitude. They were engaged. Presently a mutual friend sauntered down the path and noticed them.

"You two seem to be enjoying yourselves over here all alone," said he.

"We are," said the girl and, being a girl, managed to look pleased to see him. "Won't you join us?"

"Sorry, I can't," answered the friend, "not being a clergyman. But I'll go and find one if you say so."—New York Mail.

A Great Financier.

A man who occupied a little back room in a poor quarter of the east end of London was evicted for nonpayment of rent. He had nothing but a valise and a few clothes, and while they were throwing him and his belongings out of the house a bulky manuscript fell out of his pocket. Nobody noticed it at the time, but after he had gathered his clothes and taken his departure one of the bystanders saw the big roll of paper, picked it up and on opening it was surprised and amused to find it contained an elaborate scheme, worked out to the minutest degree, for refunding the national debt of the British Empire.

DASHING DOWN THE HILL.

Advent of Winter Brings Joy to the Little Ones—An Amusing Guessing Contest—About Animal Friendships. A Flower Puzzle.

Perhaps there are sports that provide more fun than coasting down a steep hill, but they are pretty hard to find at this time of year. With a clear road and a swift sled the dash is quickly over, but it can be done over and over, and one never gets tired. With a big bobsled and a crowd to fill it the sped is apt to make the sport dangerous, especially for little people. But the single sled is safe for almost any youngster when public streets are avoided. The best place is an open field or a large park, where autos and horse drawn vehicles are not allowed. Then hop on and let her go. The smiling young lady in the picture is Miss Antoinette Frissell, daughter of a New York physician. She was snapped in Central park not long ago.

FLYING THROUGH THE SNOW.

A Guessing Game.

The guessing contest here described will furnish an amusing half hour at a party. To each couple hand a paper containing the following questions, with spaces left for the answers:

What kind of a cake adds variety to life? Spice cake.

What kind of cake should a politician eat? Election cake.

What kind of cake are lovers fond of? Kisses.

What kind of cake does a pugilist enjoy? Pound cake.

What kind of cake do bees love? Honey cake.

What kind of cake should be given the man who imposes on his friends? Sponge cake.

What kind of cake should the jeweler use? Gold and silver cake.

What kind for the sculptor? Marble cake.

What two cakes are most suitable for the minister? Scripture cake and angel food.

Animal Friendships.

The dog and the horse often become great friends and are very fond of each other. A gentleman had a Newfoundland dog that always went to the stable to get his horse. While the groom saddled the horse the dog lay with his nose between his paws. When the horse was ready the dog took the reins in his mouth and led the horse to his master. He then followed him in the ride. On returning the reins were given to the dog, and he led his friend back to the stable. If the groom happened to be out of the stable the dog barked loudly till he came.

Over the American Flag.

There is but one occasion upon which another emblem is allowed to blow over ours. This is during the time when the church call is being sounded at navy yards and upon vessels of the navy.

The Rain Goblins.

The rain goblins go pit-a-pat,
Spitting at this, spitting at that.
They're out today dabbling in glee—
See! They're washing windows for me.

The rain goblins go drip, drip, drip,
A-bouncing down with hop and skip.
They're out today for good, I think,
For they are giving my plants a drink.

The rain goblins, frolicsome elves,
Are having sport all to themselves.
But it's for others they're at work.
Raindrops I never knew to shirk.

O rain goblins, we welcome you.
For you come not to make us blue!
As a blessing you're here again.
We could not live without the rain.

CURIOUS BREADS.

Made In Chains In the Balkans and Laundered In China.

Bread is made in different shapes and in different ways, according to the taste of the various nationalities. Mr. L. Lodian in Forest and Stream says:

"The bread of the Balkans, curiously made in the form of chains, is sold from the arms and necks of itinerant pedlers. In tent life in Balkania the detached links are often used for fun at quoits or serve a more useful purpose in suspending temporary curtains and awnings. Then when the campers run out of provisions they literally eat their curtain rings! The Japanese bamboo bread, so named from its shape, is a somewhat similar product. It is sliced and sold in strings.

"The sun dried bread sheeting of central Asia looks much like chamois leather and is made up in pieces of bed sheet size. It is compounded from flour and raisin sirup and is highly esteemed by coffee drinkers. In the bazaars of the caliphates it is frequently seen hanging in place of awnings to shield the stalls from the sun.

"One of the strangest crackers comes from Russia. It is known as fit the mouth begl and, besides being much appreciated as a tea biscuit, is quite commonly used by merchants ignorant of the three R's as a makeshift abacus in counting money, a lower string of ten serving for kopecks and an upper string of the same number representing roubles. More picturesque still is its usage as an extempore ring for marrying poor peasants with whom the gold is lacking.

"Most singular of all, however, is the peculiar pith bread of China, which, instead of being baked, is laundered out in narrow strips with a hot iron, much in the manner that a collar receives its finishing. It is made from the central tissue of the fatsia trees and is valued highly by the citizens of the 'flowery republic' as a dainty cracker to eat with their little cups of watery, unsweetened tea."

TORPOR OF THE TURK.

Shown In a Quaint Reason For Not Delivering a Message.

An interview in the New York Sun between one of its reporters and Mr. Bedros Keljik bears humorously on the Turkish situation and seems to indicate that what is needed is not increased political activity, but more attention to business. As an illustration of the everyday torpor one of the experiences of Dr. Riza Tewfik, member of parliament for Adrianople, with a Turkish official may be cited.

Dr. Tewfik was visiting a friend at Kade Kony, across the Bosporus. About 10 o'clock at night he heard the watchman call, "Yangin var, Galatada yangin var!" ("There is fire, there is fire in Galata!"), the usual alarm given when fire breaks out in any quarter.

It happened that Dr. Tewfik's own house was in Galata, and he rushed to the nearest telegraph office to inquire concerning the safety of his family. He received no answer to his telegram, and his fears were roused. But as no boats cross the Bosporus at night he was obliged to wait till morning.

He got home at last to find everything safe. When he asked why his family had not answered the telegram he was told that they had not received any. So Dr. Tewfik went to the telegraph office and demanded an explanation.

One Osman Agha, to whom Dr. Tewfik's telegram had been given for delivery, was called.

"Where is the effendi's telegram?"

Osman Agha fumbled in his pockets and drew forth the message.

"Why did you not deliver it?" demanded Dr. Tewfik angrily.

"Oh, effendi," answered the imperturbable Osman Agha, who had evidently perused the telegram to his own satisfaction. "it was needless. I knew that your house was not on fire."

Suspicious of Bankers.

In a remote farming district in which I once passed a few days I was told of a wealthy farmer whose friends, fearing he would be murdered, succeeded after an infinity of trouble in persuading him to take his money to a bank. When he interviewed the manager he asked how much the bank would charge for taking care of his cash. The manager replied that it would charge nothing, but would pay him something. "I always knew you were rascals!" he retorted, and marched off, money and all.—London Citizen.

Very Thoughtful.

"The clocks," said the bride, "are simply beautiful, and it was lovely of you to give them to us. But—you won't think me inquisitive?—may I ask why you gave us a pair of them? Of course it was perfectly"—

"I gave you two of them," interrupts the friend, "because I'm very fond of both of you, and if you ever get divorced you will each have something to remember me by."—Chicago Post.

Avoiding Comparison.

"What is your objection to me as a son-in-law? My character is beyond reproach."

"That's just it," said Mr. Olsport. "You don't suppose I want to go through the rest of my life having you held up to me as a shining example!" —Washington Star.

WASHING DISHES.

There Is an Art In This Homely Everyday Duty.

THE PROPER EQUIPMENT.

When Washing Cutlery It Is Always Best to Use a Good Silver Soap. This Method Does Away With the Weekly Cleaning.

The art of dishwashing has become almost extinct in this quick going age, when the only way to do a thing is to do it at once and have it soon over. Yet real dishwashing is an art.

Dishwashing requires two dishpans, one in which to wash and the other to rinse the dishes; an abundance of heavy linen towels, some lighter ones for glasses, a good dish mop and dishcloths. The dishcloth should be of strong linen. Stair crash is excellent for this purpose, as it will become soft enough to be flexible and is very durable. Make these cloths about ten inches long, of narrow crash and hem them to prevent the edges from fraying when they are put through the laundry.

First of all, the dishes should be gathered up and properly scraped, then held for a moment under the hot water faucet to take off the first coating of grease. Any dishes or knives and forks used for fish should be carefully wiped with paper, as dishcloths are infected by fish immediately.

Put the dishes in hot suds. Use the dish mop freely and transfer them to the other pan to be rinsed. Let this second pan be very large and have a wooden drainer fitted in two inches from the bottom, so that the boiling water poured over the dishes will drain off them. This is the best and safest way of draining.

In washing the silver use a silver soap and thus avoid the weekly silver cleaning day, with the added inducement that the silver is constantly bright.

Wash spiders, pots and kettles separately and with an iron dishcloth. Pots and kettles should be washed inside and outside and thoroughly wiped before being set away. The coffee pot and tea kettle should be boiled out at least once a week with soda and water to keep them tastelessly clean.

Walnuts as Food.

A London medical journal recently published some interesting facts concerning walnuts as food. According to this authority, "thirty large walnut kernels contain as much food value as two and three-quarter pounds of lean beef." With beef worth approximately 20 cents a pound, this means that each walnut is worth about 2 cents as a food product as compared with beef. That these facts will greatly encourage the production and consumption of walnuts is hardly to be expected. There is some consolation, however, in the thought that when meat has become a luxury, to be indulged only by the rich, the general consumer can keep his dinner very well—somewhat like Peter Pumpkin Eater's wife—in a walnut shell.

Queen's Carriage For Sale.

Here is a chance for collectors to acquire something absolutely unique. According to a recent advertisement in The London Times, Queen Adelaide's state carriage is for sale, with hammercloth embroidered with crowns and A.R. It is stated that the carriage is in an excellent state of preservation. Queen Adelaide was the wife of William IV., and died in 1849. As a rule, state carriages are carefully preserved by the authorities, but this one, which must be nearly a hundred years old, has apparently found its way into the hands of a private individual.

All "Stand an Equal Show The Slogan is "Start Early"

The great prize contest of The Review is going to meet with popular favor. Ever since the announcement the telephones have been kept busy answering keen, incisive inquiries from the best known persons of this part of Ontario.

The list of prizes are so tempting that any person using good business judgment will send in their nomination and get started on the path to victory. The contest department in its experience has learned that many persons at the beginning are very enthusiastic, only to become discouraged after being refused a subscription. The result in most cases is the giving up of the race. Bear in mind. All that is necessary is to have a few more votes than your competitors. They too are refused. The list of prizes is so large that no candidate who gives this great project the proper amount of attention should be disappointed in the prize they win. The liberality of Peterborough's progressive newspaper, The Daily Review, alone prompted the offering of so many valuable prizes.

The proposition itself is purely a business one and no person should consider it beneath his dignity to enter. In fact, when the names are published in the near future, the list will contain the best known and most popular names of persons in this section of Ontario. The Daily Review contest department is unlike any other proposition inasmuch as the votes allowed on subscriptions are the greatest at the beginning. This makes it possible for any person to use his best efforts from now until March 25th, and place himself so high in the list that it will be impossible for those waiting until later to overcome the lead taken while the votes were the greatest.

A Square Deal Assured All.

The Daily Review wishes to assure its readers and the general public that each and every person entering this Great Prize Contest will be given a SQUARE DEAL.

EVERYBODY, rich and poor, has the same opportunity to obtain a valuable prize. ENERGY and an EARLY START are the principal requirements of SUCCESS. SUBSCRIBERS is the object of the campaign—NOT MERELY MONEY.

If a wealthy person enters this campaign and wins a prize it will be because he or she has spent MORE ENERGY and has been MORE SUCCESSFUL in SECURING SUBSCRIPTIONS and not by SPENDING MONEY. The Daily Review's Prizes are not for sale, nor can they be purchased.

Subscriptions of Sixfold Value.

At no time during this campaign will a subscription count as much as at the present. A yearly subscription secured now and turned into this office will count exactly as much in vote value as five turned in during the last week of the campaign.

Send in your nomination to-day.

Be one of the early starters.

Sixty thousand votes for a yearly subscription turned into the contest department before Feb. 1st.

Start Pledging Friends.

To inform the many who have telephoned the contest department asking information as to the best way to start, the contest manager advises every one who intends to get to work on this campaign to set out at once and get promises from their friends to save for them the coupons that will be published daily. While they count only 25 votes taken separately, in the aggregate,these coupons will count up faster than the contestants dream. With thousands of them published every day it should not be difficult for the live contestant to have his or her friends save a few thousand.

Now is the time to get to work pledging your friends. Every day you delay means just so many coupons lost to you and every vote will count. Many an election and many a competition has been won with only a few votes to spare.

If you try, surely you can be first in your district, an honor that would be worth the effort, even if the prizes were not offered. Get every one you can to pay for this paper and turn that in to your credit. Then you will have a fine start and with your name at the head of the list for your district, it will not be hard to convince others to save their votes for you.

MASS MEETING APPROVES REQUEST OF THE WOMEN'S COUNCIL FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF POLICE WOMAN

The Men Discuss the Moral and Social Conditions of the City and Give Their Opinions as to the Cause of Vice and Its Prevention

We fully approve of the request made by the Women's Council for the appointment of a police woman and we express the hope that an early and favorable answer may be given by the Police Commissioners.

Such was the resolution moved by J. H. Moss, seconded by W. E. Rambo, and adopted by the mass meeting of Men's Bible Classes and Brotherhoods at Charlotte Street lecture hall, last night.

Mr. R. F. Downey B.A., was chairman and the attendance numbered about seventy. Before the resolution was suggested to the meeting, by Rev. J. R. Webb, eight others were read by L. J. Colling, but the meeting decided that the object of the meeting would be attained by simply passing a resolution approving the action already taken by the Women's Council.

During the evening Mr. Herbert C. Treneer, organist at St. Andrew's Church, contributed several selections on the piano to the enjoyment of all.

It didn't take the chairman long to make his remarks. He pointed out the fact that Peterboro, as regards the number of policemen, was not up to the standard. He quoted the old adage "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

The "Let Alone" Policy

Mrs. Jas. Kendry representing the Women's Council, read a well prepared paper, in which she argued the cause of the Women's Council. She said the "let alone, do not mention" policy was answered by the presence of reformatories, rescue homes and Children's Aid Societies.

Mrs. Kendry also took up the answers of Magistrate Dumble and Judge Huycke as made to the deputation and replied to them.

One of her statements was that a gentlemen well informed in police circles, said that a police woman would more than earn her salary, if she did nothing more than stay in her office and interview those who came to her.

"We have not by any means given up the fight, and we expect to secure a police woman," said Mrs. Kendry.

At the conclusion of her remarks, Mrs. Kendry retired from the meeting.

Adjutant McElheney

"I don't think Peterboro is the bad city they are howling about," said Adjutant McElheney, in the course of his remarks. He however did not mean that the city was by any means, free from vice and he gave the particulars of several cases which had come to his notice, in fact, he had come to the meeting from a home where the moral conditions were very bad. He said some conditions were appalling, but they were found in smaller places than Peterboro.

The "let alone" policy, he said, was suicidal. But we must strike at the root and that was the home life. Until the home life was righted, all the policemen we could get would not avail. He placed the large share of the responsibility on the men, but did not allow the girls to go free. He said in Peterboro there were a large number of giddy and silly girls.

Vigilance Committee

Adjutant McElheney suggested that a Vigilance Committee be organized. They could assist the police. He also favored a Morality Inspector, and a Municipal Rescue Home. He did not want the home, for the Salvation Army Headquarters, he said were deadly opposed to it, as they had more than they could do now. But he would do all he could for a Municipal Home.

Mr. H. B. Cowan was not prepared to say which was better, a police woman or a Morality Officer. Conditions such as prevailed today had been predicted by Henry George because he saw what the result would be by conditions that would prevail in regard to lands. He said newcomers to Peterboro could not afford to buy land. They crowded into the cities.

Magazine Stories

Mr. Cowan gave a couple of instances where he had found stories in magazines that were not fit for young people to read. This was presenting another serious question for Christian people to deal with.

Mr. Benson, another speaker, suggested that a Vigilance Committee be formed. He told of the success of a committee in Chicago.

Lack of Parental Control

Lack of parental control was the answer Mr. J. H. Moss gave as the cause of conditions now faced. Parents allow their sons and daughters to go to party after party and dance after dance. So long as this was allowed we could expect this conditoin of affairs and nothing better.

Rev. J. R. Webb asked an answer to the question "Are the hands of the citizens so tied that three men will not do what is requested of them?" Then the discussion drifted into the question of the right step to take in making the request. Adjutant McElheney gave as his opinion, that the proper step to take,

It will be handed over to the fire department as from this point, it can be speedily taken to be used in cases of electric shocks, suffocation by smoke, gas, or ammonia fumes, or accidents in the water. fumes, or accidents in the water.

THE SOCIETY OF THE BUSY BEES

Members Who Are Now of Legal Age Will Share in $6,840.

In connection with the building, in 1894, of the Mother Church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, there was a society of small children called Busy Bees, who contributed to the Mother's Room. Mrs. Eddy, in her dedicatory sermon, referred to this society, saying :—

"Even the children vied with their parents to meeet the demand. Little hands never before devoted to menial services, shovelled now, and babes gave kisses to earn a few pence toward this consummation. Some of these lambs my prayers had christened, but Christ will rechristen them with His own new name, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast Thou perfected praise." The resident youthful workers were called Busy Bees.

Sweet society, precious children, your loving hearts and deft fingers distilled the nectar, and painted the finest flowers in the fabric of this history — even its centre-piece — Mother's Room in The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston. The children are destined to witness results which will eclipse Oriental dreams. They belong to the twentieth century. By juvenile aid, into the building fund have come $4,460. Ah, children, you are the bulwarks of freedom, the cement of society, the hope of our race." Page 14, Pulpit and Press, by Mary Baker Eddy.

In accordance with Mrs. Eddy's request the society disorganized.

By way of encouragement, Mrs. Eddy deeded in trust to The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, the sum of four thousand dollars to be invested in safe municipal bonds for the children contributors. The disbursal of the above amounts with accumulated interest was to take place when the children had arrived at legal age, each of them to receive equal shares.

The Treasurer of The Mother Church, Adam H. Dickey, is now preparing to distribute this fund, which, according to the Christian Sentinel of January 24, 1914, is now approximately $6,840.

This is another proof of Mrs. Eddy's wise and generous spirit.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Todd were all members of the Busy Bees and will share in the distribution.—Com.

NEGLIGENCE IS CHARGED

This the Jury Say Caused the Death of Six Children

Evidence is Forwarded to the Attorney General's Department

At the inquest into the death of the six Weatherby children at Coboconk, the jury returned a verdict: "That the elder girl, Caroline, came to her death by suffocation and burning through the gross negligence of the two adults in the house."

There was no lawyer present to cross examine.

The evidence went to show that none of the children were awake.

The only persons who knew anything of the fire previously to the time the neighbors arrived were the two persons most concerned, Mrs. Weatherby and Allan Fountain.

Their stories both agree. Mrs. Weatherby stated that there were only the two adults living in the house at the time besides the children. Allan Fountain was there as a boarder.

The house was so arranged that there were two rooms in front upstairs, and one room in the rear on the same floor. One of the front rooms was occupied by Fountain and the other by the children. She (Mrs. Weatherby) occupied the rear room. She was awakened in the night by the fire and in a panic got out as best she could.

Allan Fountain in his evidence stated he was greatly excited and crawled across the beds of the sleeping children to get out their window.

Mr. Woodcock, their next door neighbor, stated that he had been roused by Fountain and Mrs. Weatherby. He rushed over to the burning house but the fire was too bad by this time for him to do anything. He had placed a ladder against the building and climbed up, reaching and leaning to the window of the childrens' room, but the smoke and heat of the burning house was so intense that he could do nothing and was forced to go back down the ladder hurriedly.

Owing to the nature of the evidence it was forwarded to the Attorney-Generals' Department for further investigation.

MR. BURNHAM'S PROPOSAL TO DO AWAY WITH TITLES FINDS SUPPORT IN MANY QUARTERS

OTTAWA, Jan. 28.—The proposal of Mr. J. H. Burnham M.P., for West Peterboro, made regarding titles is supported in many quarters. The Free Press says editorially, because of a false sense of loyalty or a feeling that such a measure would be discourteous to His Majesty, the probability is that Mr. Burnham's bill will be killed in Parliament., but we venture to say that if every member in the house voted according to his conscience, and as the mouthpiece of the vast majority of his constituents, the bill will be carried with very little opposition.

As to the methods by means of which titles of honor are conferred, Mr. Burnham only voices the general discontent. This method, although fairly well known, is surrounded with an air of mystery which is rendered the deeper with each recurring honor's list. Often in such lists names of men occur for whom the public search their thoughts in vain to discover the deeds of distinction they have to their credit to win them a place there.

SEND CHIEF TO JUBILEE POINT

Committee Balk at Spending $200 for Trip to New Orleans.

Apparently there will be no convention for the Fire Chief this year. Owing to the convention being held in New Orleans, the Fire, Water and Light Committee at their meeting last evening were of the opinion that it would be very nice to send the Chief, but, that it was too far and owing to other affairs they were unable to pass the estimate of $200, without further consideration.

"Better have the Chief take his holidays at Jubilee Point," was the opinion expressed by Ald. Stratton.

"I am very much in sympathy with this, but it is rather far away," remarked the Mayor.

"We can't conscientiously vote this amount of $200 and keep our rate at 25 mills on the dollar," announced Ald. Stratton.

"Better let it stand," concluded the Mayor, and the matter was left over for further consideration.

An Extra Hose Company.

The question of four extra men and one extra horse for the Fire Department was broached last evening at the committee meeting, but the matter was left over with a few others for further discussion.

The Chief explained that it was his idea to start another hose company and this would necessitate the extra men and horse.

These men could look after second alarms or stay in the station when the brigade was out attending to a fire.

The amount required would be $2,400 for the men. The horse would cost $200.

OUT OF WORK AND DESPONDENT, TORONTO MAN CUTS HIS WIFE'S THROAT, GASHES HIS OWN NECK

Canadian Press Despatch

TORONTO, Jan. 28.—Out of work for five weeks and despondent, Robert McCutcheon, 44 Laughton Ave., a Scotch mechanic, eleven months in this country, and last employed at the Canada Foundry Co., cut his wife's throat with a razor in bed, this morning, and then attempted to commit suicide by gashing his own neck with the same weapon.

His wife's mother heard the screams and rushed into the room, but was too late to avert the tragedy. The woman will probably die, but McCutcheon may survive. Both are still unconscious in the Western Hospital. Four children ranging in age from 9 to 16, are left. The couple were in fairly comfortable been drawing a benefit of $4 per week, owing to enforced idleness. circumstances. McCutcheon had

Committee Brings the Amount Down to $21,207 and a Further Reduction May be Made —Four Additional Firemen Asked for Estimates calling for an appropriation of $23,829 for the fire department, were submitted by the Fire Chief to the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night. The Committee brought the total down to $21,507, and it is just possible a further reduction will be made. The appropriation last year was $16,500.

The committee dealt with the various items as follows:

The estimates for wages amounts to $12,500; this provides for a supply man for the men when on their vacation, and four additional firemen.

The estimate of $510 for winter uniforms was accepted.

Summer uniforms for the brigade at a cost of $315 was left in abeyance on economic principles.

$30 for an overcoat for the Chief was passed.

An estimate of $50 for shirts for the fire brigade was approved of.

The estimate of $40 for uniform caps passed the committee.

Rubber coats and boots for the brigade at a cost of $50 will be purchased.

The Chief estimates $50 for lines for the fire hall; this was cut down to $35.

The estimate of $400 for fuel was shaved to $375.

Horse feed is estimated at $730. In this connection two horses of Board of Works had hitherto been stabled at the fire hall, and always been available for drawing the engine. And the Board of Works department has always paid one-half the cost of the hay and oats consumed in the fire hall as the share of the feed for those two horses, as against the hay and oats consumed by the six actual fire fighting horses. The Board of Works is going to insist on a more equable adjustment of this feed account.

$700 is the accepted estimate for fire hose.

Light and gas will cost $125.

Telephones will cost $65.

For lumber $40 are allowed.

$15 are allowed for brooms.

Fire alarm power is estimated at $150.

Fire alarm supplies are estimated at $125.

The Chief asked $750 for fire alarm boxes. This was pared down to $375 and allows for the addition of three new boxes.

For setting three alarm boxes $50 were allowed.

$20 allowed for lunches for the firemen.

Extra help was estimated at $25.

Accounts left over from last year amount to $50.

Hardware supplies figured at $100.

Veterinary services were figured at $15.

Painting of No. 1 hose wagon was estimated at $75 and left in abeyance.

Cartage, freight and express will cost $28.

The Chief asked for $50 for varnishing the fire hall. This was shaved down to $25 for only absolutely imperative work.

Chief Howard asked for $200 for expenses in attending the convention of Fire Chiefs at New Orleans. As the convention is to be held at so distant a city and entailing so much expenditure for attendance, this item will probably be cut out.

$10 for livery for committee was cut out.

$85 for laundry were allowed to stand.

$382 for linoleum was erased.

Horse shoeing and blacksmithing was allowed to stand at $75.

$100 were allowed for general repairs.

The Chief asked $300 for an exercise wagon. This was cut down to $100 for repairing old wagon.

$50 for fire extinguisher supplies and $30 for grocery supplies, passed committee.

Chief Howard asked for a new hose company.

A pulmotor at $200 will be supplied.

The Chief's recommendation for two smoke helmets, costing $250, was rejected.

$45 for a new departure bell was left in abeyance.

$1700 for a new fire alarm telegraph battery was left in abeyance.

$35 for office supplies stood.

Incidentals at $100, passed muster.

$20 for newspapers, stood.

$25 asked for electric lamps and supplies was cut down to $15.

$7 for insurance was allowed.

$21 for three department lanterns was cut out.

$25 for repairing chairs was considered needed.

The paring of the above estimates reduced the appropriation asked by Chief Howard from $23,829 to $21,587.

From the expressions of the Committee as a whole, it is almost certain that the four additional men and another horse asked for by the Chief will not be allowed this year.

The whole schedule of estimates was left in abeyance pending enquiry and report by his worship and chairman Ald. G. Walter Green.

Chief Howard is also advocating adjustments in and increases of salaries of firemen, which there is considerable doubt as to endorsation by the committee this year.

IN A FOOL'S PARADISE

Ald. Green Opines That a $10,000 Fire Will Cause Awakening

New Fire Alarm Battery Costing $1700 is Required.

The Fire, Light and Water Committee faced a rather serious problem last evening, when the subject of a new fire alarm battery costing $1,700, was introduced through the medium of the estimates prepared for the year. Owing to the fact that the fire department are unable to get more power from the Bell Telephone Company, who have been supplying the department with power for the electric bells and alarms and with the installation of three more fire alarm boxes in view, the Chairman, Ald. Green, contended that something had to be done.

Today the Mayor, Ald. Green and Ald. Anderson will investigate into the matter and report.

The cost of installing the new system will be $1700, while the operating cost per month will be about $10.

"I don't think we can let this go for another year, remarked Mayor Buller, who said he had recommended the new system eight years ago, when the fire hall was constructed.

The Fire Chief pointed out that there were no bells in the firemen's houses. With the new battery everything would work out fine and the new alarm boxes could be installed properly.

"We are in a fool's paradise," remarked the Chairman, when he pointed out that they might have a $10,000 fire before morning. Then we would wake up.

Ald. Green further pointed out how the manufacturers were pleading for a better fire protection and equipment to prevent the fires. They were willing to pay for fire protection.

The present system was installed at the fire hall and the Telephone Company had been supplying power and it is estimated that in four years $1800 has been saved. Now, on account of increased demands on their local system, the Telephone Company has no power to spare. With the new system, the item of $40 for battery power at the pumping station and other expenditure will be saved so that the new system will more than pay for itself, over and above the saving already made.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 28, 1914.

MINERAL DEVELOPMENT IN HASTINGS.

WE ARE GLAD to note and to quote the following interesting article from the Toronto Weekly Sun on a subject which has been dealt with from time to time in these columns. It will especially interest those who are old enough to recall the conditions which prevailed some fifty years ago, and also interest those who are watching the present awakening to the long neglected mineral areas of the Trent Valley.

Away back in the sixties wild excitement was created by the discovery of gold in North Hastings. "The old Richardson mine was," says a bulletin issued by the C.P.R. passenger department, "the scene of the most sensational gold rush in the history of Eastern America. There must have been at least 10,000 miners gophering over that portion of Hastings County in the hope of discovering gold similar to that being mined at that time at the Richardson mine. With such a class of men in possession it is not surprising to know that troops of mounted police had to be kept to patrol the district to prevent crime and bloodshed. At the Richardson mine itself the rioting seemed to be very common and sensational methods were adopted to compel the mine master to accede to their extravagant demands. It was necessary in those days to bring all the money in from Belleville to pay the men and this had to be driven in under guard. Time and time again those bringing in the money were held up and had to fight their way through. About $150,000 was taken out of this mine in bullion, and as much more undoubtedly stolen. When they struck the sulphides, which occurred at the water level, the mine was abandoned, and it has never been worked since. No similar discovery was made anywhere else in the district.

But the district is now witnessing other forms of mining enterprises which, while not so sensational as the episodes of the sixties, promise more substantial results. One of the latest developments is that carried out by the Canadian Talc & Silica Company. The Talc Company have put in a new sifting plant which embodies some new and original ideas and has been givnig perfect results. This development promises to be of a very substantial nature, somewhat in contrast to the last time Eldorado was in the limelight. To-day there are those who believe that Hastings County will soon see many great mining industries established. Recently a discovery was made of rock showing cobalt bloom and carrying some silver, which has had the effect of starting many prospectors working in similar formations. A newspaper reports the discovery of a new body of hematite ore. Some fine specimens of flour spar, collected from a vein on the property of Arthur Coe, situated on the north side of Moira Lake, have also attracted a good deal of attention.

THE HEALTH OF THE CITY.

THIS IS A SEASON of Annual Reports, they are coming from all directions; the latest are from the Medical Officer of Health, Dr. McPherson, and the City Sanitary Inspector, Mr. Spence. All of these Reports should be carefully studied by every citizen who desires to take an intelligent interest in civic affairs.

According to Dr. McPherson's report the city has been very fortunate during the last year so far as contagious and virulent diseases are concerned. Out of 126 cases of measles only two proved fatal. Out of 18 typhoid cases no deaths are recorded; only one in 15 who suffered from scarlet fever died from that disease. Diphtheria claimed no victims out of 7 cases. All this is extremely gratifying and indicates that the city is in a good sanitary condition. At the same time we are not able to calculate as to how far this satisfactory state of things is due to the supervision and preventive measures of our Health Officer and especially of the vigilant patrol of Inspector Spence. Some people think that we ought to have another inspector in the city to assist Mr. Spence in his work. Perhaps the best way in which the city could assist our present Sanitary Inspector would be to pay him a decent salary. There are a great many things run on the cheap in Peterborough and the man who does the most work does not always get paid in proportion. Here is a list which gives an approximate idea of the year's work of our Sanitary Inspector:

2,000 calls and inspection.
350 detailed inspections.
71 visits to dairy farms.
68 visits to slaughter houses.
245 complaints investigated.
271 notices for the suppression of nuisances served.
205 samples of milk procured and tested.
76 recorded tests for dirt in milk.
15 Police Court cases.

These figures do not of course cover all the work that must have been done in the year, they really only cover 11 months, but considering there are only 365 days in a year, and 52 of these are Sundays, the above is not a bad record. When we reflect that Mr. Spence is the only officer engaged in actually ferreting out the plague spots of the city we can realize that we are placing upon one man a great responsibility and for this we are paying him a little over fifteen dollars per week.

Mr. Spence in his report refers to "privies" being in the neighborhood of wells which are used for drinking purposes. This is a very serious matter and will doubtless be remedied as soon as the new system of city drainage is completed. There are houses within the city limits which are without city water. It is to be hoped that this work will be proceeded with in the early spring, as we have plenty of good water and every citizen should enjoy the benefit of our splendid service.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY REPORT.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Children's Aid Society, which was published in The Review yesterday, will be read with interest by all those who follow the work of this very estimable institution. It is good to find that the Society has secured the services of Mr. R. W. Travers, as president for another year. Mr. Travers has a large heart and has a real interest in the work among the children. Altogether about seventy-three children have been under the care of the Society for the past year, thirty-two of which were dealt with direct in the Secretary's office, forty-one children being in the shelter during the year.

The high cost of living enters into the Society's consideration and is said to have had its effect upon the children in the matter of neglect. The Curfew Law is also referred to and the Society urges closer police vigilance in the outlying streets of the city—when will the city cease to talk about this and get to business?

Chief Thompson and his staff are thanked by the Society for their attendance at the Juvenile Court, and the Chief no doubt does his best with the small staff at his disposal. But the first business of the police is to keep the children, as far as possible, from coming into the court at all. As to the opening of this Court to the press, there are two sides to this question, and perhaps the police are in the right in censoring reports of crime among children, as it sometimes tends to aggravate the evil.

There is a great deal of matter for reflection contained in the report, and it is to be hoped that citizens will make a close study of the points raised. The children are the source of the life of the community for the future. We have a distinct duty to perform in protecting them and keeping the stream of young life pure. The Children's Aid Society are endeavoring to do this in a public way, and all private individuals might well follow their example.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE GLOBE is always harping on the tardiness of the coming of the Parcel Post. It is a little late. The Globe's Party had fifteen years in which to speed its advent and what did they do in the matter?

CENTRIPETAL and centrifugal are two words which a "lecturer" on "Gravitation" did not know how to pronounce properly the other evening. He ought to have looked up the dictionary, as it is a very serious matter to take these names in vain.

A FRENCH DIPLOMAT at Tangiers was shot by his chef in the presence of his guests whom he had invited to attend an official dinner. No reason is given for the murder, but if the chief cook wanted to dispose of his master he could have done so more easily.

IT HAS BEEN REMARKED before that it is not good to eat mustard without beef. It seems that the Yonge Street Mission of Toronto, has been feeding the unemployed on mustard sandwiches. Mr. De Fleury said it was "an insult to offer a decent working-man bread and mustard to eat." There was warmth in the gift nevertheless.

A NEW LABOR CRISIS has occurred in London which literally touches every fireside. Ten thousand coal porters are already on strike, the general carters are inclined to strike in sympathy, while a lockout in the building trade is threatened. The total number of employees involved in the three disputes exceeds 200,000. The old land might well be said to be very much stricken, and these strikes generally seem to strike at the working-man the hardest.

Dr. Arthur Lynch.

Montreal Telegraph.

Dr. Arthur Lynch, journalist, civil engineer, poet, physician, and Nationalist M.P., has written a novel in French. To write romantic literature in a foreign language is always enormously difficult, and even Oscar Wilde's "Salome" bears on it the mark of a clever man using a language that is not his own. Dr. Lynch fought for the Boers, was tried for high treason, and sentenced to death. But his sentence was commuted and he only suffered a short term of imprisonment. He is a tall, gentle mannered man, with large dreamy eyes, and he shudders when a fly is killed.

The Best Service.

He serves his country best
Who lives pure life, and doeth righteous deed.
And walks straight paths, however others stray,
And leaves his sons, as uttermost bequest,
A stainless record which all men may read:
This is the better way.

No drop but serves the slowly lifting tide;
No dew but has an errand to some flower,
No smallest star but sheds some helpful ray,
And man by man, each helping all the rest,
Make the firm bulwark of the country's power;
There is no better way.

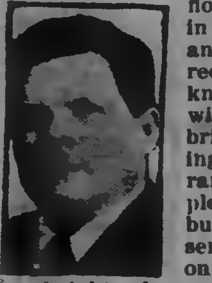
HOME SWEET HOME

By Walt Mason



Oh, Home! It is a sacred place—or was, in olden days, before the people learned to chase to moving picture plays; to tango dances and such things, to skating on a floor; and now the youthful laughter rings within the Home no more. You will recall, old men and dames, the homes of long ago, and you'll recall the fireside games the children used to know. The neighbor's kids would come along with your own kids to play, and merry as a bridal song the evening passed away. An evening spent away from home in olden days was rare; the children hadn't learned to roam for pleasure everywhere. But now your house is but a shell where children sleep and eat; it serves that purpose very well—their home is on the street. Their home is where the lights are bright, where rag-time music flows; their noon's the middle of the night, their friends are—Lord, who knows? The windows of your home are dark, and silence broods o'er all; you call it Home—God save the mark! 'Tis but a sty or stall!

Mr. Amyot ran for Parliament once but was beaten by a youth of twenty-three after a memorable contest. He has been a vice-president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

U. S. President Will Announce Views In a Short Time.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—How to dispose of the Panama Canal tolls question was the subject uppermost in discussion about the capitol yesterday when the attitude of President Wilson, outlined to the Senate foreign relations committee Monday night became public. The President's position was asserted to be that the provision of the Panama Canal Act, granted toll exemption to American coastwise vessels is in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which proclaims that the canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and war of all nations "on terms of entire equality," and that "charges of traffic should be just and equitable."

Before any definite action is taken in Congress, it was said last night by administration leaders, a public statement from the President on the question will be awaited. President Wilson himself, after the night conference with the Senators, said he would proclaim his views on the subject at a future time.

Refused To Allow Title.

PARIS, Jan. 28.—Officials of the French Chamber of Deputies yesterday declined to permit the prefix prince to be used in connection with the name of the son of Prince Victor Napoleon in a question addressed to the Government.

Deputy Fernand Engerand put a written question to the Minister of the Interior asking whether "Prince Napoleon Louis," who was born on Jan. 23, was exiled from France under the provisions of the act of 1886, forbidding the heads and heirs of former reigning families of France to enter the republic.

Paul Deschanel, the Speaker, requested the deputy to amend his question, which he did.

No response has yet been given.

Dies From Smallpox.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., Jan. 28.—With the first death in the history of the city from smallpox yesterday, when Philip Wagner died from blood poisoning superinduced by smallpox, Niagara Falls faces a possible quarantine by Canada. Dr. H. R. Elliott and F. W. E. Wilson of Niagara Falls, Ont., were yesterday appointed inspectors by the Dominion authorities to prevent all unvaccinated persons from entering Canada from this city. There are one hundred and twenty-seven cases of smallpox recorded here to-day.

Two Honored Islanders Dead.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Jan. 28.—Newfoundland lost its only two companions of the Imperial Order of St. Michael and St. George yesterday by the death of James Pitts, a prominent financier, and Judge Woodley Prowse. Pitts was a legislative councillor, former Cabinet Minister and one of the wealthiest men in the colony.

Prowse retired some time ago as judge of the district court on account of old age.

PARTICIPATED IN OUTRAGES.

Alfred Lehman Admits Assisting In Sixteen Bomb Affairs.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28. — Alfred Lehman, an under-sized youth scarcely out of his teens, sat in the witness chair yesterday and confessed to having partaken in 16 bomb outrages, revealed knowledge of 80, cleared up the mystery of two murders and furnished information concerning a number of lesser crimes, including arson and burglary.

Lehman was called as a witness in the trial of Angelo Sylvester, accused of one of the bomb outrages. Lehman told the court of the burning of two Brooklyn houses for the insurance money and many other lesser crimes. He said the bomb outrages usually brought the men doing the work $50.

"The gang I worked for," he said, "were blackhanders. The boss would write letters demanding money under threats of death to well-to-do Italians. When they did not 'come across' I was sent with a bomb. They usually paid up after the explosion of the bomb. If they didn't, we went after 'em again."

AN ABDUCTION—IT PROVED A QUICKER PROCESS THAN EXTRADITION

By HELOISE BRAYTON

Evelyn Wheaton lost her mother when Evelyn was a baby, and her father died when she was seventeen. She was heir to a large fortune, and everybody knows that a rich minor without a natural protector is an object of plunder on the part of all unscrupulous persons. Mr. Wheaton had placed great confidence in one Peter Whitbeck and his wife, Mary, and, knowing that his days were numbered, made a will appointing the Whitbecks Evelyn's guardians with the management of her property till she should become twenty-one years old.

Mrs. Whitbeck was a covetous woman. It is quite probable that if it had not been for her the incidents contained in this story would not have taken place. Wheaton's confidence in Peter Whitbeck's integrity might have been justified had not the latter fallen under the influence of his wife. As it was, no sooner had Wheaton passed away than Mrs. Whitbeck began to plot to get possession of Evelyn's fortune. The will gave her every opportunity, inasmuch as in addition to giving her husband the care of the estate it gave her the care of Evelyn herself, for by its terms the heiress was to live with the Whitbecks till she attained her majority.

The residence of these persons was in Vermont. At the time of her father's death Evelyn was attending school at Northampton, Mass., and desired to finish the academic year there. To this the Whitbecks made no objection. Mrs. Whitbeck was anxious to get her bearings as to the will and study out the best way of getting the fortune or as much of it as possible into her possession.

But, though Evelyn had but a few months left at school, that happened which later gave her a champion. She met Arthur Pendleton, then a law student, and the two became engaged. Pendleton was not looking for a fortune by marriage. Indeed, he did not know that Evelyn had any property until some time after she had returned to her home and written him concerning some suspicions she had gathered as to the disposition of it by her guardians. From certain moves made by the Whitbecks which Evelyn could not understand it was evident to Pendleton that something was wrong with the administration of the estate.

Evelyn had not been intimate with the Whitbecks before her father's death and was not disposed to communicate the fact of her engagement to them. At any rate, she put it off from time to time. But certain well filled envelopes coming to the home addressed in a man's hand made Mrs. Whitbeck suspicious, and steaming the paste on one of them, she read the inclosure to learn that Pendleton was explaining to Evelyn that from information she had given him he was sure her guardian was acting contrary to law.

Mrs. Whitbeck resealed the envelope and returned it as she had found it to Evelyn. The former was in frequent consultation with David Miller, a lawyer who gave his services on promise of being well paid in case he could secure the property for her without subjecting her to criminal procedure. After opening Evelyn's letter she went to this attorney and told him what Pendleton had said. Miller advised her to change her residence to Canada. This would be advantageous in case her husband or she should be proceeded against criminally, and it would also be of benefit in enabling her to keep possession of Evelyn herself, for it might in time be necessary for them to take the ground that the heiress was incapable of managing her property.

When it was announced to Evelyn that Mr. Whitbeck's affairs needed a change of residence to Canada, and that the removal was to be made at once, she was appalled. She refused to go, but was informed that by the terms of her father's will she must live with the Whitbecks until she attained her majority. This and the fact that she had no other home won her over.

The Whitbecks took up their residence in a small town not far north of the boundary line between the United States and Canada. It was not long before Evelyn learned that they were giving out reports that she had been acting queerly. She determined to leave them at once, and without communicating her design, made her preparations for flight. But Mrs. Whitbeck, who was watching her, suspected her intention and, searching her room, discovered concealed a suit case containing such articles as one would need on a journey.

The town in which these persons lived was in the province of Ontario, some ten miles from the northern limit of New York. It had been chosen by the Whitbecks because it was the headquarters of a body of the mounted Canadian police, and should Evelyn attempt to escape them this force would be available to prevent her doing so.

When Mrs. Whitbeck learned of Evelyn's intended flight she notified the police that the girl had shown symptoms of insanity and she feared might attempt to take her life. If they saw her making for the St. Lawrence river, which was but a mile or two distant, they were to bring her back. The consequence was that Evelyn had not got out of town before a policeman stopped her and, not heeding her protest, took her to Mrs. Whitbeck, who, with a show of great concern and tenderness, took her in and locked her up.

The villainy of the game that was being played was now apparent to Evelyn, and she was filled with consternation. That which she most dreaded was being put in a lunatic asylum and kept there while her guardians appropriated her property. But such a course at present did not accord with their plans. They were working with their lawyer to shift about certain property by legal process with a view to finally getting it into the hands of a confederate. What most interested them was in keeping the heiress with them and under such strict duress that she could get no one to help her. Between her and Mrs. Whitbeck there was only the thin pretense of the latter that she believed Evelyn to be under such a nervous strain as to need constant watching.

Evelyn's letters were intercepted, but it is more difficult to prevent one from sending a letter than receiving one. Evelyn wrote her situation to Pendleton and dropped it, with a coin, to a boy passing under her window. He posted it for her, and the next day it was in her fiance's hands.

Pendleton was now in possession of the facts of the case, but he was appalled at the difficulties in the way of saving his betrothed. Ordinary legal technicalities are often discouraging, but when to these is added a problem of extradition they are next to hopeless. Added to this, Pendleton had no fortune of his own, and Evelyn's was in the hands of her jailers.

There was but one hope—kidnaping. On this he resolved, but soon after entering upon his preparations learned that the town where Evelyn was held a captive was the headquarters of a Canadian police force. Nevertheless, since there was no other plan open to him, he resolved to undertake it.

Pendleton needed an assistant and looked among his acquaintances for a suitable person to aid him. His choice fell upon Walter Bankhead, a man of nerve and energy. Bankhead, having consented, went ahead and hired the fastest team he could find. The same evening Pendleton joined him, and they crossed the St. Lawrence river by ferry, hiring the ferryman for a good sum to be on the Canadian shore till midnight, ready to push off at a moment's notice. Midway between the river and the point of their attack they hired another team to act as a relay, to be waiting in the road for them on their return.

The two young men entered the town about 9 o'clock at night, inquired the way to Whitbeck's house, and on reaching it Pendleton went to the door and rang the bell. Bankhead stood close behind him. Whitbeck opened the door. Pendleton dashed upstairs while Bankhead held Whitbeck cowed at the point of a pistol. Pendleton opened a door, then another. A third he found locked and kicked it open. Within he found Evelyn, who had not gone to bed. Taking her by the arm, he led her downstairs. Mrs. Whitbeck, in dishabille, opened her bedroom door and, seeing what was going on, ran to a front window and shouted for the police.

In a twinkling the two men got the girl into the conveyance and had covered a mile before Bankhead, looking back, announced that they were followed. Evelyn, whose surprise had worn off and who was eager for the success of her kidnaping, gave a little scream, but a word from Pendleton calmed her. At the same time he brought the whip down upon the horses' haunches.

Now commenced a race between the fugitives and the mounted police. The police gained and had diminished the distance between them and the fugitives by more than half when the latter reached the relay standing in the road. Not half a minute was consumed in making the transfer, and they were off again with a fresh team. By this time the horses of the policemen, having gone over five miles, were a trifle jaded, and the kidnapers began to draw away from them. A bullet whistled over the fugitives' heads.

"Good!" exclaimed Bankhead. "When a policeman resorts to firing he knows he's going to lose his quarry."

"But we have a river to cross," suggested Pendleton.

A single horse was heard clattering ahead of the others, and a man slowly came nearer. Bankhead fired a shot over his head and he evidently feared being hit, for he fell back. After this the distance between the kidnapers and the police grew visibly less, though the latter kept on, doubtless hoping to take the party at the river. But the ferryman was ready, and the fugitives, abandoning their team, jumped into the stern of the boat, the oars bent and boat and load shot out into the broad river. When the police reached the bank the fugitives were more than halfway over.

Pendleton and Evelyn were married as soon as they reached the south bank of the river, Bankhead being best man. There were no flowers, no gifts, no bridal veil, no orange blossoms, and yet this simple wedding was full of happiness.

Pendleton, on getting his fiancee on United States soil, as her attorney called for an accounting of the estate through the courts. A compromise was made by which 90 per cent of the property was saved to the heiress.

The scheme to get possession of the minor's property, planned and executed by her guardians, was only equaled in ingenuity by the counterplan of her betrothed. In daring his plan far exceeded theirs.

"Color Music" Is Latest Art.

"Color music," the new art of Prof. A. Wallace Rimington of Queen's College, London, is expected to have upon another sense emotional and stimulative effects similar to those of music upon the hearing.

A book expounding the theories has been published, and the principles are being demonstrated with a novel instrument called the color organ, on which compositions in colored lights are being prepared and exhibited.

The organ has keys and stops with pedals to regulate intensity. The upper portion of the instrument has apertures from which are projected the colors controlled by the keys, and these colors appear on a white screen at the opposite end of the darkened hall. To enhance the effect this screen is draped in folds, surrounded with black and framed in a double band of white.

Playing with colors for entertainment is so far an unfamiliar field, but aside from this the new apparatus should prove of value in a practical way by giving instruction in color harmony in decoration.

Twenty-eight million Bibles were published last year.

NOTABLE BIOGRAPHER GONE.

Henry J. Morgan Accomplished Huge Life Work.

Dr. Henry J. Morgan, one of the greatest authorities on Canadian biography and the publisher of Morgan's Canadian Men and Women of the Times, died at his home in Brockville of heart failure a few days ago.

Henry J. Morgan was born of Scottish parents in the city of Quebec in November, 1842. He was educated at Morrin College and when only 11 years of age entered the public service of United Canada. He acted as private secretary to Hon. Isaac Buchanan, president of the council in the Tache-Macdonald administration and about the same time edited The Industrial Politics of America, embracing Mr. Buchanan's views on protection for home industries. The lad, Morgan, was also secretary to Hon. William MacDougall, Provincial Secretary in the Belleau-Macdonald Government.

When Confederation was accomplished Dr. Morgan was appointed to a position in the State Department at Ottawa. In the meantime he had studied law and in 1873 was called to the bars of Quebec and Ontario. During the same year he was placed in charge of the Canadian public records and carried out the work of bringing to the capital all the historical documents which for years had been lying in vaults in different Canadian cities. Two years later he was appointed keeper of the records, a position he held until his retirement in 1895.

Dr. Morgan's literary career began when he was 16 years of age. At that time he was Parliamentary correspondent at Toronto for a number of eastern papers. He wrote the story of the Prince of Wales' tour of Canada and the United States in 1860. He organized the Parliamentary Guides, the source of information for the Dominion on all things pertaining to members of Parliament and electoral affairs. His first edition of Canadian Men and Women of the Times appeared in 1898, containing nearly 3,000 sketches. The latest edition, that of 1912, contains nearly 8,000.

Dr. Morgan was elected corresponding member of a number of historical associations throughout the country and his services to the cause of history were recognized by the leading societies all over the world. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and three years ago was elected a member of the Authors' Club in London.

The deceased married a daughter of the late Hon. A. N. Richards, who predeceased him. He is survived by three sons and one daughter.

Dr. Morgan resided in Ottawa until about a year ago, when he moved to Brockville, where he occupied the old Richards' homestead until the time of his death.

Poor Seidlitz Powders.

Dominion Analyist McGill, of Ottawa, has for some time past been conducting war on seidlitz powders over all the Dominion in an effort to protect the public against frauds and impurities. This is the first inspection and analysis of seidlitz powders made under the act, and the result is published as a warning bulletin with the suggestion that prosecutions will follow the gross carelessness in their manufacture in future.

There were 167 samples taken, and of these 62 were genuine, 73 adulterated and 13 gave evidence of gross carelessness in weighing, the difference between the accurate amount of the blue paper 160 grains, and the white paper 35 grains, to be more than ten per cent. There were 34 samples which weighed more than 170 grains, 52 samples weighed less than 150 grains. In a number of cases the ratio of rochelle salt and bicarbonate of soda contained in blue paper is altogether abnormal. Fully fifty per cent. of the seidlitz powders made are adulterated, notwithstanding the liberal latitude under the act. In future the department will insist on these powders being accurate in weight and up to the standard in all other respects.

DENOUNCES THE DANCE

Rev. Dr. Henderson Against the Present Day Dances

The following despatch from St. Catharines will be interesting to Peterborough people as Rev. Dr. Henderson is a former pastor of Charlotte street Methodist church. He went to St. Catharines when Rev. T. J. Mansell came to this city from Brantford.

St. Catharines, Ont., Jan. 26.—"I just now called Herodias an unnatural mother for sending her young innocent daughter to dance before that roomful of half drunken, lustful men," said Rev. Dr. G. W. Henderson last night in the course of his sermon at Welland Avenue Methodist church, referring to the dance question. "What would you say of the modern twentieth century mother who sends her young and innocent daughter to a dancing class or allows her to take part in the ordinary round dance of the average ballroom? Would you say she was an unnatural mother or merely a thoughtless one?"

His remarks created quite a sensation among the congregation, as many of the young ladies of the church regularly go to dances and dancing classes with the permission of their mothers, of course.

The remarks of the minister are considered as having reference to a number of letters which have recently appeared in the newspapers here defending the tango. These letters were from dancing teachers, who claimed the tango is perfectly decent and proper if properly danced.

The women of the Lutheran Churches of Nebraska pledged all the money from the eggs laid by their hens for six successive Sundays for the purpose of building a private School at Hebron, and in all $13,000 was earned by the hens.

At 10 cents a drink the United States liquor bill figures $850,000,000 for the year. And the value of all the bread made in the bakeries of the country was but $396,865,000.

REPORTS OF THE MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICER AND THE SANITARY INSPECTOR

The following reports were presented to the Board of Health at the meeting yesterday morning:

Report of M. H. O.

Gentlemen:

I beg to present to you a report of the work done during the year 1913.

It gives me pleasure to say that there has been more practical progress made this year than in any of the three preceding years that I have been in charge of the health department. This is due in part to the efficient health act we now have, in part to the active support of the members of the Board, and not a little to the good work of our Sanitary Inspector.

During the eleven months past we have been blessed to a freedom from any serious epidemic, and in fact, we have been very free from serious disease of any kind. It is interesting to note that according to the Registrar General's report for 1912, Peterboro has the lowest death rate of any city in Ontario. That must be a source of very great satisfaction to you who are interested with the health of the citizens and should give you confidence to continue in the same aggressive maner in order that you may maintain the same high standard.

Epidemic of Measles

During the year we suffered from an epidemic of measles, that began about the beginning of the new year, reached its height in April, and terminated about the middle of May. In all about 126 places were placarded, including the Barnardo Home, The Children's Shelter and the St. Vincent's Orphanage. Quite a percentage of those attacked were adults. The disease was of a rather severe type, although only two deaths were reported. Both cases were complicated. Owing to the fact that quarantine was enforced, we found it advisable to use the diphtheria side of the hospital for measles. Altogether we accommodated 44 patients.

Next in order, comes typhoid with 18 cases reported in. In all probability there were more, as often times the case is not reported in at all. Many times the physician is in doubt until the disease progresses. By the time that he is convinced that his patient is suffering from typhoid, he has forgotten, or he neglects to report it. Thus it makes it difficult to follow up the case and determine the source of the infection and if we do learn the source, we are several weeks late in warning those who may be in danger from the same cause. Of the 18 cases reported in, 5 had been visiting or living out of town just previous to being taken ill. Seven were using well water, one was a nurse who had been waiting on a typhoid patient. The remaining five were using city water in their homes. In one of these cases boiled water was used exclusively. Where there are so many mills and so many houses without sanitary conveniences, it is surprising that there is not more sickness of this nature

Scarlet fever comes next with 15 cases, eleven of whom were treated in the hospital. It is interesting to note that in only one house was there a second case, and that occurred before the first one was taken away.

Diphtheria was reported from 6 families, and in one family two children were affected. Four of these were treated in the hospital.

The following is a list of the cases reported in:

	No. cases reported	No. dths
Measles	126	2
Typhoid	18	0
Scarlet	15	1
Diphtheria	7	0
Tuberculosis	7	0
Smallpox	1	0

We have purchased three maps of the city, one for typhoid, one for tuberculosis, and one for scarlet fever and diphtheria. As the cases are reported in, the locality is marked with a pin.

Sanitary Work

The sanitary work in the city has progressed very much last year and we are planning for a futher development next year. Before the warm weather began we had the attention of the public drawn, through the columns of the daily press to the section of the health act relating to cleaning up the premises. This was followed by a thorough systematic inspection of as much of the city as time permitted. In this tour the inspector examines the premises inside and outside. The following are the important points that are noted: the number of occupants, the amount of accommodation, the fitness as a dwelling house, the facilities for disposal of the sewage and kitchen refuse, the sickness during the year, the water supply, the animals kept, the cleanliness of the house and the premises generally. These are tabulated systematically in a book which we had made for the purpose. Where the conditions are unsatisfactory, these are pointed out and if necessary, a notice is left, giving them a reasonable time to clean up. This is followed up and if our request is not acceeded to, a complaint is laid before the magistrate. I am glad to say that during the year there were only 15 police court cases. We are of the opinion that our work is to a great extent educational. Sometimes it is the tenant, sometimes it is the landlord, that requires the training. But in spite of our efforts, there is a great deal to be done if we are going to have our citizens living under the conditions most conducive to health. We still have a great many outside privies that are contaminating the wells, the atmosphere, providing a first class breeding place for flies and often making it uncomfortable sometimes almost unbearable for the neighbors in the hot oppressive summer evenings. The compulsory sewer-connection by-law will make it much easier to remedy this unsanitary condition where there are sewers and city water on the street. But where these conveniences are not present, suggestions are made as to changes that will minimize the danger and discomfort.

The matter of keeping cows, pigs, chickens and other animals on the premises, gives rise to conditions that call forth complaints from the neighbors. The larger the city becomes, the more this complaint must be listened to, and action taken to provide a remedy. There is nothing definite in the act with regard to the keeping of any animals except pigs. In respect to the others, the clause referring to conditions which are unsanitary or detrimental to health, is the one that forms the basis for any action we may take. There is no doubt that the unsanitary conditions that are associated with the keeping of these animals are responsible for a certain amount of sickness. The wells often become infected through the source being contaminated or from surface water draining in or from infectious material which is deposited in the covering of the well and which is washed in through the cracks.

Poor Dwellings

There are a large number of dwellings that are far from what they should be in the city of this size. Sometimes the building is not worth repairing or the amount of rent does not warrant any expenditures. Sometimes an old building is divided into two or the upper floors in the business blocks are turned into flats without a thought of the comfort and health of those who are to occupy them. The result is that we often find a bedroom or a bathroom and closet without any provision for light or ventilation except from another room. Premises without a water supply or without sanitary conveniences separate from their neighbors are frequently found. In one case a landlord has the front part of a house divided into two parts to be let to different parties, while the kitchen (a small one at that), is used in common. Many other conditions of a similar nature could be brought to your notice that are not conducive to the welfare of the people. We are trying to improve matters as far as we are able. There are many difficulties in the way, as you gentlemen know, perhaps the greatest is the need of houses suitable for the working class that will be cheap enough and still situated near enough to the different factories.

The hotels, restaurants, boarding houses, baker shops, butcher shops, fruit stores, slaughter houses, laundries and dairy farms have been systematically inspected. A number of written reports of the conditions found, have been presented to you during the year and the work that we are trying to do has met with your approval. In the cases we are insisting on general cleanliness of the premises and of the employees, proper sanitary conveniences, properly situated, and a freedom from flies as far as possible.

During the year several health by-laws were passed by the council on the recommendation of the Board, and others were resurrected. The compulsory sewer connection by-law will make it easier to secure proper sanitary conveniences in places where nuisances exist. The by-law prohibiting the dry sweeping of the sidewalks is another important piece of legislation and will help to promote the comfort and health of the citizens. We attempted to enforce the regulations with regard to the exposure of food products, but found that our jurisdiction in this respect did not extend within the street line. If such is the case, we hope to secure the desired result in another way. Spitting on the sidewalk and in public places is a dirty dangerous habit. The fight against tuberculosis has brought this more forcibly to our minds and it was decided to pass a by-law prohibiting it. Then follows the recommendations already published.

Dr. McPherson,
Medical Officer of Health,

Dear Sir :—

In submitting my second annual report for your consideration it is somewhat difficult to give a complete statistical record of the work accomplished but the following figures are an epitome of the most important work performed during 1913.

2000 calls and inspections.
850 detailed inspections.
71 visits to dairy farms.
63 visits to slaughter houses.
245 complaints investigated.
271 notices for the suppression of nuisances served.
205 samples of milk procured and tested.
76 recorded tests for dirt in milk.
15 Police Court cases.

The foregoing figures do not of course convey an adequate idea of the amount of work done, as a considerable amount of time is consumed in clerical work and correspondence, records of milk tests, grading of dairy farms, records of detailed inspection work, etc. The extension of the garbage collecting system, with the organization of new routes, the breaking in of collectors, and superintendance of the system has also occupied far too great a proportion of my time—time that should have been devoted to the detailed inspection work. A constant supervision of the yards and lanes has been maintained, bakeries, restaurants, laundries, butcher shops, boarding houses, hotels have been inspected from time to time.

The following particulars relating to what I have termed "detailed inspection" may prove interesting. Of the 850 that come under this head, 366 or about 43 per cent, possessed insanitary features of a greater or less degree ; 480 were supplied with city water ; 350 had wells, while 37 had no water supply on the premises; 225 had sewer connection ; 604 were provided with outside closets ; 250 of the total number or about 30 per cent. kept poultry. Eight houses were condemned as unfit for habitation in their present condition.

Complaints.

Of the total number of complaints received about half related to the garbage collecting, while the remainder, on investigation, 17 were found to be either frivolous or groundless.

Notices.

A considerably less number of nuisance notices than last year has been issued. The accumulation of ashes and refuse formerly accounted for a great number of these notices. This has been minimized by the garbage collecting system. Only 52 of the 271 notices issued referred to the cleaning of the yards.

Milk Supply.

The average test per cent. fat for the year of the 39 milk vendors of this city is 3.55 showing that the milk supply is of a good standard. The highest individual average is 4.45 and the lowest 3.1. Six vendors show an average test of 4 per cent. or over, sixteen between 3.5 and 4 per cent., and 17 between 3 and 3.5. There are also 32 other persons holding licenses for the privilege of selling milk to their neighbors.

The inspection of the dairy farms has resulted in many improvements being made, and I have almost invariably found that not only the milk vendors who produce their own milk, but the farmers who supply to the vendors, are willing to carry out any suggestions made by me with reference to the remodelling of their stables, and the ensuring of a pure milk supply produced under sanitary conditions. 44 dairy farms have been inspected and graded according to the standard recommended by the Provincial Board of Health, defects pointed out and improvements recommended.

It is my intention to grade these again this winter, when, no doubt, a higher standard will be attained. The apparatus for showing the amount of dirt in milk has been of great value, as the milkman has an ocular demonstration made before him which serves to impress upon him the necessity of careful straining, and handling both in the stable and in the transit.

Boarding Houses.

The boarding houses have been carefully inspected. And the result of this inspection warrants the advocacy of licensing the same. I have found cases of inadequate lighting and ventilation besides inadequate lavatory convenience, and overcrowding especially in Italian boarding houses.

Very insanitary features have also been noticed in apartments in the heart of the city recently remodelled or built which justifies me making a request that these plans should be submitted to the Board of Health. For instance imagine a bathroom and lavatory placed in the middle of a suite of rooms with no light or ventilation, except a fan light opening into the drawing room and this in a modern dwelling only lately completed. Or again, a W. C. allowed to be placed in a clothes cupboard, with absolutely no light or ventilation except a door leading into a bedroom ; or still worse, a W. C. in the middle of a bedroom, not enclosed in any way, and of an obsolete pattern at that. These instances are contrary to all laws of hygiene and sanitation, and we should be justified in condemning such conditions.

Meat Supply.

The expose last spring of the conditions under which the meat supply of Peterborough was produced has resulted in a vast improvement being made in the slaughter houses affected thereby, and a better supply of meat being put on the market. The retail butchers are I believe honest in their intentions to deal only in sound and wholesome meat but they are at the mercy of unscrupulous drovers and farmers. The latter will refuse to sell their best beasts unless the poor ones are taken at the same time, and the buyer must either go without or make the best of a bad bargain. Naturally he chooses the latter course, and as a diseased carcass can be so "faked" as to deceive any but a skilled and trained eye, it is foisted upon the consumer. The remedy for this evil is a public abattoir which I trust will receive the earnest attention of the Council of 1914.

Progress.

The past year has seen great strides in sanitation, notably the extension of the garbage collecting system, the building of an incinerator and the passing of a compulsory sewer connection by-law, and I trust the coming year will be as fruitful in measures to safeguard the public health. Much remains to be done before Peterborough can stand in the front rank as a sanitary city, but with the co-operation of an enlightened public, and a spirit of civic patriotism this desideratum will be attained.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) C. A. G. Spence,
Sanitary Inspector.

LABOR LEADERS ARE DEPORTED

South African Government Takes Drastic Action.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, Jan. 27.—The Government has decided to deport ten of the principal labor leaders, including President Watson and General Secretary Bain of the Trades Federation. Under a strong escort the men were taken yesterday from Transvaal to Natal and late last night were put aboard a steamer, which sailed this morning, stopping at no port until it reaches England.

This action was taken by virtue of martial law, which is still in force in Natal, from which province the deportation can legally take place. Measures will be taken to prevent the men's return to South Africa.

If gas, gasoline, or kerosene is used, light the oven at least 10 minutes before you put your cake in to bake.

It is estimated that there are about 500,000 workers engaged in making clothes in the United States.

NEWS NOTES FROM OMEMEE

Special Correspondence

OMEMEE, Jan. 28.—The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian Church will hold a parlor social at the home of Mrs. A. Mahood, on the evening of Friday, Feb. 6th. A program and a supper will please the guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Cronk of Port Rowan, are the guests of her father, Mr. Thos. Henderson, of King St.

Friday was a gala day for the East Victoria farmers, who, with their wives, assembled in Coronation Hall, Omemee. In the afternoon there were simultaneous meetings of the Women's and Farmers' Institutes at which there was much business relating to the home, the land and stock, discussed. At 7.30 p.m., a joint assemblage took possession of the Opera House which was well filled. Reeve Mulligan was the genial chairman, following whose humorous remarks there were addresses by Mrs. W. J. Hunter of Pleasant Point, Messrs. J. W. Clark of Cainsville, S. N. Pearce of Iona, and Mr. A. A. Knights, assistant of Lindsay. The addresses were interspersed with a literary and musical program, contributed by local talent, which made the evening pass very pleasantly and instructively. Live topics of interest were presented and discussed with proficiency and didactic effect. President I. H. Fee and his associates are to be congratulated.

Mr. James Stubbs of Peterboro, called on Omemee friends when in town Wednesday, on business.

Miss Jennett has returned to her home in town, after an extended visit with out-of-town friends.

Some of the business visitors to Peterboro on Saturday were; Mrs. Wm. and Miss M. Cottingham, Messrs. N. Fee, J. Gal, A. Toole, W. Mitchell, B. Fee, R. Skuce, T. Rowan, P. Parsons, J. Sherin, J. H. Best and J. Fee.

Proprietor Parsons of the skating rink, will put on a grand prize carnival soon. Watch for particulars on posters.

The G. T. R. has reduced the return railway fare to Peterboro by 5 cents, and increased the return fare to Lindsay by 5 cents.

The Misses A. and L. Parsons, N. Thurston and J. Smith, of Omemee, drove out to Janetville on Friday evening, and assisted on the program of a concert.

A number of our young military men are attending schools of instruction at Lindsay and Peterboro.

Mr. Ross Laidley is a student at the School of Railway Telegraphy, at Lindsay.

A wooden floor and other inside improvements are in progress at the Armories.

Mr. Albert Feir of Peterboro, spent Sunday as the guest of his mother, Mrs. A. Feir, of Sturgeon St.

The Ontario Ladies' Quartette entertained a fair sized audience in Coronation Hall on Wednesday evening, under the auspices of the Public Library.

Miss Pearl O'Neill needed no introduction as she was very favorably heard here on a former occasion, and she more than sustained her brilliant reputation. In the class of delineation, she attempts, she is unrivalled. Miss O'Neill was encored again and again and especially in the selection given by request "When Father Laid the Carpet on the Stairs" which she portrayed with more humor than ever.

Miss MacNeill, in vocal solos, duets and quartettes, exhibited a voice of cultured strength, wide range and sweetness of adaptability that called her repeatedly before the footlights.

Miss Wallis executed a number of violin solos with graceful and finished effect that stamped her as an artist of merit. She responded to encores. To Miss Atkey, the accompanist, perhaps the most strenuous part of the program, belonged and she fulfilled her portion with the quiet becoming grace and merit so prominent in the make-up of classy musicians. The inclement weather no doubt, precluded a larger attendance at one of the best and most refined concerts of the season, however the net results increased the coffers of the Public Library by a tidy sum. After the concert the troupe was entertained by Mrs. A. C. Hodgetts, at her home. They left the following morning on the "flyer."

PREMIER HAS THE BEST DAY YET

Sir James Whitney's Progress Gratifying, Say Doctors.

TORONTO, Jan. 28.—"Sir James has had a good day, and is resting well to-night. His progress is gratifying."

With the announcement of this official bulletin last evening, Dr. Alexander McPhedran also said that yesterday was the best day Sir James Whitney has had since his return from New York.

Dr. McPhedran said that no artificial aid to sleep had been administered to Sir James last night, and they hoped he would get through the night without it. He had been taking his nourishment well, and had talked with members of his family, whom he knew.

Great improvement is noticed over Sir James' condition at this time last week, and the longer the improvement continues without a relapse the more encouraging his condition becomes.

Seventy Men Indicted.

NEWARK, N.J., Jan. 28.—Seventy indictments for "high misdemeanor" were returned yesterday by the grand jury which has been investigating the wrecking last August of the Roseville Trust Co. While the names of those indicted could not be learned last night, it is understood that several prominent men, whose notes were found in the bank, are included in the list. Action in their case was taken, it is said, because it was alleged they had entered into a conspiracy with the bank officials to become depositors provided their notes would be accepted should they wish to make a loan.

Kaiser Wilhelm Is 55.

BERLIN, Jan. 28. — Emperor William celebrated his 55th birthday yesterday, hale and vigorous in body and mind and able still, as was shown by his recent woodchopping exploits, to undertake the physical work of a man in the prime of life. All classes of his subjects joined in observing the day, a celebration being held by the university and technical school students, by the academies of arts and sciences, by army and navy officers, by civic organizations and by municipalities and veteran associations throughout the Empire.

MONTREAL "MAIL" EDITORS REPLY TO CHALLENGE OF QUEBEC HOUSE

M. E. Nichols and B. A. McNab in Obedience to Summons Appear Before Provincial Lower House and When Pressed to Give Names Indicated by Blanks in Paper, Charge Two Members.

QUEBEC, Jan. 28. — In the presence of all the members of the Quebec legislative council, and with a big crowd occupying every inch of standing space, M. E. Nichols, president of The Daily Mail Publication Co. of Montreal, and B. A. MacNab, editor of The Mail, which for several days past has been publishing allegations of bribery on the part of J. O. Mousseau, M.P.P., L. P. Berard, M.L.C., and Achille Bergevin, M.L.C., to secure the passage through the Legislature of a decoy bill incorporating the Montreal Fair Association, appeared at the bar of the Legislative Assembly yesterday afternoon in response to a summons from Speaker Delage.

The most dramatice feature was furnished when Mr. MacNab, in reply to demands that he name members of the Legislature not specified in The Mail's charges, named De Varennes, and Gillman, members of the Legislature.

After a further examination at night, Premier Gouin announced that the newspaper men would be called before the Bar of the Upper House.

Messrs. Nichols and MacNab walked together to the Bar in front of the Speaker, Mr. MacNab carrying several rolls of paper in his hand, upon which had been written a summary of the charges published in The Mail, and certain portions of the evidence collected by the detectives, which, the newspaper has claimed, substantiate the allegations.

In answer to questions submitted through the Speaker of the House, the newspaper men read the following written declaration: "We desire to state that the charges which have been made against certain members of the Legislature in the columns of The Montreal Daily Mail, were published by us in good faith and in the public interest.

"We believe, moreover, that these charges were true, and that if the Legislature do desire, evidence can be produced to substantiate them. (Signed) M. E. Nichols, B. A. MacNab."

Questions were urged demanding who were the members of the Legislature whose names were left in blank in The Daily Mail reports.

Mr. MacNab: Inasmuch as a committee of the Legislative Council has been appointed, we would prefer to go into the matter there, but if we are ordered here to give names, we will do so.

Mr. Lavergne moved that such order be given, and the motion was at once carried.

Mr. Nichols: Is it understood that it is an order of the House that this question be answered by us?

The Speaker: Such is the order of this House.

Mr. MacNab then answered as follows: "Four hundred dollars paid to Mr. Mousseau by David W. Hyland, in room 369, Chateau Frontenac, at 8.05 p.m., Tuesday, Jan. 13, 1914. This sum Mr. Mousseau said was for Mr. De Varennes, and $600 on Wednesday, Jan. 14, at 6.30 p.m., in room 369, Chateau Frontenac, to Mr. Mousseau by Mr. Hyland for Mr. De Varennes; $150 paid Mr. Bergevin by George Simpson, on Friday, Jan. 16, was, Mr. Bergegin said, to reimburse him for money he paid to Hon. Mr. Gillman."

Mr. Nichols said: "My answer is the same."

Further enquiry was then adjourned until the evening session and then after another brief examination was adjourned until to-day.

EDGAR SIMPSON KILLS PARENTS AND THEN SHOOTS HIMSELF

In Sudden Fit of Insanity Garafraxa Township Man Mortally Wounds Mother, Shoots Father Dead and Barricades House—Posse Find Him Dead From Self-Inflicted Wound—Young Woman Escapes

ORANGEVILLE, Jan. 28. — The Simpson homestead in East Garafraxa Township, fourteen miles from here, was the scene early yesterday of a revolting double murder and suicide by which Hugh Simpson, a much respected farmer, and his wife, Elizabeth Simpson, were shot to death at the hands of their son. Edward Simpson, who, in an insane frenzy, barricaded himself in the house, withstood the attack of a posse of armed farmers who had surrounded him, and finally took his own life by turning his weapon upon himself.

When High Constable Marshall and Constable Dawson, of Orangeville, entered the farm-house, they found young Simpson's dead body on the floor. Fire, originating from his own self-inflicted shot, had burned off all his clothing and ignited the flooring.

Monday morning Mrs. Simpson was left alone in the house with her son, her husband having gone to Hillsburg, a few miles away for a load of chopped feed, while her daughter, Miss Margaret Simpson, had gone across the road to the Gibsons', a neighboring farm. Young Simpson apparently became insane with very little warning. As the father was returning with his team, and the daughter at the same time entered the gate on her return from the neighbors', they were horrified to see Mrs. Simpson rush out of the house, crying "I'm shot, I'm shot!"

Her husband jumped off his load and ran towards his son, who turned around and fired one shot, which struck his father in the breast, killing him instantly. The daughter, Margaret, jumped into the sleigh, and lashing the horses to a gallop, hurried down the road to alarm the neighbors. Miss Myrtle Gibson, who was accompanying Miss Simpson back to her house, ran to Mrs. Simpson's assistance, despite the fact that the insane murderer stood over her with his rifle. His mother pleaded with him not to shoot any more, but he turned the rifle on her again and emptied it five times into her body. Miss Gibson stood by, a terrified witness of young Simpson's terrible action, naturally expecting that she would be his next victim. She implored him not to shoot. He pointed the gun in her direction, and then, evidently thinking better of it, he started off towards the house, whereupon Miss Gibson ran for her life. Before he entered the house the young maniac turned round again and sped a shot in Miss Gibson's direction, but it missed her.

By this time the neighboring farmers, armed with rifles and shotguns, had begun to assemble, and the murderer from his vantage point in the house shot at them several times while they were removing Simpson senior's body. Mrs. Simpson, although wounded five times, lay moaning in the yard, and by taking a circuitous route, members of the posse were able to remove her from danger.

After the removal of Simpson's dead body and that of his dying wife the farmers proceeded to surround the house in such a way as not to let the murderer escape. By this time the posse numbered nearly a hundred, several of whom took up a position in the barn, while others got behind the front gate and the fences.

They kept up a regular fusilade of bullets and shot in the direction of the house, in the hope of drawing the fire of the imprisoned lunatic for more than an hour.

Telephone messages to Orangeville finally brought Coroner Henry and Dr. T. H. Henry, who were quickly followed by High Constable Marshall and Constable Dawson. Young Simpson was still in the house, but had ceased firing, apparently from lack of ammunition. The high constable then decided upon an approach from the rear, and ordered the farmers with guns to continue firing, in order to divert the maniac's attention toward the front. When they entered, the two constables found Simpson dead.

Mrs. Elizabeth Simpson in her wounded condition was taken to the home of the Depews, a nearby farmhouse. She was shot five times, one bullet penetrating the breast, a second through the head, a third the right side of the neck, a fourth through part of the ear entering the head, and a fifth through the right side of the face. She survived her husband by a bare two hours.

The tragedy caused tremendous excitement in Orangeville and surrounding villages. It appears that the unfortunate murderer of his father and mother, had returned from the west not long ago, and had since complained of pains in his head, and had received medical attention. For some time he had exhibited an irascible and cranky temperament, but no violent form of his trouble was anticipated.

THREE OFFICIALS ARE IN CUSTODY

Only Evans Now at Liberty in Union Life Quartette.

TORONTO, Jan. 28.—Two of the men wanted for conspiracy in connection with the stocks of the Union Life Assurance Co. are in custody, one is being held under surveillance in a sanitarium at Guelph, and the fourth is in Paris, France, having left Toronto two weeks ago.

Dr. F. G. Hughes was taken into custody by the police at Edmonton at one o'clock Tuesday morning. He will be brought back to Toronto as soon as possible.

Dr. Millichamp is at the Homewood Sanitarium at Guelph, but is being guarded by a doctor and two orderlies. He will also be brought back as soon as he is sufficiently recovered, orders having been sent out by the authorities of Toronto to that effect. It is hardly likely, however, that he will be able to leave the sanitarium for some time. Dr. A. T. Hobbs of the Institute states that if Dr. Millichamp were placed under arrest or removed from the sanitarium he could not answer for his life.

It was the Ontario Government that ordered the investigation, and, so far as is known, the conspiracy charge was laid independently by the Attorney-General. The Government officials have kept in touch with the proceedings all along, and when events warranted a criminal charge being laid, they acted.

THE PASSING OF THE OAKS

They Are Connected With Miss Traill's Story on Early Life

Those who have read Miss Traill's delightful story founded on the early days, "The Canadian Crusoe," a tale of the Rice Lake Plains, will be interested in a recent happening. The story is a narrative of the adventures of three young people who lost themselves on the southern shore of Rice Lake and spent an autumn and winter in the forest. It is understood that the story of adventure was founded on the fact that the children wandered north from the settlement at Cold Springs, midway between Rice Lake and Cobourg.

Indeed the "Happy Valley" where they built the shelter and wintered, is pointed out a little east of the main road that winds about the bend of the lake and along the shore to Harwood. In the narrative, Miss Traill tells of the taking away of the young girl, Catherine, by an Indian, and of her being carried in a canoe, up the river, (now the Otonabee). The savage and his captive landed on the shore of the river at the end of Simcoe St., the ground now being covered by the buildings of the Gas Company. The spot is described as being covered with a magnificent forest of oak trees. It was a very beautiful spot before the industry of man deformed it as it now appears. It was the abiding place for a time of the Robinson emigrants in the early days of 1826.

Lately to make way for some improvements in the yard of the Gas Company, the last of the oaks was levelled. It measured over 30 inches through the trunk and for years it towered above the buildings. The body of the tree will make good lumber and the branches, firewood.

The story also describes a fine group of oaks on the summit of the hill (now the rear of the jail yard) and just off Murray Street. Under these trees, the girl having escaped from the Indian, took shelter and looked down on the rapids of the river as it appeared before any of the several dams were constructed. From the point on the river, which the boys call Goose Island, down to below the bridge, was a continuous rapid and a very fine sight in the spring when the flood water was at height. An early map of the adjoining townships shows the old Indian trail or portage from a point on Chemong Lake to the river at the end of Simcoe Street. The communication road to Bridgenorth follows very closely to the line of the trail with the exception that the path deviated at points to skirt the highest hills instead of going straight over. Queerly enough, the river on the map is marked "Seebee" and the lake is lettered "Kashmong." The five islands in the river are shown in place. These were levelled to supply material when the C.P.R. spur line was made.

MASS MEETING APPROVES

was to wait on the council as the Police Commissioners could only recommend. He said Judge Huycke had asked for more policemen and had been refused.

Rev. Jas. Rollins understood that the proper procedure was to make the request to the Police Commissioners. That body then made their recommendation to council and the council could be waited on and asked to provide the money. If the Commissioners did that, they were acting like men, but when they do not give an answer within a reasonable time, they are open to very grave criticism.

Rev. Mr. Mansell said we should go very slowly in our criticisms. He believed in the appointment of a policewoman.

One man in the audience arose and said "I move that a police woman be appointed."

Our Sister's Keeper

Mr. A. B. Cunningham said the danger to young girls came from men who thought themselves too respectable to be arrested. He also said "We call ourselves our brothers' keeper, but we are also our sister's keeper." The Women's Council was one of the greatest acquisitions to the city and the speaker also spoke in high terms of the press.

Mr. H. C. Stabler opined that if the proper person were appointed, it would be a good idea. He did not know that it was wise to put all the blame on the men, the boys and girls as to his mind there were a number of married women in the city who were ruining the young boys. He believed the policemen were doing all they could.

Mr. Downey said a police woman might be appointed for one or two years, and if she should not be satisfactory, the city could dismiss her.

Another speaker suggested that the Commissioners be asked to appoint a matron with police authority, but this did not meet with approval, after Rev. Jas. Rollins had stated some objections. Finally the resolution as drafted by Mr. Webb, was presented to the meeting and adopted.

It was decided that a deputation of seven church representatives should present the petition to the Commissioners.

A Few Facts for All Who Want To Make Money

Wise and rich men advise their friends to buy Lots in the way of a growing city. Plain common sense endorses that advice.

All must acknowledge that Peterborough is growing rapidly south and west.

It is generally known that I own a very desirable block of high land half a mile south and west from C.G.E. Works, overlooking the south-end churches and schools, the C.P.R., G.T.R. and street car line, also all the big factories. I have subdivided this land into blocks of two lots, 50x123 ft. to a lane, 12 feet wide. Each lot containing 3,075 square feet. Those lots would be excellent value at $200 each, but because of my desire to be freed from business I have decided to sell for $175, and accept deposits of $5 on one or two Lots to which I will add a bonus of $5, giving a receipt for $10. No interest nor any further payments required until May, when official plan will be registered. All lots properly staked and balance of streets, Cottsmore, Ford avenue, and Western Avenue graded to the Gravel Road.

RESTRICTIONS:—BRICK, BRICK VANEER, CONCRETE, OR STONE HOUSES ONLY PERMITTED.

Other lots 30x127—3,810 square feet for $150, and $200, on same terms. Free deed and perfect title.

This offer will never be repeated.

COBOURG THREE GOALS BEHIND IN HARD GAME ON SOFT ICE

Visitors Made it a Battle all Along the Way

FINAL SCORE 6-3

In one of the most exciting and thrilling games of hockey witnessed here in some time, the local Intermediates amply made up for last Friday's defeat, when they took Cobourg into camp last night by the score of 6—3. The half time figures were Peterboro—2, Cobourg—1.

The ice was good at the beginning but later grew soft and this, assisted by the London fog-like cloud of smoke, placed the players under a handicap. The fans were out in large numbers and were given lots of excitement for the game was surely a thriller. It was marked by some nifty team work and also a few fistic and catch-as-catch-can encounters, which tended toward keeping the rooters on their toes.

There is one man who plays for the visitors called Duckett, and he deserves credit for his good work. He was easily the pick of the visiting aggregation, and showed himself to be a finished defence man. Freeman was rather handicapped because of the condition of the ice, and did not display his usual speed, although he gave Bradshaw a merry old battle for the honors. Cunningham and the goal minder, Patton, were the remaining shining lights.

It would be impossible to pick one man of the locals and say he played the best game. Everyone worked hard, and it resulted in a win. Janes was there or thereabouts in the nets. Bond played his best game of the season. Denison showed more of his old time form, Giroux back checked the visitors off their feet. Park played his usual classy game at centre, and Bradshaw and Kelly were going strong all the time, on the wings.

The teams:

Peterboro—6.		Cobourg—3
Janes	goal	Payton
Denison	right defence	Payne
Bond	left defence	Duckett
Giroux	rover	Lavis
Park	centre	Crowther
Bradshaw	right wing	Cunningham

The Play

The hard ice and the determination of both teams to win at all cost, caused the opening few moments to be exceeding fast. The forward line of both teams were going good and some nifty stick handling was exhibited. Both goal custodians were kept on their toes and they handled several shots without a miscue. Duckett broke away but was stopped at mid-ice, Bradshaw taking the puck. "Brad" combined with Park and after a beautiful rush, Maurice scored from close in. Time 5 minutes, 30 seconds. Peterboro—1, Cobourg—0.

The pace still continued to be fast with the defence men handing out a few clean poke checks. Bond got away but was tripped rather accidentally, by Duckett, who was caged. Patton was given a royal reception for a few seconds, Kelly boring three or four from the side but without results. Peterboro kept the puck in Cobourg territory till Duckett returned and then Janes was made the victim of some hard shots off Cunningham's stick. Payne started down the boards but was blocked by Denison, the former lost his head for an instant and attempted to carve a little off Denison's hip. "Dennie" took a pass at him but missed and the referee intervened, sending Payne to the box and warned the local man.

Lavis Tied the Score

Lavis broke away at mid-ice and after a pretty rush, scored from the side. Time 10 minutes. Peterboro—1, Cobourg—1.

The pace of the first few minutes was beginning to tell and combinations were not evident. Payne returned, but made no material difference, as the Petes kept pressing. With most of the players bunched around the Cobourg goal, Giroux shot from the side. Just how the puck escaped so many is a mystery, but it did, and lodged in the upper corner of the net. Time 2 minutes. Peterboro—2, Cobourg—1.

The ice grew heavy and several chances were lost by over-skating the puck. Duckett's visage came in contact with Kelly's skate, with the result that the big defence man received a nasty gash on the lip. Play was suspended a few minutes till he was fixed up. Freeman made a nifty rush and passed to centre, Crowder slammed the disc, but it struck the net post and a goal was saved. Bond drew a penalty for tripping and a few seconds later the half time gong rang.

Half Time

Percy Bond returned after a few moments of play but Captain Giroux took his place for body-checking. Duckett was beginning to hand out a little rough stuff, throwing several Petes against the boards with true Spartan severity. The most peculiar part of it was that he was getting away with it, yet when any of the visitors were bumped, the locals were ushered to the mourner's bench. Denison took the puck from behind the Peterboro goal and after one of those long circling rushes of his, he passed to Park, who scooped it in. Time 5 minutes. Peterboro—3, Cobourg—1.

Denison's knee was injured but after a few minutes' rest, play was resumed. Giroux came on again and for a while the game was fast and exciting. Bond took a liking to the soft ice and for a few minutes electrified the fans with some fast rushes. Denison and Park broke away and after a bit of nice combination, the latter scored. Time 4 minutes. Peterboro—4, Cobourg—1.

Giroux and Bond collided and Percy's lip was cut but he never let up. The local captain drew a session in the jug for getting Freeman and a few seconds afterwards Duckett was sent in with him, for body-checking Park. While these men were in the box, Janes was called upon to save a few, which he did. Both Giroux and Duckett returned before any scoring was done. Park got right in on Patton, but the Cobourg boy came out and blocked, saving a sure goal. The puck was carried to Peterboro's territory and for an instant appeared as if the visitors would score, but "Skid" was on the job, and couldn't be beaten. Bradshaw cut his hand and retired for repairs, play being suspended. Just after he returned Lavis scored from close in. Time 12 minutes. Peterboro—4, Cobourg—2.

Kelly and Bradshaw took the puck after the face-off and after a nice combined rush "Brad" lifted the disc in. Time 35 seconds. Peterboro—5, Cobourg—2.

Giroux and Duckett were handing each other a few rather stiff bodychecks and a few hyenas in the stands cried for Duckett's blood like the ancients in the Roman amphitheatre. This encouraged the fair haired defence man to keep up a few rough tactics but he picked the wrong man, when he hit Giroux. Shortly after the last goal Duckett put a half nelson on the husky little captain, and for a while both mawled each other. Instead of ringing the bell, Whitehead jumped between them, and he sure had his hands full. It was with considerable difficulty that the men were separated. In the meantime the puck hovered around the Peterboro net and although the puck was in the corner of the goal, the umpire raised the flag of truce. No one saw any goal scored, although the goal umpire claimed that Freeman had put it in and it bounded out again. The goal umpire was then the main attraction and after much wrangling the goal was allowed and another umpire sent out. It was clearly a result of a "Merkle" pulled by Whitehead, when he didn't ring his bell when Giroux and Duckett came together. Time 2 minutes. Peterboro—5, Cobourg—3.

Excitement reigned supreme. The pace once more grew fast but the puck went up and down with no results. At last Kelly, Park, Bradshaw and Denison broke away, and after one of the nicest rushes of the game, Denison scored. Time 5 minutes. Peterboro—6, Cobourg—3.

Duckett and Giroux had trouble, and they were banished for the rest of the game, which was only a few seconds.

The summary:

—First Half—
1—Peterboro	Park	5½ min.
2—Cobourg	Lavis	10 min.
3—Peterboro	Giroux	2 min.
—Second Half—
4—Peterboro	Kelly	5 min.
5—Peterboro	Park	4 min.
6—Cobourg	Lavis	12 min.
7—Peterboro	Bradshaw	35 secs.

Canadian Press Despatch

BRANTFORD, Jan. 28.—The gold watch offered by Secord and Son for the most useful player on last year's Brantford ball team, has been awarded to "Chubby" Coose.

LOCAL PLAYER IS REPORTED TO THE O.H.A.

Cyril Giroux has been reported to the O.H.A. by Lawson Whitehead, who had charge of the game last night, and it is not at all improbable that he will be suspended.

Whitehead, it is understood, made several charges against the local player.

JERRY COUGHLIN MAY GO TO COAST

Ingersoll, Jan. 28.—The departure for Toronto last evening of "Jerry" Coughlin, the speedy rover of the Ingersoll intermediate team, may mean that he will join the ranks of the "pros." Coughlin was with Peterborough last year.

He has been urged to cast his lot with the Vancouver team of the Pacific Coast League, and, it is understood, has received a very tempting offer. He will discuss the matter with the Patrick's representative at Toronto, and should he accept the offer will probably leave at once for the coast city.

Trolleys in Holy City.

JERUSALEM, Palestine, Jan. 28.—A concession for the construction of a street car line running from Jerusalem to Bethlehem and also for the lighting of Jerusalem by electricity was granted yesterday by the Turkish Government to the Franchise Bank.

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti, Jan. 28.—The President of Haiti, Michel Oreste, fled from the capital yesterday and took refuge aboard the German cruiser Vinita. He was accompanied by his wife.

Resignations Sequel to Zabern Row.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—Count Charles von Wedel, governor-general of Alsace-Lorrain, and Baron Zorn von Buelach, Secretary of State, are about to resign, according to The Cologne Gazette's well informed Berlin despatch. The resignation of these two officials, if carried into effect, will be the result of the recent difficulties arising between the civil and military authorities at Zabern.

Pole Dead From Bullet Wound.

OTTAWA, Jan. 28.—Geo. Brown, a Pole, until recently employed in Ottawa, died at Pembroke Monday night while being removed from a train to the local hospital as the result of a bullet wound in the abdomen, inflicted in a fight at Whitney, Ont., on Sunday night. John Worenki, of Whitney, a fellow-countryman, is under arrest there charged with the shooting.
